Trial Chamber V (the ‘Chamber’) of the International Criminal Court (the ‘Court’) hereby renders its judgment pursuant to Articles 74-78 of the Rome Statute and Rules 145-147 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the ‘Rules’) in the case of The Prosecutor v. Alfred Yekatom and Patrice-Edouard Ngaïssona.¹

I. OVERVIEW

A. The accused

1. Alfred Rombhot Yekatom (hereinafter: ‘Mr Yekatom’), a national of the Central African Republic (the ‘CAR’), was born on 23 February 1975 in Bangui, the CAR.²
2. Patrice-Edouard Ngaïssona (hereinafter: ‘Mr Ngaïssona’) is a national of the CAR and was born on 30 June 1967 in Bégoua, the CAR.³
3. Given that the roles of the two accused at the period relevant to the charges are contested, the Chamber will discuss them below as relevant facts of the case.⁴

B. Brief procedural history

4. On 30 May 2014, the CAR authorities referred the situation in the CAR since 1 August 2012 to the Office of the Prosecutor (the ‘Prosecution’).⁵

Mbaïki Axis (including Sekia, Ndongala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo, Pissa, Mbaïki) (Count 27);

(iii) displacement, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the Statute, for:

a. the dislocation of nearly all Muslim persons residing in Cattin and Boeing to PK5, a predominantly Muslim neighbourhood in Bangui, other parts of the CAR or neighbouring countries, starting from 5 December 2013 in the context of the attack on Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, on 5 December 2013 (Count 5);

b. the dislocation of the majority of the Muslim population from their towns and villages between on or about 10 January 2014 and on or about 6 February 2014, in the context of the Anti-Balaka's advance through and takeover of villages along the PK9-Mbaïki Axis (including Sekia, Ndongala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo, Pissa, Mbaïki) (Count 25);

(iv) directing an attack against a building dedicated to religion, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(iv) of the Statute, for the destruction of the Boeing mosque by 20 December 2013 at the latest (Count 6);

(v) cruel treatment, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(c)(i) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013, where six of them were subjected to severe physical and mental injury, including by threatening them with death or otherwise, forcing them to undress, and/or beating them (Count 13);

(vi) torture, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(c)(i) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013, where Lapo N'Gomat was subjected to severe physical and mental injury, including by threatening him with death, tying him up, beating him, cutting of his ear, and stabbing him (Count 13);

(vii) conscription, enlistment and use of children under the age of fifteen years to participate actively in hostilities, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(vii) of the Statute, for the conscription and/or enlistment of children into his group at various locations, including Boeing, Sekia and Pissa along the PK9-Mbaïki axis and in Batalimo along the Pissa-Mongoumba axis, and the assignment of a variety of tasks to them, such as, inter alia, participating in hostilities, including the 5 December 2013 Attack, between at least December 2013 and August 2014 (Count 29);

all committed in the context of and associated with an armed conflict not of an international character ongoing in the territory of the CAR from September 2013 until at least December 2014 between the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka, including Yekatom's group.

Yekatom is also criminally responsible for the crimes against humanity of:

(i) murder, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(a) of the Statute, for:

a. the killing of between five and 13 persons, including Hassan Mahamat, at the Boeing market, four Muslim persons in Cattin, and Nina Pascal at the Boeing market, in the context of the attack on Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, on 5 December 2013 (Count 2);

b. the killing of Lapo N'Gomat at the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013 (Count 15);

c. the killing of Deputy Mayor Saleh on or about 28 February 2014 in Mbaïki, in the context of the Anti-Balaka's advance through and takeover of villages along the PK9-

Mbaïki Axis (including Sekia, Ndangala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo, Pissa, Mbaïki) (Count 26);

(ii) forcible transfer and deportation, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(d) of the Statute, for:

a. the dislocation of nearly all Muslim persons residing in Cattin and Boeing to PK5, a predominantly Muslim neighbourhood in Bangui, other parts of the CAR or neighbouring countries, starting from 5 December 2013 in the context of the attack on Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, on 5 December 2013 (Count 4);

b. the dislocation of the majority of the Muslim population from their towns and villages between on or about 10 January 2014 and on or about 6 February 2014, in the context of the Anti-Balaka's advance through and takeover of villages along the PK9-Mbaïki Axis (including Sekia, Ndangala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo, Pissa, Mbaïki) (Count 24);

(iii) other inhumane acts, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(k) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013, where six of them were subjected to severe physical and mental injury, including by threatening them with death or otherwise, forcing them to undress, and/or beating them (Count 11);

(iv) torture, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(f) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013, where Lapo N'Gomat was subjected to severe physical and mental injury, including by threatening him with death, tying him up, beating him, cutting of his ear, and stabbing him (Count 12);

(v) imprisonment and other forms of severe deprivation of physical liberty, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(e) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013 and the transfer of six of them to other locations until their release on or about 27 December 2013 (Count 14);

(vi) persecution, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(h) of the Statute, for the severe deprivation of the fundamental rights of persons in Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, the Yamwara School Base, and the villages along the PK9-Mbaïki Axis, by targeting them on the basis of political, ethnic and/or religious grounds by virtue of the conduct pertaining to counts 1-7, 11-16, 24-27 (Counts 8, 17, 28);

all committed as part of a widespread attack conducted by the Anti-Balaka, including Yekatom's group, between September 2013 and December 2014, against the Muslim civilian population and those perceived as collectively responsible for, complicit with, or supportive of the Seleka, pursuant to or in furtherance of a criminal policy to primarily target the Muslim population in Bangui and in western CAR Prefectures in retribution for Seleka exactions.

Yekatom's contribution to the charged crimes consisted in:

- (i) structuring, training and equipping his Anti-Balaka elements;
- (ii) preparing the Anti-Balaka attacks and advances, and participating and leading his group in the execution of these attacks and advances;
- (iii) issuing orders to Anti-Balaka members, including patently illegal instructions; and

(iv) conscripting and/or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into his group and using them to assist him in the camp-bases, giving orders for them to be stationed at barriers and checkpoints as well as to actively participate in hostilities.

Accordingly, Yekatom is criminally responsible under the following modes of liability:

- (i) committing the aforementioned crimes jointly with another or through another under article 25(3)(a) of the Statute; or
- (ii) ordering the commission of the aforementioned crimes under article 25(3)(b) of the Statute.

Patrice-Edouard Ngaïssona, a national of the CAR, born on 30 June 1967 in Bégoua, the CAR, is criminally responsible for the war crimes of:

(i) directing attacks against the civilian population, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(i) of the Statute, at the following locations and times:

- a. in Bangui, including Cattin and the Boeing market, starting on 5 December 2013, on the basis of the conduct pertaining to Counts 2 to 6 and 8 (Count 1);
- b. in Bossangoa, on 5 December 2013, approximately from 13:00 to between 17:00 and 18:30, on the basis of the conduct pertaining to Counts 31-33, 35, 37 and 39-42 (Count 30);

(ii) murder, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(c)(i) of the Statute, for:

- a. the killing of between five and 13 persons, including Hassan Mahamat, at the Boeing market, four Muslim persons in Cattin, and Nina Pascal at the Boeing market, in the context of the attack on Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, on 5 December 2013 (Count 3);
- b. the killing of 28 persons, including Khadidja Adjaro; Adaye Abakar; Atahir Abou; Atahir Djime (or Djimet); Halima Hisseini; Amadou (or Hamadou) Bouba; Salamatou Madji; Ismael Madji; Abakar Moussa; Koursi Abdelrahim; Koursi Mahamat; Abdallah Mahamat; Mariam Yamwha; Amadou Oumarou; Ila Adj; Sali Adj; Hamid Ali; Ahamat Zakaria; Mahamat Adam; Abdasamat Mounin; Ibrahim Hassan; Sale Adim; Adef Mahamat; Atahir Mahamat; a person known by his nickname, 'C-17', probably named Abakar Moussa and taxi-driver by profession; a certain Abdelkadir, a certain Abdaye and a certain Abakar, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 (Count 32);
- c. the killing of Lapo N'Gomat at the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013 (Count 16);
- d. the killing of Deputy Mayor Saleh on or about 28 February 2014 in Mbaïki, in the context of the Anti-Balaka's advance through and takeover of villages along the PK9-Mbaïki Axis (including Sekia, Ndangala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo, Pissa, Mbaïki) (Count 27);

(iii) displacement, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the Statute, for:

- a. the dislocation of nearly all Muslim persons residing in Cattin and Boeing to PK5, a predominantly Muslim neighbourhood in Bangui, other parts of the CAR or neighbouring countries, starting from 5 December 2013 in the context of the attack on Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, on 5 December 2013 (Count 5);

b. the dislocation of Bossangoa's Muslim population to the École de la Liberté, before being evacuated to other locations, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 and in the days following the attack (Count 38);

c. the dislocation of the majority of the Muslim population from their towns and villages between on or about 10 January 2014 and on or about 6 February 2014, in the context of the Anti-Balaka's advance through and takeover of villages along the PK9-Mbaïki Axis (including Sekia, Ndangala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo, Pissa, Mbaïki) (Count 25);

(iv) directing attacks against buildings dedicated to religion, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(iv) of the Statute, for:

a. the destruction of the Boeing mosque by 20 December 2013 at the latest (Count 6);

(v) cruel treatment, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(c)(i) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013, where six of them were subjected to severe physical and mental injury, including by threatening them with death or otherwise, forcing them to undress, and/or beating them (Count 13);

(vi) torture, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(c)(i) of the Statute, for the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013, where Lapo N'Gomat was subjected to severe physical and mental injury, including by threatening him with death, tying him up, beating him, cutting of his ear, and stabbing him (Count 13);

(vii) destruction of the adversary's property, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(xii) of the Statute, for the destruction of Muslim houses, especially in the predominantly Muslim neighbourhoods of Boro, Arabe and Fulbe, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 and in the days after the attack (Count 33);

(viii) pillaging, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(v) of the Statute, for the pillaging and looting of the houses of Muslims, particularly in the Boro, Arabe and Fulbe neighbourhoods, sometimes writing the words 'Anti-Balaka' on the rubble, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 (Count 34);

(ix) rape, pursuant to and prohibited by article 8(2)(e)(vi) of the Statute, for the rape of a 19-year-old woman, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 (Count 41);

all committed in the context of and associated with an armed conflict not of an international character ongoing in the territory of the CAR from September 2013 until at least December 2014 between the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka, including Yekatom's group.

Ngaïssona is also criminally responsible for the crimes against humanity of:

(i) murder, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(a) of the Statute, for:

a. the killing of between five and 13 persons, including Hassan Mahamat, at the Boeing market, four Muslim persons in Cattin, and Nina Pascal at the Boeing market, in the context of the attack on Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, on 5 December 2013 (Count 2);

b. the killing of 28 persons, including Khadidja Adjaro; Adaye Abakar; Atahir Abou; Atahir Djime (or Djimet); Halima Hisseini; Amadou (or Hamadou) Bouba; Salamatou

(v) imprisonment and other forms of severe deprivation of physical liberty, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(e) of the Statute, for:

a. the abduction of seven persons, including three Muslim women, in or around Cattin and their transfer to the Yamwara School Base on or about 24 December 2013 and the transfer of six of them to other locations until their release on or about 27 December 2013 (Count 14);

b. maintaining the Muslims at École de la Liberté by preventing them from leaving, including by shouting threats towards the families inside the compound, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 and the weeks following the attack (Count 39);

(vi) rape, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(g) of the Statute, for the rape of a 19-year-old woman, in the context of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 (Count 40);

(vii) persecution, pursuant to and prohibited by article 7(1)(h) of the Statute for the severe deprivation of fundamental rights of persons in Bangui, including Cattin and Boeing, Bossangoa, the Yamwara School Base, and the villages along the PK9-Mbaïki Axis of their fundamental rights by targeting them on the basis of political, ethnic and/or religious grounds by virtue of the conduct pertaining to Counts 1-7, 11-16, 24-27, 30-41 (Counts 8, 17, 28, 42);

all committed as part of a widespread attack carried out by the Anti-Balaka, including Yekatom's group, between September 2013 and December 2014, against the Muslim civilian population and those perceived as collectively responsible for, complicit with, or supportive of the Seleka, pursuant to or in furtherance of a criminal policy to primarily target the Muslim population in Bangui and in western CAR Prefectures in retribution for Seleka exactions.

Ngaïssona's contribution to the charged crimes consisted in:

- (i) taking steps to structure the Anti-Balaka;
- (ii) financing the Anti-Balaka, including for the purchase of weapons;
- (iii) issuing instructions to Anti-Balaka members, including with regard to the 5 December 2013 Attack and attacks preceding it; and
- (iv) liaising with Anti-Balaka members exercising key functions, including Bernard Mokom and Maxime Mokom.

Accordingly, Ngaïssona is criminally responsible under the following modes of liability:

- (i) facilitating the commission of the crimes as set out in the confirmed charges by aiding, abetting or otherwise assisting in their commission under article 25(3)(c) of the Statute; or
- (ii) contributing in any other way to the commission of those crimes by a group of persons acting with a common purpose under article 25(3)(d)(i) or (ii) of the Statute.

II. FINDINGS OF FACT

24. In this section, the Chamber sets out the material facts and circumstances of this case as they have been established to the requisite threshold upon its assessment of the evidence submitted and discussed before it at trial. They are the facts and circumstances which form the basis for the Chamber's decision under Article 74 of the Statute. The reasoning for the Chamber's determination in this regard is provided below, in Section IV ('Factual findings and evidentiary analysis'). In that section, the Chamber discusses, also in light of the arguments made at trial, the evidence which, directly or by way of inference (thus, through additional facts of a subsidiary nature), supports each of these findings on the facts and circumstances described in the charges.

25. The legal characterisation of these facts and circumstances, in light of the charges brought against the accused, is made in Section V.B ('Legal characterisation of facts').
26. The Chamber clarifies that, pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Statute, it has ensured that its findings of fact do not exceed the facts and circumstances described in the charges as confirmed by the Pre-Trial Chamber.

A. The conflict in the Central African Republic between 2012 and 2014

1. The formation of the Seleka, its advance to and takeover of Bangui, and ensuing violence
27. Around August 2012, a coalition of armed groups opposing then-President François Bozizé emerged in the Central African Republic (CAR) under the name of the 'Seleka', led by CAR citizens and including elements from Chad and Sudan. Michel Djotodia became the leader of the Seleka.
28. Starting in late 2012, the Seleka advanced towards Bangui. The Libreville agreement, concluded in January 2013, presented an attempt to end the crisis, leading to a government including representatives of various factions, with François Bozizé remaining president and Nicolas Tiangaye as prime minister, Michel Djotodia as deputy prime minister and minister of defence, and Mr Ngaïssona as minister of youth, sports, arts and culture.
29. At the same time, the widely reported advance of the Seleka, and violent acts and abuses committed in this context, including against civilians, sparked reactions within the civilian and political sphere: 'Coalition citoyenne d'opposition aux rébellions armées' (COCORA) and 'Comité d'organisation des actions citoyennes' (COAC) were two organisations which were active in mobilising support for François Bozizé in light of the Seleka advance. They erected checkpoints or roadblocks at which passers-by and vehicles were checked, with the objective of identifying Seleka infiltrators and people deemed to be associated with or in support of them, including Muslims. The individuals manning these checkpoints were armed with bladed weapons and, in some cases, with AK-47s.

30. On 24 March 2013, the Seleka took control of Bangui. Michel Djotodia proclaimed himself President of the CAR.
31. After the Seleka took control of Bangui on 24 March 2013, they committed violence and abuses in various localities across the CAR, in particular against individuals considered to be associated with François Bozizé, his Gbaya ethnic group, his government's security forces, and non-Muslims. Mr Ngaïssona's properties in Bangui were looted. However, the Muslim civilian population was not entirely spared from this violence.
32. The Seleka included fighters in particular from Chad and Sudan. It was led by Central African Muslims. Due to the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka and in light of its perceived composition, tensions in particular between Muslim and non-Muslim communities increased.
33. The number of Seleka elements varied greatly in the course of 2013. While counting several thousand elements at the time of the take-over in March 2013, their numbers grew significantly until the end of that year.

2. Individuals and their activities in Cameroon and the Democratic Republic of the Congo

34. Following the Seleka taking over Bangui and control in the CAR, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and others fled to Cameroon. Maxime Mokom, Mr Yekatom and others fled to Zongo, Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). Through meetings in Cameroon and communications with individuals in Zongo, in particular Maxime Mokom, who in turn liaised with persons and groups in Bangui and in the provinces, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and others planned steps to respond to the Seleka violence in the CAR as well as to ensure François Bozizé's return to power, by all means possible, including through armed violence.
35. During his time outside of the CAR in 2013, Mr Ngaïssona was actively involved in planning steps to respond to the Seleka violence in the CAR and to ensure François Bozizé's return to power by meeting and liaising with François Bozizé, Bernard Mokom and others to discuss strategies and plans, reaching out to individuals within and outside of the CAR with a view to gathering support for their cause, and providing financial assistance to those willing to assist in their activities. In this context, Mr Ngaïssona travelled to the border between Cameroon and the CAR with a view to liaising with groups meant to assist their efforts. Mr Ngaïssona continued providing financial assistance also after the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013.

36. At the same time, Mr Yekatom briefly went to Zongo in 2013 and then started forming a group, over which he assumed control, with Freddy Ouandjio, also known as Cœur de Lion, and Habib Beina, with a view to planning a response to the Seleka violence and removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power.
37. Maxime Mokom liaised with individuals and groups in Cameroon, Zongo and within the CAR, including his father Bernard Mokom, Mr Yekatom, and groups forming in the provinces, with a view to coordinating the activities and eventual advance onto Bangui.
38. Mr Ngaïssona provided financial contributions and engaged in activities pertaining to the organisation and coordination of groups for the purpose of facilitating the commission of criminal acts targeting the Muslim population, including the crimes found below.

3. Front pour le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique (FROCCA)

39. As part of the efforts to counter the Seleka offensive and to ensure François Bozizé's return to power, in August 2013, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others met in Paris to create the 'Front pour le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique' (FROCCA). Lin Banoukepa was the executive director of FROCCA, while Mr Ngaïssona was one of its members. The group's objective was to advocate for the return to 'the constitutional order', which signified the return of François Bozizé to power. As such, FROCCA was one of the initiatives to achieve this stated goal on a political level, which co-existed with other efforts in this regard, specifically the galvanisation of groups eventually known collectively as the Anti-Balaka.

4. Formation of groups in different localities and emergence of the Anti-Balaka

40. Against the backdrop of the violence committed by the Seleka, and in parallel to the activities in Cameroon and Zongo, self-defence groups in various localities across the CAR formed or re-activated from previous existence very quickly following the take-over of power by the Seleka. Individuals within those groups also obtained amulets or gris-gris. Some of these individuals and local groups converged onto and joined together in Gobere, north-east of Bossangoa.
41. In Gobere, civilians and former members of the Central African armed forces (FACA) and Presidential Guard gathered, and (i) organised into various sub-groups with a leader each; (ii) set up or maintained contacts with groups and individuals in other locations, including Maxime Mokom in Zongo, who was considered to be a coordinator of operations; (iii) organised trainings in weapon handling and combat by FACA members; and (iv) made further plans with a view to descending onto Bangui and removing the Seleka and Michel Djotodia from power.
42. At the same time, former members of the FACA and Presidential Guard also in other localities created new or joined pre-existing self-defence groups, organising themselves into military-like structures and assuming or sharing command over them.
43. Initially having formed separately, these groups started out with a common enemy and increasingly coordinated their activities, thereby essentially forming one movement. This movement came to be known as 'Anti-Balaka'.
44. The armed groups forming at the time were armed mainly with makeshift and bladed weapons, hunting rifles, service weapons retained by members of the FACA, and weapons they seized from the members of the Seleka after engaging them in hostilities.

5. Objectives and policies of the Anti-Balaka

45. The self-defence groups initially forming in the provinces aimed at defending against the abuses and violence committed by the Seleka, within which framework some considered necessary to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power. Due to the religious and ethnic commonalities between the Muslims in the CAR and the Seleka, the Anti-Balaka perceived the former as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka. On this basis, as the Anti-Balaka emerged and coalesced in pursuit of its core objective, its elements targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, killing and dislocating them.

46. The implementation and execution of the Anti-Balaka's core objective was primed by anti-foreign sentiments and inflammatory rhetoric openly expressed by François Bozizé and others, which incited vigilance against those perceived to support the Seleka, in particular Muslim civilians.
47. Such rhetoric was reflected in meetings of François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others in Cameroon and repeated in a radio statement issued by FROCCA on 5 December 2013 in relation to the attack on Bangui, which referred to the attack as '[l]e rétablissement de l'ordre fonctionnel' and further stated that the Anti-Balaka 'sont des Centrafricains pour aller libérer leur pays des jougs des djihadistes venus du D[arfour], du T[chad], du S[oudan]'.
48. Mr Yekatom knew that the Anti-Balaka perceived, and himself perceived, the Muslims in the CAR as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka and that the Anti-Balaka targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, on this basis.
49. Mr Ngaïssona knew that the Anti-Balaka perceived, and himself perceived, the Muslims in the CAR as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka and that the Anti-Balaka targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, on this basis. Mr Ngaïssona made his contributions fully aware that the Anti-Balaka would violently target the Muslim civilian population in the west of the CAR, committing the widespread attack that ultimately took place from September 2013 through February 2014, including the seminal coordinated Anti-Balaka attacks of Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.

6. Hostilities during the advance towards Bangui

50. The Anti-Balaka groups, which had formed in the provinces and in part gathered together at Gobere, started their advance towards Bangui, with the ultimate objective to attack the capital in order to remove Michel Djotodia from power and oust the Seleka from the CAR. In this advance, various Anti-Balaka groups started engaging in attacks against the Seleka from September 2013 onwards. Such attacks were not limited to Seleka forces, but included attacking localities with Muslim civilians.
51. These groups going into different localities communicated with each other and individuals abroad, including Maxime Mokom, with a view to coordinating such attacks.
52. Attacks were launched around Bossangoa and in Bouca (Ouham prefecture), in Ndjo, Bossembélé, Boali and Gaga (Ombella-M'Poko prefecture), as well as in Bouar (Nana-Mambéré prefecture). As part of these attacks, Anti-Balaka elements attacked Bossangoa on 17 September 2013.
53. Throughout the advance and during these attacks, Anti-Balaka groups targeted Muslim civilians. This information was widely known across the CAR and abroad, including in Cameroon.
54. The advance of the Anti-Balaka groups and hostilities on the way culminated in coordinated attacks in Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.
55. From his involvement in coordinating his own group's advance through the provinces towards Bangui for purposes of the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, Mr Yekatom knew of the advance of the Anti-Balaka groups through the provinces towards Bangui, including the hostilities, as well as killings and dislocation of Muslim civilians, taking place in this context.
56. Mr Ngaïssona knew and was informed of the advance of the groups towards Bangui as well as of the hostilities during this advance, including the killings and dislocation of Muslim civilians from the locations mentioned above.

7. Anti-Balaka in the aftermath of the attacks on 5 December 2013

57. Between the coordinated attacks on Bangui and Bossangoa of 5 December 2013 and his return to Bangui on 14 January 2014, Mr Ngaïssona remained informed of the continued activities related to the Anti-Balaka, and continued liaising with various individuals in this regard.
58. On 10 January 2014, Michel Djotodia resigned, leading to the end of his government, following which the Seleka forces started to withdraw from Bangui, in particular towards the north and north-east of the CAR.
59. On 20 January 2014, Catherine Samba-Panza was elected as new transitional head of state of the CAR. André Nzapayéké was chosen as prime minister, Léopold Narcisse Bara was appointed minister for youth, sports, arts and culture, and Jean-Jacques Demafouth, Charles Ngremangou and Joachim Kokaté also received position within this new government.
60. Immediately following his return to Bangui on 14 January 2014, Mr Ngaïssona was installed as general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.
61. As such, Mr Ngaïssona represented the entirety of the Anti-Balaka towards the CAR transition government and international authorities.
62. With a view to engaging with the transition government and international authorities, the Anti-Balaka structure started being further formalised with the return of Mr Ngaïssona and his appointment as general coordinator. Other individuals within this formalised structure included Maxime Mokom as operations coordinator and zone commanders, or 'ComZones' as group leaders. Mr Ngaïssona continued to provide financial assistance to the Anti-Balaka and actively engaged in formalising the structure of the Anti-Balaka.
63. Throughout the period relevant to the charges, Mr Yekatom retained and exercised control over an active group of elements which was seen as and understood to be part of the Anti-Balaka. Mr Yekatom was the uncontested leader of this group which first set up at Yamwara in Boeing after 5 December 2013, and moved down the PK9-Mbaïki axis following Michel Djotodia's resignation.

64. The structure of the Anti-Balaka evolved during the period relevant to the charges, and was subject to various leadership tussles. However, it always remained represented towards the national and international authorities as one entity through Mr Ngaïssona.
65. Anti-Balaka groups set up bases in different neighbourhoods across Bangui. Meetings were held at variable intervals at Mr Ngaïssona's concessions or at the Azimut hotel. In February 2014, the Anti-Balaka itself estimated counting about 50,000 elements in Bangui and the provinces. The Anti-Balaka coordination also issued identity cards or badges to some of the Anti-Balaka elements.

8. The continuation of hostilities

66. Notwithstanding the retreat of the Seleka following the resignation of Michel Djotodia and the setting up of a new transition government in January 2014, the main hostilities between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka which had started in earnest in September 2013 continued largely unabated until the end of February 2014. Hostilities thereafter did continue, but subsided considerably.
67. The UN Security Council recurrently dedicated attention to the security situation in the CAR in 2013 and 2014. Several attempts to bring about the cessation of hostilities failed, including the 16 June 2014 PARETO mediation agreement, the 23 July 2014 peace agreement signed by the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka in Brazzaville, Republic of the Congo, and the agreement signed in Nairobi in April 2015. The number of internally displaced persons and refugees outside of the CAR decreased in the course of 2014, but overall remained in the hundreds of thousands throughout the year.
68. As part of the Anti-Balaka's pursuit of its core objective, in the context of which its elements targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, due to the Anti-Balaka perceiving the Muslims in the CAR as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka, the Anti-Balaka continued to target the Muslim civilian population in 2014 across the western CAR prefectures, including in the second half of January and early February 2014 in Ombella-M'Poko (Gaga, Zawa, Yaloké), Ouham-Pendé (Bossemptélé), Nana-Mambéré (Baoro), Mambéré-Kadéï (Guen, Carnot, Berbérati) and Lobaye (Boda). The attacks followed a pattern with Anti-Balaka groups killing and injuring Muslim civilians, looting and destroying their belongings, and often placing them in enclaved positions under difficult circumstances, eventually leading to many Muslims having to leave the respective areas.

B. The attack on Bangui, including Boeing and Cattin, on 5 December 2013

1. Coordination of the attack

69. In the early morning hours of 5 December 2013, the Anti-Balaka mounted a coordinated attack on Bangui, including in Boeing and Cattin. The plan to mount an attack on Bangui existed at least as of 30 November 2013. Anti-Balaka elements and groups travelled from the provinces to arrive close to Bangui before 5 December 2013.
70. During their move from the provinces to Bangui, Anti-Balaka chiefs communicated across their groups, kept and maintained records or lists of elements, armed themselves, and waited at common locations and prepared for an attack on Bangui. Mr Ngaïssona provided funds to Anti-Balaka elements that participated in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. By the beginning of December 2013, several thousand Anti-Balaka elements had arrived at the outskirts of Bangui to participate in an attack. News about an impending attack on Bangui circulated in various circles within the Anti-Balaka leadership. Mr Ngaïssona knew that an attack would take place on Bangui.
71. The Anti-Balaka participating in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 shared the same goal, which was to target Seleka positions in Bangui with a view to ‘getting rid of Djotodia’ and ‘chasing out the Seleka’, which included systematic targeting of Muslim civilians. Various Anti-Balaka groups that participated in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 had common leaders, who coordinated their actions and instructed them. Anti-Balaka groups that reassembled close to Bangui prior to the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 were each assigned a specific target within Bangui and instructed to begin the attack on the respective targets at 05:00 on 5 December 2013. The attack was carried out as planned, resulting in clashes between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka in several locations in Bangui, including Boeing, with the Anti-Balaka beginning to retreat around 10:00 the same day.

Later that day, FROCCA issued a radio statement in relation to the attack on Bangui, referring to it as ‘[l]e rétablissement de l’ordre fonctionnel’ and stating that the Anti-Balaka ‘sont des Centrafricains pour aller libérer leur pays des jougs des djihadistes venus du D[arfour], du T[chad], du S[oudan]’.

72. The attacks on Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013 were coordinated with each other.

2. Involvement of Mr Yekatom

73. Mr Yekatom’s group coordinated with other Anti-Balaka groups to participate in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. In the months leading up to this attack, Mr Yekatom and his group armed and trained in the bush. The movement of Mr Yekatom’s group in the bush, when superimposed onto those from other groups who proceeded towards Bangui along the same time frame, shows that this coordination had begun well before November 2013.
74. In the afternoon of 4 December 2013, Mr Yekatom chose some of his elements and instructed them to move towards Bangui. The same day, the group arrived in Projet, situated near the M’Poko airport in Bangui. Mr Yekatom’s instructions to his elements concerning the attack on 5 December 2013 were to fight the Seleka and included targeting sectors where ‘Muslims’ were to be found. Mr Yekatom’s instructions were understood by the elements to accept that Muslim civilians would be killed as a result of the fighting based on his elements not having been trained or instructed to apply the principle of distinction during combat and bearing strong anti-Muslim sentiment and feelings of vengeance against the Seleka.

3. Attack on Boeing

75. On the night of 4 December 2013, Mr Yekatom and some of his elements visited the market in Boeing to assess its precise geographical location and conduct reconnaissance. The same night, Mr Yekatom instructed his elements to target Seleka positions along the Boeing-Cattin-PK5 direction. These instructions encompassed attacking the Muslim traders at the market in Boeing before moving along the route to PK5.

76. In the early morning of 5 December 2013, Mr Yekatom launched the attack on Boeing by firing an automatic pistol in the air when his group reached the market in Boeing. The armed elements in the front continued and advanced together and fired at the Muslim traders who were present there. During this time, Mr Yekatom's elements shot in all directions. Those that were inside the shops fled. Mr Yekatom's group attacked the market in Boeing during their advance towards PK5 following Mr Yekatom's orders.
77. Elements in Mr Yekatom's group killed Hassan Mahamat in the morning of 5 December 2013 during the attack on the market in Boeing. Hassan personally interacted with certain Seleka officials prior to 5 December 2013 in his role as delegate of the male Muslim traders at the market in Boeing. Hassan had at least one weapon in his shop with which he fired in self-defence during the attack of 5 December 2013 carried out by Mr Yekatom's elements. Further, Mr Yekatom's elements killed two unnamed Muslim traders at the market in Boeing during this attack. Traders at the market in Boeing and the Seleka personally interacted with each other at the market and were seen by others as associating with each other. There is no indication that any of the two unnamed Muslim traders were armed during the attack or otherwise engaged in combat at that time.
78. On 5 December 2013, and following Mr Yekatom's instructions, Mr Yekatom's elements attacked the mosque in Boeing, which was the main mosque serving the communities of both Boeing and Cattin, by firing a 'rocket' at it. Mr Yekatom's elements also torched the mosque in Boeing with gasoline. On the same day and in the days that followed, the local population took it apart.

4. Attack on Cattin

79. Following the attack on the market and the mosque in Boeing, elements of Mr Yekatom's group moved on to attack Cattin, where they clashed with the Seleka. During the attack on Cattin, elements of Mr Yekatom's group killed at least one Muslim man, who was not armed, nor engaged in combat, at the time of his death. The elements targeted this Muslim man on the basis that he was an 'Arab' and the victim eventually succumbed to the injuries inflicted on him.

5. Dislocation of Muslims from Boeing and Cattin

80. From 5 December 2013 onwards, the majority of Muslims of Boeing and Cattin, including Salehou Ndiaye and P-2682, fled to PK5 in Bangui, while some others fled to other parts of the CAR, in the context of the attack by Mr Yekatom's group on Boeing and Cattin. Muslim persons who fled to PK5 continued to fear for their security because of the presence of the Anti-Balaka around PK5 and Bangui generally. With the influx of Muslims fleeing the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, PK5 became overcrowded, practically uninhabitable, and unsafe. As a result, some Muslims, including Salehou Ndiaye and P-2682, then fled to neighbouring countries fearing for their safety.

C. The attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013

1. Unfolding of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013

81. On 5 December 2013, in coordination with the Anti-Balaka attack on Bangui on the same day, Anti-Balaka elements, divided into two groups led by Florent Kema and Théophile Ndangba, respectively, carried out an attack on the town of Bossangoa. The attack started at approximately 13:00 and lasted until the late afternoon or early evening.
82. During the attack, the Anti-Balaka targeted residential areas, including the Boro neighbourhood, generally known as the Muslim neighbourhood in Bossangoa, with the intention of showing that the Anti-Balaka were attacking not only Bangui but also in the provinces, and to 'free' the town from Seleka and all Muslims, thereby targeting Muslim civilians and drawing no distinction between them and the Seleka. During the attack, the Anti-Balaka was well armed, with some AK-47s and RPGs, as well as hunting weapons.
83. During the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013, Batoul Naffi and several other individuals were injured. An Anti-Balaka element forced P-2462 into sexual intercourse, having blindfolded and undressed her, and after the group of five Anti-Balaka he was in had threatened her with their weapons.
84. In the course of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013, the Anti-Balaka killed at least the following 18 persons who were not armed or taking part in hostilities: Khadidja Adjaro;

Koursi Abdelrahim; Abdel, also known as Adaye, Abakar; Atahir Abou; ‘C-17’, a taxi driver; Atahir Djime (or Djimet); Halima Hisseini; Hamadou Bouba; Ousman Abacar; Ousman Abacar’s mother; Abdallah Mahamat; Abdelkhadir; Mariam Yamwha; Amadou Oumarou; Abakar; Ismael; Salamatou, a Peuhl; Sale Adim.

2. Events during and in the aftermath of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013

85. At some point between 5 and 8 December 2013, the Anti-Balaka burned and destroyed residential structures, lived in by Muslims at the time of the attack, in the immediate vicinity of the imam’s residence.
86. During the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013, the Muslim civilian population of Bossangoa fled the attacked neighbourhoods to seek shelter at the École de la Liberté, where their numbers rose into several thousands.
87. The Muslim civilians that had sought refuge at the École de la Liberté remained confined to the school premises for fear of threats by the Anti-Balaka, staying there in cramped and generally dire conditions. The Muslim civilians at the École de la Liberté were dependent on the protection of international forces for their safety and could not leave the school premises venturing into Bossangoa without risk to their person.
88. Eventually, in light of the prevailing insecurity as well as the dire and cramped living conditions at the École de la Liberté, all Muslims staying at the school were transported away from Bossangoa to Chad in two separate convoys, leaving in February and April 2014, respectively, following which Bossangoa was emptied of its Muslim population.

D. The events at Yamwara on and around 24 December 2013

1. Elements and structure at Yamwara

89. Mr Yekatom’s group established a base at Yamwara at one point in December 2013 following the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. Elements who had not participated in this attack joined Mr Yekatom’s group at Yamwara after 5 December 2013. Considerable number of elements received accommodation in the school buildings or in provisory shelters around the premises of Yamwara, including Cœur de Lion.

90. Mr Yekatom did not live at Yamwara and slept elsewhere close to the airport. Mr Yekatom did regularly visit Yamwara and maintained a constant presence there through his elements.
91. When the base at Yamwara was established, Mr Yekatom's group set up checkpoints along its perimeter to monitor passage of vehicles and people, including, at least, one set up by Alkanto close to Yamwara.
92. Mr Yekatom was in charge of Yamwara with Cœur de Lion as his deputy. All witnesses who were at Yamwara during the relevant time considered Mr Yekatom to be the 'chief' of all activities at Yamwara. Mr Yekatom was also the overall chief on matters of punishment and enforcing discipline at Yamwara, and his section chiefs also had a responsibility to discipline elements. Mr Yekatom maintained overall control over the activities at Yamwara at all times, including through Cœur de Lion. Mr Yekatom had undisputed authority over Cœur de Lion, Alkanto and Bojos, among others.
93. At some point in mid-December 2013, Mr Yekatom's group at Yamwara was joined by elements from Bossangoa, referred to as the 'Gobere group'. Elements within the Gobere group at Yamwara followed the orders from their own chiefs, who would, in turn, wait for the orders of Mr Yekatom.

2. Training at Yamwara

94. At Yamwara, Mr Yekatom's group, including civilian elements, received training of military nature. There was no training in international humanitarian law at Yamwara.

3. Yamwara Incident

95. On 24 December 2013, following the death of a member of the Lapo N'Gomat family, Saint Cyr's older brother, three women related to the family were to be escorted back to their home before dark because of the security situation in Bangui at the time. The four men, namely P-1704, P-1705, P-1716 and Saint Cyr, who were relatives and friends of the Lapo N'Gomat family, escorted the three women, namely, P-0967, P-1811 and another (together, seven persons), to the main road to find them a taxi.

96. Elements from Mr Yekatom's group apprehended these seven persons at a checkpoint led by Alkanto close to the Lapo N'Gomat family house and to Yamwara. Alkanto pointed to the women as belonging to the family of Mamour and Michel Djotodia in the presence of the elements in his group. Alkanto's identification of the women being related to Djotodia and Mamour as well as being Muslims, combined with Alkanto's negative feelings centred around a desire for revenge against the women, predisposed Alkanto's group to perceive the seven persons as 'Muslims'.
97. Following Alkanto's identification of the women, his elements started to threaten the group with death, telling the group that they would be 'skinned like a papaya'. The expression 'peeling' or 'skinning' the 'papaya' was used by elements in Mr Yekatom's group in relation to the treatment of captured persons suspected of being Seleka.
98. Alkanto ordered his elements to search the male captives at the checkpoint. Alkanto's elements beat P-1704 and P-1716 and accused them of being traitors. Following this search, no arms were found on any of the captives. An element searched Saint Cyr and found a 'Seleka card' on him. None of the seven persons posed a threat to Yamwara or the security of the elements placed there. In fact, the nature and the purpose of them being together and close to Yamwara was linked to the funeral of Saint Cyr's older brother.
99. After threatening them with death and accusing them of being traitors, Alkanto ordered his elements to take the seven persons, including Saint Cyr Lapo N'Gomat, P-1704, P-1705, P-1716, P-0967 and P-1811, to Yamwara.
100. Elements in Mr Yekatom's group, namely Alkanto and others, brought the captives to Cœur de Lion's house at Yamwara. There, in Cœur de Lion's presence, elements in Mr Yekatom's group, including Bojos, interrogated the four men individually on their identity, ethnicity, and reasons for being there with the women, also demanding the captive men to speak in the dialect associated with their respective ethnicities. Saint Cyr and another captive, who were Boffi from their father's side and Goula from their mother's side, gave their ethnicity but neither could speak their dialect. Saint Cyr said that he was ‘Boffi’ but could not speak in this language. When Saint Cyr was unable to do so, elements in Mr Yekatom’s group accused him of being ‘Goula’, and therefore associated with Djotodia. The elements in Mr Yekatom’s group kept the women apart from the male captives but close by, under the veranda of Cœur de Lion’s house. Mr Yekatom was not present at Yamwara during the group’s arrival there or during the said interrogation at Cœur de Lion’s house.

101. Following the men’s interrogation, the elements in Mr Yekatom’s group forced them to undress, searched them again, threatened them with death, and found no weapons on any of them. Upon another search of the captives, an element in Mr Yekatom’s group recovered a SIM card in the trousers of one of the female captives and no weapons were found on them. The elements in Mr Yekatom’s group took the women inside Cœur de Lion’s house while Saint Cyr’s interrogation continued outside, and from where they could hear what was happening outside. Elements in Mr Yekatom’s group continued to interrogate Saint Cyr and beat him, despite him showing his identification card and insisting that he was a FACA member. Cœur de Lion, who was observing Saint Cyr’s mistreatment, encouraged the assailants and ordered them to continue, saying, inter alia, that the victims were ‘Muslims’ and ‘Seleka’ and to ‘do the job properly’. Elements in Mr Yekatom’s group specifically beat Saint Cyr’s legs, breaking them, and tied him up in ‘arbatacher’ manner, continuing to assault him. An element in Mr Yekatom’s group cut off Saint Cyr’s toes, fingers, and an ear, being encouraged by Cœur de Lion’s presence at the scene and his words, and feeling that there was no choice but to do it. P-1704, P-1705, and P-1716 were present when Mr Yekatom’s elements interrogated and beat Saint Cyr and cut off his toes, fingers, and an ear. After Saint Cyr’s beating and maiming, the elements of Mr Yekatom’s group took him away. Saint Cyr then died. His relatives never saw him again and his dead body was never recovered.
102. Elements in Mr Yekatom’s group beat P-1704, P-1705, and P-1716 and threatened them with death.
103. Mr Yekatom was not present at the scene during the mistreatment of Saint Cyr, P-1704, P-1705, and P-1716. However, shortly after the fact, Mr Yekatom came to know about this incident, including the actions of the element that had cut off Saint Cyr's toes, fingers, and an ear. Later, Mr Yekatom told P-1839 that this element had done a 'good job' insofar. Mr Yekatom did not punish this element for these acts and, on the contrary, rewarded this element with posts of responsibility within his group, including as part of his security detail. Mr Yekatom considered Saint Cyr a 'traitor' and 'in cahoots with the Seleka' and that therefore, they could not 'keep him'. When asked about Saint Cyr's treatment, Mr Yekatom said in Sango 'eforolo tonga na papai' – meaning that 'they peeled the papaya', 'they removed the skin like they would do to a papaya'.

104. When elements in Mr Yekatom's group searched the female captives at Yamwara, they removed their veils and brought them inside Cœur de Lion's house at gunpoint. Inside Cœur de Lion's house, the elements in Mr Yekatom's group forced them to undress to their underwear, searched them again, threatened them with death and kept them in this location. At this time, the female captives could hear the interrogation and mistreatment of Saint Cyr taking place outside. An element in Mr Yekatom's group pointed a weapon in the women's direction and asked P-1811 about her tribe. At some point, the female captives could no longer hear Saint Cyr crying outside. During their captivity inside Cœur de Lion's house, elements from Mr Yekatom's group were going in and out of the house and threatened them with death. Mr Yekatom met the female captives inside Cœur de Lion's house later that evening and introduced himself as 'Rombhot' and 'the chief'. Mr Yekatom interrogated the female captives about their ethnicities and family background. Mr Yekatom knew that the three women were Muslim. Mr Yekatom's presence and words at this stage were not reassuring to the female captives. The female captives had no indication about, or reason to believe, the genuineness of Mr Yekatom's composure or the purported efforts to have them released, nor the possibility that they would be released. Mr Yekatom knew that his elements had captured, mistreated, and kept them at gunpoint at Yamwara.
105. The same evening of these events at Yamwara, P-1654, who was Saint Cyr's father, came to meet Mr Yekatom at Yamwara. Mr Yekatom, with Bojos and Cœur de Lion, questioned P-1654 about his family for hours, including about his ethnicity, and threatened him and his family with death. They asked him why 'the Goula', in particular, Mamour's relative, had been invited to the funeral; they also asked about Saint Cyr's relation with him. Mr Yekatom did not inform P-1654, who was fearful for Saint Cyr, about the state and location of Saint Cyr or that of the other captives. After hearing the questioning from Mr Yekatom and his elements and upon P-1654's return from Yamwara to his house, the day after Saint Cyr and the others were captured, P-1654 and the rest of his family fled Boeing.

106. Mr Yekatom was aware of Saint Cyr's presence and mistreatment at Yamwara, at the very latest during P-1654's encounter with him on the evening of 24 December 2013. Mr Yekatom knew that his elements had mistreated Saint Cyr, and that he subsequently died. Mr Yekatom knew that, at the time of his capture, Saint Cyr was escorting the three women, with whom he had familial relations, together with the other three men, to find transport to go home, in the context of a burial of a family relative. Mr Yekatom knew that Saint Cyr had family links with the 'Goula' and that he was unarmed at the time of his capture.
107. P-1716 remained captive at Yamwara under Cœur de Lion's watch on the night of his capture. During this time, elements in Mr Yekatom's group threatened P-1716 with death and Cœur de Lion interrogated him. P-1716 was released the following morning after his father paid a ransom to Cœur de Lion and Mr Yekatom. Mr Yekatom knew of P-1716's capture and his mistreatment at the very latest by the morning of 25 December 2013.
108. Elements in Mr Yekatom's group brought the three women outside of Cœur de Lion's house, regrouped them with P-1704 and P-1705, and brought them to another location in Yamwara. The elements in Mr Yekatom's group continued to keep the three women, together with P-1704 and P-1705, in captivity at this location in Yamwara at gunpoint, where the female captives were threatened and told that they would be peeled 'like a papaya'. Saint Cyr was not amongst them.
109. During the intervening night of 24 and 25 December 2013, the elements in Mr Yekatom's group made P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive walk from Yamwara to a location close to the M'Poko airport. Mr Yekatom, Cœur de Lion, or Bojos did not accompany them. At this location, the elements in Mr Yekatom's group handed over P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive to Sylvestre Yagouzou, who introduced himself as the 'coordinator of the base behind the airport' and a 'spokesperson' of the Anti-Balaka. Sylvestre Yagouzou then kept P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive at a location close to the airport until the following day under circumstances that, to P-0967 and P-1811, were frightening.

110. On the morning of 25 December 2013, Mr Yekatom met P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive at this location and introduced himself. Mr Yekatom was aware that Sylvestre Yagouzou kept them in the location close to the M'Poko airport surrounded by Anti-Balaka elements. On or about 27 December 2013, P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive were released and handed over to Sangaris.
111. Mr Yekatom approved of his elements capturing, interrogating, keeping captive, and mistreating the seven captives. Mr Yekatom approved of his elements beating, interrogating, maiming, and killing Saint Cyr. As regards the remaining six captives, Mr Yekatom approved of his elements capturing, interrogating, threatening with death, forcing them to undress, keeping them captive at gunpoint, and keeping them within hearing distance of Saint Cyr's mistreatment at Yamwara. Mr Yekatom approved of his elements beating P-1704, P-1705, and P-1716 at various stages of their captivity. Mr Yekatom approved of his elements keeping P-1716 overnight at Yamwara under Cœur de Lion's watch. Mr Yekatom approved of his elements transferring P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive to another Anti-Balaka base close to the airport and handing them over to Sylvestre Yagouzou.
112. Mr Yekatom's group coordinated with Wenezoui and Sylvestre Yagouzou and the Anti-Balaka based behind the M'Poko airport in the transfer and captivity of P-1704, P-1705, P-0967, P-1811 and one other captive.

E. The Anti-Balaka's advance through and takeover of villages along the PK9-Mbaïki axis

1. The departure of Mr Yekatom's group from Yamwara and its advance on the axis

113. Starting on 10 January 2014, Mr Yekatom and elements under his control left Yamwara and advanced from Bangui on the road towards Mbaïki, taking over a number of villages in the Lobaye prefecture, located in the south-west part of the country, including Sekia, Ndangala, Bimon, Kapou, Bossongo and Pissa. They did not meet with resistance as they passed from PK9 to Sekia and Pissa, since the Seleka had fled these areas after learning that the Anti-Balaka were approaching.

114. At the time of the group's presence on the Mbaïki road, Mr Yekatom, Cœur de Lion and Alkanto instructed the elements to kill all the Muslims in their area.

2. Elements under Mr Yekatom's control present along the axis

115. Mr Yekatom was the undisputed leader of the Anti-Balaka group along the PK9-Mbaïki axis, which comprised at least 1,000 elements at the time.

3. Locations of checkpoints and bases on the axis

116. Mr Yekatom's group took over checkpoints at PK9, Sekia, Bimon, Bossongo and Pissa in their advance towards Mbaïki. Mr Yekatom and his elements also set up new bases at PK9 and Sekia.

117. By taking over these checkpoints, Mr Yekatom and his group aimed at searching and identifying Muslims in the area and raising money to finance the group and its needs. Mr Yekatom's group was armed.

4. The flight of Muslims from locations along the PK9-Mbaïki axis

118. A significant proportion of the Muslim civilian population fled their towns and villages along the PK9-Mbaïki axis due to and in fear of the advance of Mr Yekatom's group along the axis.
119. At least 1,000 Muslim civilians who fled from locations along the PK9-Mbaïki axis and in the Lobaye prefecture went to Mbaïki, substantially increasing the Muslim population of the town. Muslims in Mbaïki at the time were living in difficulty, under conditions of overcrowding, hunger and fear of death from the Anti-Balaka.

5. Arrival of Mr Yekatom's group to Mbaïki

120. Mr Yekatom and elements under his control entered Mbaïki on 30 January 2014. That day, a meeting was held at the St Jeanne d'Arc Church in Mbaïki, with Mr Yekatom and members of his group, representatives of the Mbaïki civilian and religious authorities, international organisations and NGOs, as well as the Sangaris. At the meeting, the removal of the Muslim civilian population from Mbaïki, which was a foregone conclusion at that point, was decided. After the meeting finished, Mr Yekatom addressed the crowds outside of the meeting location and subsequently at Mbaïki's bus station, where he delivered 'peace messages' similar to those he had expressed at the meeting. The presence of the Sangaris and other international actors in Mbaïki at that time compelled Mr Yekatom to bring this 'peace message' to Mbaïki and prevented attacks of his group against the Muslim civilian population. After the meeting, the prefect and other individuals contacted the authorities to arrange the convoy that would transport the Muslim civilian population out of Mbaïki.
121. Mr Yekatom's group settled in at least one base in Mbaïki. During this time, elements of Mr Yekatom's group threatened and harassed Muslim civilians in Mbaïki, telling them to leave the area. Both Mr Yekatom and Cœur de Lion knew that elements of the group committed acts of violence in Mbaïki. Efforts and measures to prevent these acts were taken only after the removal of the Muslim civilian population from Mbaïki had been decided and/or carried out. The Anti-Balaka also attacked a gendarme patrol in Mbaïki which was there to protect the population, taking the patrol's weapons and the service car that they were using.

6. Dislocation of Muslims from Mbaïki

122. On 6 February 2014, Chadian forces transported a first group of Muslim civilians from Mbaïki to Chad and other locations in the CAR. These Muslim civilians had to leave their belongings behind. They left Mbaïki in fear of the Anti-Balaka and, in particular, due to the arrival of Mr Yekatom's group to Mbaïki. The total number of Muslims removed from Mbaïki at the time amounted to at least 3,000. As a result of this dislocation, very few Muslim civilians remained in Mbaïki. The living conditions in the refugee camps in Chad were extremely difficult.

123. Thereafter, the Congolese MISCA transported a second group of Muslims out of Mbaïki to Bangui and other locations.

7. The killing of Djido Saleh

124. Following the removal of Muslim civilians out of Mbaïki, Djido Saleh, the second deputy mayor of Mbaïki, and his family, were among the very few remaining Muslims in Mbaïki. Prior to his killing, elements of Mr Yekatom's group threatened Djido Saleh. There is no indication that Anti-Balaka elements demanded money from Djido Saleh.

125. On 28 February 2014, a group of individuals attacked Djido Saleh's house while he and his family were inside. Djido Saleh's family fled. As Djido Saleh tried to flee, the group of individuals pursued him and threw stones at him. Djido Saleh tried to defend himself with a bow and at least one arrow. The group of individuals, which included at least three elements of Mr Yekatom's group, one of them being Honorine Gbafalo, killed him as he tried to reach the gendarmerie. Honorine Gbafalo cut off his genitals. Other individuals beat him and cut parts of his body, including one of his ears and his neck, partly severing his head. These individuals targeted Djido Saleh on the basis that he was a Muslim. Following the death of Djido Saleh, Mr Yekatom told Raymond Mongbandi that the killing was 'an accident' and that he would pay for the burial, which he never did. As a direct consequence of the killing, MISCA ordered Mr Yekatom and his elements to leave Mbaïki, which they immediately did.

III. EVIDENTIARY CONSIDERATIONS

A. General evidentiary considerations

1. Standard of proof

126. Everyone is presumed innocent until proved guilty before the Court.³⁷ The onus is on the Prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused.³⁸

127. In accordance with Article 66(3) of the Statute, the Chamber must be convinced of the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt in order to convict the accused. The standard of ³⁸ Article 66(2) of the Statute.

beyond reasonable doubt is to be applied to any facts indispensable for entering a conviction, namely those constituting the elements of the crimes or modes of liability charged.³⁹ For this determination, the Chamber must carry out a holistic evaluation and weighing of all the evidence taken together in relation to the facts at issue.⁴⁰

128. As is clear from its plain meaning, reasonable doubts must be grounded in reasons. Reasonable doubts cannot consist of imaginary or frivolous doubt – they must have a rational link to the evidence, lack of evidence or inconsistencies in the evidence.⁴¹

129. The possibility that unavailable evidence may include exculpatory information is too hypothetical, without more, to qualify as a reasonable doubt. Accepting such a proposition is akin to requiring proof beyond all doubt, while what is required is instead proof beyond reasonable doubt.⁴²

2. Evaluation of the evidence

130. Pursuant to Article 74(2) of the Statute, the Chamber’s decision is based on the evidence and the entire proceedings. In doing so, it has only relied ‘on evidence submitted and discussed before it at the trial’. As determined by the Appeals Chamber, ‘evidence is properly before a trial chamber when it has been “submitted” in accordance with the procedure adopted by the trial chamber and discussed at trial, unless it is ruled as irrelevant or inadmissible’.⁴³ Furthermore, the Chamber recalls that what is required is that there has been the opportunity at trial to make arguments on the evidence concerned, irrespective of whether any such arguments are actually made.⁴⁴ The main consideration is that the evidence upon which the Chamber bases its Article 74 judgment has been introduced during trial and the parties and participants had the opportunity to make submissions on each item of evidence as they deemed fit.⁴⁵
131. The Chamber duly considered the arguments raised by the parties and participants throughout the proceedings. Of particular importance in this regard are the arguments made in the context of the submission of individual items of evidence as well as in the parties and participants’ closing briefs and statements. Nonetheless, the Chamber recalls that ‘to fulfil its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion’ under Article 74(5) of the Statute, it ‘is not required to address all the arguments raised by the parties [and participants], or every item of evidence relevant to a particular factual finding, provided that it indicates with sufficient clarity the basis for its decision’.⁴⁶ As confirmed by the Appeals Chamber, trial chambers have a degree of discretion as to what to address explicitly in their reasoning as long as there are sufficient reasons provided for their determinations.⁴⁷

Jean-Pierre Bemba Gombo*, Judgment on the appeal of Mr Jean-Pierre Bemba Gombo against Trial Chamber III’s “Judgment pursuant to Article 74 of the Statute”, 8 June 2028, ICC-01/05-01/08-3636-Conf (public redacted version notified the same day, ICC-01/05-01/08-3636-Red), paras 53-55; Bemba et al. Appeals Judgment, ICC-01/05-01/13-2275-Red, paras 105-107. See also Al Hassan Trial Judgment, ICC-01/12-

132. Following the established practice of the Court, the Chamber adopted the so-called ‘submission approach’. Consequently, it decided not to rule on the admissibility of each item of evidence during the course of the proceedings, other than on the basis of any procedural bars such as those under Article 69(7) of the Statute or concerning the procedural requirements for the introduction of prior recorded testimonies under Rule 68 of the Rules.⁴⁸ Rather, in the absence of such procedural bars and following the applicable procedure for the submission of evidence,⁴⁹ the Chamber recognised items of evidence as submitted within the meaning of Article 74(2) of the Statute.⁵⁰ Following this procedure, 19,590 items were recognised as formally submitted in the case record and reflected as such in the e-court metadata.
133. The Chamber has assessed the relevance, probative value and potential prejudice of the evidence so submitted – and any argument in this regard raised by the parties and participants in the course of the trial – as part of its holistic assessment of all evidence when deciding on the guilt or innocence of the accused in its judgment. It assessed freely all evidence in accordance with Rule 63(2) of the Rules and considered all the evidentiary criteria for each item of evidence submitted, although it may not necessarily discuss in the judgment every submitted item.⁵¹
134. The Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence’s allegation that the adoption of the ‘submission approach’ by the Chamber ‘had serious consequences for the evidentiary position of the Defence’.⁵² The Chamber recalls that the submission approach is firmly established in the practice of the Court.⁵³ It further notes that the Ngaïssona Defence – as well as the rest of the parties and participants – had the opportunity to, and did in fact, present arguments concerning the submission of items of evidence throughout the trial, as well as effectively examine witnesses. The Chamber is of the view that the Ngaïssona Defence's allegations stem from a stated preference for the 'admission evidentiary regime',⁵⁴ and considers without merit its arguments that prejudice ensued as a result of 'irrelevant evidence' becoming part of the case file or it being 'overflowed'.⁵⁵

135. Moreover, the Chamber recalls that there is no procedural bar to the introduction or reliance on hearsay evidence in the Court's legal framework. The fact that evidence is hearsay does not necessarily deprive it of probative value. While the weight or probative value afforded to it may be lower, this ultimately 'depend[s] upon the infinitely variable circumstances which surround hearsay evidence', including for instance whether the hearsay evidence is anonymous.⁵⁶
136. Similarly, nothing in the statutory framework prevents a trial chamber from drawing inferences based on circumstantial evidence, nor does the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt or the principle in dubio pro reo require that such evidence be excluded. In making findings based on circumstantial evidence, the Chamber has reached a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt when it was convinced that was the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the relevant facts. The Chamber further recalls that it is not required to articulate every step of its reasoning that led to its final conclusion. However, when the Chamber has made an essential finding based on an inference, it has explained in detail how it reached the factual conclusion in question.⁵⁷
137. The Chamber also takes note of the Ngaïssona Defence's submissions that the Prosecution has 'excessively relied on circumstantial evidence', as well as 'vast amounts of indirect and hearsay evidence’.⁵⁸ The Chamber recalls that it will assess all of the evidence before it holistically and in light of the jurisprudence of the Court as set out above.

138. Furthermore, in accordance with Rule 63(4) of the Rules, the Chamber has imposed no legal requirement of corroboration. As held by the Appeals Chamber, ‘[d]epending on the circumstances, a single piece of evidence [...] may suffice to establish a specific fact. However, [...] this does not mean that any piece of evidence provides a sufficient evidentiary basis for a factual finding’.⁵⁹ The Appeals Chamber also found that ‘while corroboration is “an element that a reasonable trier of fact may consider in assessing the evidence”, the question of whether or not to consider it forms part of the Trial Chamber’s discretion’.⁶⁰
139. As to the Ngaïssona Defence’s submissions that the Prosecution ‘excessively relied on uncorroborated insider evidence, prior recorded statements and impugned witnesses’, and that it relied on ‘contaminated testimonies of key witnesses’,⁶¹ the Chamber notes that these allegations essentially refer to the probative value and weight that the Chamber should attribute to said evidence, on the basis that the evidence is allegedly uncorroborated, unreliable or not credible. Therefore, the Chamber considers it more appropriate to address these issues in the context of the credibility assessments of the witnesses as well as in its evidentiary analysis for findings of facts, as necessary.
140. Moreover, the Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence argues that the Prosecution ‘abused its process regarding Article 70 of the Statute’ (the ‘Article 70 Investigation’), which would require the Chamber to dismiss any reference by the Prosecution to any allegations concerning witness interference by the Ngaïssona Defence when assessing the evidence, in order to safeguard Mr Ngaïssona’s rights in this case.⁶² The Chamber recalls its findings that, under the Court’s legal framework, it does not have the power to find an abuse of process by the Prosecution in the context of an Article 70 investigation, and, as this Chamber is not seized with the Article 70 Investigation, it has no power to order the latter to cease it.⁶³ It follows that the Chamber does not find it appropriate to dismiss per se any reference to allegations made by the Prosecution on any alleged witness interference on the part of the Ngaïssona Defence.

141. The Chamber further notes that the Prosecution's claim of alleged interference by Ngaïssona Defence witnesses has no bearing on Mr Ngaïssona's guilt or innocence in this case, and that the questioning by the Prosecution of certain Ngaïssona Defence witnesses on this topic was limited. It also considers that the Ngaïssona Defence mischaracterises the Chamber's findings when it asserts that the Chamber 'took no position on the unfounded allegations alluding to [Mr Ngaïssona]'s consciousness of guilt and tarnishing the Defence's professional reputation'.⁶⁴
142. Lastly, the Chamber takes note of the Ngaïssona Defence's submission that the Prosecution applied 'double standards' to evidence because it 'wrongly labelled' evidence as incriminating Mr Ngaïssona but later that same evidence was disclosed as exculpatory in the case of The Prosecutor v Maxime Jeoffroy Eli Mokom Gawaka (the 'Mokom Case').⁶⁵ The Chamber considers that the Ngaïssona Defence's contention is inapposite. Even though there might have been a substantial factual overlap between the two cases, the charges against the accused are different, and simply because an item of evidence is categorised in one way in the Mokom case does not mean that it should have been regarded as such in the present case.

3. Agreed facts

143. As provided in Rule 69 of the Rules, the Prosecution and Defence submitted 19 agreed facts related to (i) Mr Ngaïssona's background; (ii) certain geographical locations in the CAR;

In this regard, the Chamber recalls that it rejected the Prosecution's request to submit rebuttal evidence which was meant to demonstrate 'improper contact and/or influence by the Defence and persons linked to the Accused as regards Prosecution witnesses', and that it noted that the Ngaïssona Defence's response to the request would be made public. As such, it considered that no further relief would be necessary at that stage such as to order the Prosecution to 'refrain from making unfounded and contemptible accusations against the Defence'.

B. Specific evidentiary considerations

1. Documentary evidence: Facebook material and call data records

i. Facebook material

144. The Chamber recognised as formally submitted approximately 943 items related to Facebook evidence (the ‘Facebook Material’). The Facebook Material comprises inter alia private messages, including attachments, sent between users;⁶⁸ screenshots of posts visible on the Facebook users’ profiles, pictures and lists of Facebook friends;⁶⁹ and Facebook business records with information and metadata on users’ profiles, such as the names and email addresses used for registration, and logs.⁷⁰

145. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution obtained its Facebook material (the ‘Prosecution Facebook Material’) following a series of requests for assistance (the ‘RFA’) from Facebook Ireland Limited (Meta INC) (hereinafter: ‘Facebook’).⁷¹ The Yekatom Defence also obtained Facebook material from Facebook following a decision by the Chamber concerning cooperation issues,⁷² as well as open source investigations.⁷³

See also e.g. Facebook metadata, CAR-D29-0018-0008.

⁷³ See e.g. Facebook screenshot, CAR-D29-0016-0001.

146. The majority of the Facebook Material was submitted by the parties through requests to submit evidence in writing.⁷⁴ In addition, the Chamber recognised as formally submitted Facebook items in the context of witness testimony throughout the trial, including under Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁷⁵
147. The Ngaiissona Defence argues that the Prosecution Facebook Material lacks authentication, more specifically, that the Prosecution did not submit any evidence that could authenticate its material, let alone assist the Chamber in understanding what was received in response to the RFAs sent by the Prosecution to the competent Irish authorities (the ‘Authorities’), and that no Facebook employee or representative testified or explained the material generated by Facebook.⁷⁶
148. The Chamber notes that, in response to the Prosecution’s RFAs, the Authorities secured the evidence in question and thereafter transmitted it to the Prosecution.⁷⁷ The Chamber has no reason to doubt that the Facebook Material requested by the Prosecution through its RFAs is none other than what was obtained by the Authorities from Facebook according to the applicable domestic procedure, and ultimately conveyed to the Court.⁷⁸ The Chamber is also not persuaded that the lack of information ‘concerning the domestic court processes and whether the materials were altered in any way’ in this instance raises doubts on the authenticity of the Prosecution Facebook Material to such an extent as to render it inadmissible per se,⁷⁹ and considers that mere submissions on any alleged alteration of such material are speculative.

149. Contrary to the Ngaïssona Defence’s contention, the Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the information conveyed by the Authorities and which is formally recognised as submitted,⁸⁰ that the Facebook Material obtained through the respective RFAs is overall authentic.⁸¹ It is therefore unnecessary to address whether the Facebook Material is in itself ‘self-authenticating’.⁸² The Chamber further notes that, insofar as witnesses testified in court on the Facebook Material, no doubts were raised as to whether the Facebook Material showed to them during their examination was authentic.⁸³
150. Moreover, the Ngaïssona Defence raises a series of issues related to the authenticity of user identification. It challenges the Prosecution’s assertion that the ‘registration IP or IP logs’ and ‘profile ID number’ provide further indicia of reliability, and submits that the IP addresses or IP logs from Facebook do not confirm an individual’s location. It also argues that only the testimony of a Facebook technician can provide information about whether safeguards at Facebook could have prevented multiple users from accessing the same

⁷⁸ The Chamber further notes that, at the time of the submission of certain Facebook material, the Yekatom Defence argued that its authenticity was confirmed by the fact that it was obtained from the Irish Authorities following an order issued by the Chamber. It also argued that some items from Facebook were authentic as they were publicly available and obtained through open source research. See Yekatom Defence Fabrication of Evidence Bar Table Request, ICC-01/14-01/18-2611-Red, paras 49-50.

accounts.⁸⁴ The Yekatom Defence similarly contends that many Facebook posts lack essential details such as author identity, an issue which is compounded when neither the sender, recipient, nor mentioned individuals have confirmed the posts' authenticity.⁸⁵

151. Having regard to the above, the Chamber considers that without a statement or testimony from a witness who participated in an exchange through Facebook or who was the author of a post, the Chamber cannot conclusively determine who effectively engaged in an exchange or who authored a specific post, based solely on the Facebook Material. Further noting the absence of any expert testimony on the matter, the Chamber cannot solely rely on Facebook IP addresses or logs to confirm an individual's location.
152. As to the reliability of the Prosecution Facebook Material, the Yekatom Defence argues that social media platforms are often used to rapidly disseminate unverified information, 'fake news', or rumours without restrictions on what can be posted, pointing to the evidence provided by certain witnesses.⁸⁶ The Yekatom Defence also contends that the Prosecution fails to limit its relevance assessment of the items to factual elements as it provides its own interpretation of some messages and the intent of their authors, and that only the testimony of the author of the messages would allow the Chamber and the parties to have a meaningful and unequivocal understanding of their content and true meaning.⁸⁷

153. The Ngaïssona Defence raises similar challenges, indicating that the Prosecution dedicated little time to testing the Facebook conversations and their alleged interpretations, and that the Prosecution Facebook Material is thus too unreliable to be used in a conviction.⁸⁸ In addition, both the Yekatom Defence and the Ngaïssona Defence argue that the Prosecution did not present a complete and objective characterisation of the content of the private Facebook messages, also failing to bringing to the attention of the Chamber ‘exculpatory messages’.⁸⁹
154. The Chamber considers that in the absence of a statement or testimony from an individual who participated in a Facebook exchange or authored a post, or otherwise has information about the contents, the related Facebook Material has little probative value. That being said, the Chamber does not consider it appropriate to adopt a presumption that ‘all messages are misinformation unless proven otherwise, given that individuals will often present unreliable information as fact’.⁹⁰ Instead, the Chamber considers it more appropriate to determine the reliability of the Facebook Material on a case-by-case basis in light of the available evidence – notably, the testimony of witnesses who could comment on the Facebook Material, as well as other relevant documents – and the submissions of the parties in its holistic approach.
155. Lastly, the Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence’s contention that the Prosecution’s use of its Facebook Material is ‘overly prejudicial’, given the timing of its submission which ‘adversely impacted the Defence ability to effectively prepare’, the fact that it was ‘barely touched upon through oral testimony’, and that it contains a significant quantity of hearsay evidence.⁹¹

156. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution requested the formal submission of its Facebook Material on 17 May, 3 July and 25 August 2023, respectively.⁹² The Chamber further recalls that the Single Judge shared the concerns expressed by the Defence in relation to the timing of the filing of bar table applications. However, the Chamber is of the view that it adopted appropriate measures in that regard,⁹³ and that the Ngaïssona Defence had sufficient time to review the disclosed material and adequately prepare for trial.⁹⁴

157. In addition, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution provided to the Defence detailed information regarding its approach to its Facebook Material in its Trial Brief,⁹⁵ and that the Ngaïssona Defence had the opportunity to and did rely on Facebook Material for the purposes of its examination of Prosecution witnesses since the early stages of trial.⁹⁶ In any event, as with any other documentary evidence, the Chamber will take into account in its assessment of the probative value of the Facebook Material whether a specific item has been subject to examination in court.

ii. Call Data Records

158. The Chamber recognised as formally submitted approximately 104 items related to call data records (the ‘CDR’), comprising call data, cell site items,⁹⁷ and call sequence tables (the ‘CST’) (together, the ‘CDR Material’).⁹⁸ The Chamber will briefly define each of these terms.

159. CDR provide information about telecommunications,⁹⁹ such as the sending and receiving number, the type of communication (voice call or text message), the date, time and duration of the communication, the identification number ascribed to a particular mobile phone (the ‘handset’) and/or SIM card – respectively known as international mobile equipment identification number (the ‘IMEI’) and international mobile subscriber identity –, and the cell towers to which the handset connected.¹⁰⁰ Furthermore, CDR usually contain information as to which cell or cell site was used at the start and/or end of a connection.¹⁰¹
160. Cell site items contain information on the site name, cell name and the direction of the antennas that were capturing the telecommunication signal between the concerned devices.¹⁰² A cell site (or base transceiver station) contains a piece of equipment that receives and emits radio frequencies used by telephones to communicate with each other.¹⁰³ The cell is the basic unit of network coverage produced by the antenna of a single sector.¹⁰⁴ This information is significant to the extent that CDR generally do not contain the details of the antenna configuration or the cell site details such as the location or address.¹⁰⁵
161. The CDR and cell site items were obtained following the RFAs by the Prosecution¹⁰⁶ and the Yekatom Defence,¹⁰⁷ and were provided by the telecommunications companies Moov, Orange, MTN and Telecel.¹⁰⁸

165. Ghislain N'Douba (P-2973) appeared before the Chamber without protective measures on 21 and 22 August 2023,¹¹³ and his prior recorded testimony was introduced under Rule 68(3) of the Rules.¹¹⁴ He is an employee from the telecommunications company Moov since 2005, which is based in the CAR, worked as a radio technician and network supervisor at the relevant time and at the time of his testimony, he was head of the equipment and project department.¹¹⁵ The witness testified mostly about the process by which CDR are created, including the generation, recording, storage and transfer of data, as well as issues related to the antennas and scope of coverage of the network. Although his testimony focused on the applicable procedures and practices at Moov, the witness also provided some evidence in relation to other telecommunications companies in general.
166. Duncan Brown (D30-4864) appeared as an expert witness before the Chamber and without protective measures from 27 February to 1 March 2024,¹¹⁶ and his prior recorded testimony was introduced under Rule 68(3) of the Rules.¹¹⁷ He is currently a full-time expert witness in the field of cell site analysis, telephone attribution, call data analysis and related topics.¹¹⁸ He testified mostly about the interpretation and analysis of CDR, including issues related to forensic integrity and data corruption, the transfer of CDR and their formats, common interpretation errors made by non-experts, the creation of CDR, attribution and cell site analysis, and CST.
167. The Ngaïssona Defence's general position is that the CDR material tendered by the Prosecution (the 'Prosecution CDR Material') should be dismissed as a matter of law, on the basis that it is unreliable.¹¹⁹ The Yekatom Defence in its closing brief makes submissions specifically with regard to certain aspects of the use of the Prosecution CDR Material, notably the issues of attribution, cell site analysis and CST, as well as the overall interpretation of CDR.¹²⁰ Both Defence teams made similar arguments on these topics during the course of the trial.¹²¹ More specifically, the Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence’s argument that the Prosecution failed to authenticate its CDR material, and that CDR are not self-authenticating.¹²²

168. The Chamber also notes the Defence’s arguments concerning the probative value of the CST submitted into evidence by the Prosecution (the ‘Prosecution CST’).¹²³ In particular, the Yekatom Defence contends that the Prosecution submitted its CST ‘without transparently and fully explaining its process, [which] hampers the Chamber’s ability to recreate the process’, on the basis that analytical products produced for a party must be repeatable to allow for verification.¹²⁴ The Ngaïssona Defence also argues that the Prosecution CST are unreliable given the absence of any witness statement or testimony explaining how they were prepared, and that they contain inaccuracies.¹²⁵
169. In light of these arguments, the Chamber will first recall the main points from the testimonies of Ghislain N’Douba and Duncan Brown. It will then address the authenticity and reliability of the CDR and cell site items, as well as the parties’ submissions on the inferences that may be drawn from this evidence. Furthermore, taking into account the fact that the Ngaïssona Defence’s submissions concern a limited number of CST and the manner in which these were used in the proceedings – notably, to challenge the credibility of witnesses Brice Stanislas Mohi, Didier Ouebio, D30-4608 and D30-4848 –, the Chamber does not consider it necessary at this point to rule on the probative value of the Prosecution CST in the abstract. The Chamber will address these arguments on a case-by-case basis.¹²⁶

Furthermore, the Chamber notes that it also recognised as formally submitted another CST tendered by the Prosecution with ERN CAR-OTP-00036482 (see Decision on Submitted Materials for D30-4504, email from the Chamber, 12 July 2024, at 11:21).

170. The Chamber notes that telecommunications companies generate CDR with data that is automatically collected in the ordinary course of business.¹²⁷ The CDR from Moov register any communication, either phone calls or text messages, that is initiated by a particular number on the network.¹²⁸ The type of data that is collected includes the receiver of the communication, whether it consists of a call or text message, the date and time, the duration of the call, and any other information that is useful for the business reports of the company.¹²⁹ In its raw form, the data consists of a set of alphanumeric characters which then needs to be decoded by a programme in order to be readable by humans and used in a CDR.¹³⁰
171. In a CDR produced by Moov, the registration of a call begins when the receiver answers the call – that is to say, it excludes the ringing time – and stops in the event that the subscriber loses the signal from the network and thus cannot continue the communication.¹³¹ Furthermore, since CDR are used to record data for billing purposes, the operator does not register a communication that did not actually take place.¹³² The Chamber also takes note of Duncan Brown’s testimony that, in the event that a phone call is diverted, some networks would indicate this in some ways in their CDR, but others would not include any information of that kind, so that it would not be possible to tell whether the number has possibly been diverted.¹³³ The expert witness also indicated that it is possible that few connections may not be recorded by an operator due to technical errors, although that possibility seems rare.¹³⁴
172. Ghislain N’Douba indicated that Moov has a protocol for archiving data in digital archives, and that all other operators in the CAR are also required by regulatory requirements to store the data for a certain time, beyond which there is no further obligation. At Moov, the transfer of the data to the archives is done automatically to ensure that it is carried out properly and completely.¹³⁵ The control mechanisms put in place to ensure that the production of CDR is well executed are also automated,¹³⁶ and specialised staff ensure that CDR are properly collected and that the decoding process is executed correctly.¹³⁷ The Chamber also notes Duncan Brown's testimony that networks record slightly different information into their databases, and that each operator tends to have CDR that look different.¹³⁸

173. As regards the generation of CDR, they can be produced for billing and tax purposes, as well as for legal purposes, which is the reason why they need to be as accurate and reliable as possible.¹³⁹ Ghislain N'Douba further indicated that the generation of such data is common to all telephone companies in the CAR, since their business model is always based on this data.¹⁴⁰ Importantly, he also explained that the collection of data for billing purposes is different from litigation or legal purposes.¹⁴¹ The CDR produced for invoicing purposes contain information that is limited to what is necessary for the client, omitting certain details such as the location of the call.¹⁴²
174. As regards their electronic format, CDR can be transmitted to the requesting party in an Excel, text or readable format, or in their raw or binary form. This raw form cannot be altered by either the network or the requesting party, and guarantees the authenticity of the information after the decoding process, since Excel formats can be modified.¹⁴³ A PDF version can also be provided to ensure that the Excel format contains the same data, but in order to facilitate the analysis, Excel or 'comma separated values' (the 'CSV') formats are most commonly requested.¹⁴⁴ The Chamber also notes Duncan Brown's testimony that in order to prevent a CDR file being corrupted during the analysis, best practices recommend that a copy be made before an investigator works on it. However, he also indicated that re-saving a CDR file by someone who did not produce it would not necessarily corrupt the data.¹⁴⁵ In this regard, the Chamber notes the Prosecution's submission that its CDR were obtained through a series of RFAs in text, CSV and Excel formats.¹⁴⁶

175. Ghislain N'Douba further testified on the location of the Moov cell towers, explaining that, in Bangui, in 2013 and 2014, the range of relay of the antennas was generally set at 1 to 2 kilometres in order to avoid interference between them.¹⁴⁷ Outside of Bangui, the range can reach up to 20 kilometres but may still vary based on geographical and meteorological conditions.¹⁴⁸ Each cell site may be divided into sectors, each of which has an antenna¹⁴⁹ that transmits its signal over a certain area and direction in an attempt to provide the best server coverage.¹⁵⁰ The angle or degree at which the antenna on the cell tower is pointed is known as an azimuth.¹⁵¹ All companies have information on the areas covered by each antenna, for both technical and commercial reasons.¹⁵² Even when not being used, a handset communicates regularly with the network so that it knows at all times where the telephone is located.¹⁵³ As to cell site items, the Chamber notes Duncan Brown's evidence that networks typically maintain a separate cell site information database that will be used for cell site planning and should be updated with any changes to the cells or cell sites.¹⁵⁴
176. The Chamber further notes that handsets normally connect to the strongest signal that is best for establishing communications,¹⁵⁵ and that CDR from all telecommunications companies always reflect the cell site or sector that was actually used to make or receive a call.¹⁵⁶ It is also possible that, in certain conditions, there exists an overlap in coverage so that a CDR can show that a telephone was connected to a different cell while remaining on the same spot.¹⁵⁷ The Chamber notes Ghislain N'Douba's testimony that this is not necessarily a deviation that would call into question the reliability of the data contained in the CDR.¹⁵⁸ The serving cell for a particular call is actually not always the closest one geographically to that handset.¹⁵⁹ Depending on the technology used by a telecommunications company, the size of the area covered by a cell may vary,¹⁶⁰ but the Chamber notes that, normally, in urban centres, deviations are considerably smaller as opposed to rural areas, where there are not that many antennas.¹⁶¹

177. Furthermore, as a result of coverage overlap, other neighbouring cells can provide service in the event that a cell fails because of power shortages or damage to the hardware,¹⁶² or because of saturation or overloading at a given moment.¹⁶³ Ghislain N'Douba also explained that if a call that is underway happens to be transferred, only the initial cell covering a certain area will appear in a CDR, not the cell to which it was ultimately transferred.¹⁶⁴ Additionally, in cases of congestion, if no channel is available, the call will then start already from another cell – even if the caller is geographically closer to the antenna of the cell which would normally provide service –, and that is the cell that will appear in a CDR.¹⁶⁵
178. Duncan Brown also explained that even if a CDR shows that a handset used a specific cell to place a call, no expert can pinpoint where the handset was specifically located within the extent of coverage of the cell used.¹⁶⁶ This means that a person could be located several kilometres away from that cell site location.¹⁶⁷

179. Moreover, the Chamber notes the testimony of Duncan Brown in relation to the issue of attribution, who indicated the existence of a series of elements that are relevant for the potential determination of phone ownership or usage which may be considered as part of an attribution process.¹⁶⁸ Attribution relies on a combination of elements, and some carry a greater weight than others.¹⁶⁹ Duncan Brown indicated that some elements¹⁷⁰ can be analysed or interpreted without the assistance of an expert and in light of other evidence available before it.¹⁷¹ It may be possible to conclusively attribute a phone number even in the absence of a technical analysis, although the strength of that conclusion would depend on the available evidence and the circumstances of each of these attribution elements.¹⁷²
180. The attribution process does not require that all elements be verified, but it will be ultimately strengthened if they all point in the same direction and corroborate each other, although no single element would provide an absolute attribution.¹⁷³ Certain aspects of the attribution process can show an indirect association rather than a direct attribution.¹⁷⁴ At the same time, attention must be paid to potential elements of dis-attribution, in other words, evidence that weakens a potential attribution.¹⁷⁵ Furthermore, however strong an overall attribution may be, it can only establish who is likely to be the ‘usual holder’ or ‘primary user’ of a particular

handset and can never determine who actually had the telephone ‘in hand’ at a particular time or for any specific communication.¹⁷⁶

181. The Chamber will now address the Ngaïssona Defence’s submissions concerning the authenticity and reliability of the Prosecution CDR Material.
182. The Chamber is not convinced by the Ngaïssona Defence’s arguments that the Prosecution CDR Material is not authentic. The Chamber has no reason to doubt that the CDR and cell site items obtained from the respective networks correspond to what was requested by the Prosecution in its RFAs, nor the validity of the respective chains of custody as reflected in the metadata. Furthermore, the Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence questions the authenticity of the Prosecution CDR Material by referring to the lack of factual or expert testimony on the nature, authorship and process by which the CDR were generated. However, the Chamber is of the view that these submissions appear to concern rather whether the Prosecution CDR Material can be deemed sufficiently reliable or accurate, as well as the manner in which the Chamber may or should interpret them.¹⁷⁷ In addition, the Chamber considers in this instance that the potential disparities in formats of the CDR or the fact that some may have been generated for billing, tax or litigation purposes do not have an impact overall on the authenticity of the CDR. In this regard, the Chamber is of the view that these differences do not necessarily mean that some CDR ‘are more genuine’ or more authentic than others.
183. Moreover, the Chamber understands from the evidence of Ghislain N’Douba and Duncan Brown that CDR and cell site items can be generally presumed reliable, having regard to the fact that they contain information that was automatically generated and that their accuracy serves the networks’ best interests, the manner in which they were stored and transmitted without evidence of tampering, and the involvement of persons with sufficient knowledge or technical expertise in the production process of the CDR. However, this presumption can be rebutted by the parties, for instance by showing specific examples of irregularities in the collection, storing, formatting and/or transmission of the evidence.¹⁷⁸

184. The Chamber considers that it is sufficiently informed about the process generally involved in the production of CDR and cell site items, despite only having received evidence related to the material provided by Moov.¹⁷⁹ In its view, additional information about the procedures at Orange and Telecel is not necessary in this instance to appreciate the process in which CDR and cell site items are produced generally or to presume their reliability.¹⁸⁰
185. The Chamber therefore rejects the Ngaïssona Defence's submissions on the lack of authenticity and reliability of the CDR and cell site items.¹⁸¹
186. That being said, the Chamber considers that generally the probative value of the CDR and cell site items is low and will rely on them, if at all, taking into account the submission of the parties and all of the available evidence in its holistic approach.
187. The Chamber will now turn to its conclusions on the issues of attribution, existence of communications and content thereof, as well as the geographic location of interlocutors.
188. Based on the testimonies of Ghislain N'Douba and Duncan Brown, the Chamber considers that CDR alone are insufficient to conclusively attribute a phone number to an individual. Rather, additional extrinsic evidence is necessary to demonstrate attribution. In this regard, the Chamber notes that sometimes witnesses provided phone numbers in statements or during testimony, or that phone numbers were discovered as being saved or registered as

¹⁸⁰ The Chamber notes that MTN is a company that is based in Cameroon. Given the possibility that different regulations or practices concerning the collection of CDR may apply, compared to the CAR, the Chamber cannot pronounce itself on the authenticity or reliability of CAR-OTP-2103-0675.

contacts in a specific handset belonging to an individual.¹⁸² Unless the witnesses themselves gave or recognised a phone number, further information may be needed to determine attribution.

189. Relatedly, the Chamber also considers that the CDR alone are not conclusive as to whether a communication occurred between specific individuals. In certain instances, witnesses admitted or refuted having placed a phone call when confronted with a CDR.¹⁸³ The Chamber also understands from the evidence before it that it may have been possible that a handset was shared by more than one person, that a call was made through another phone number or received by someone else who also had access to that particular handset.
190. Furthermore, the Chamber considers that in the event a CDR shows that a call was placed between individuals, that evidence alone cannot definitively prove that said individuals effectively engaged in a conversation. Conversely, an absence of CDR evidence does not exclude the possibility that a communication actually took place by other means or devices. Consequently, CDR alone also cannot depict with accuracy the frequency of communications between individuals. Similarly, the length of a call alone is not necessarily reflective of a conversation taking place.
191. As to the content of phone calls, CDR themselves do not offer information thereon, but must be read together with the witness's testimony about said phone call. If no witness provided evidence about the existence of a phone call, no conclusion can be drawn on the content by solely relying on the CDR.
192. Lastly, having regard to the limitations mentioned by Ghislain N'Douba and Duncan Brown discussed above, the CDR and cell site items alone cannot conclusively show a person's exact geographic location.
193. In light of the above, the Chamber will assess the CDR and cell site items, if at all, on a case-by-case basis, depending on the inference sought by the parties, having regard to the totality of the evidence before it, as referenced in the following sections of this judgment.

¹⁸³ See section IV. below.

2. Assessment of individual witnesses' credibility

i. General considerations

194. The testimonial evidence in the present case consists of: the testimony of 37 witnesses given viva voce before the Chamber; the prior recorded testimony of 61 number of witnesses introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules; and the prior recorded testimony of 77 number of witnesses introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(b), (c) or (d) of the Rules.
195. As recalled, a total of 98 witnesses testified live before the Chamber in the present case.¹⁸⁴ On a number of occasions, the Chamber allowed the introduction, under Rule 68(3) of the Rules, of the prior recorded testimony of some of these witnesses who testified live before it and did not object to such introduction – with both parties having the opportunity to examine them in court. In these instances, the recorded statement complements and forms an integral part of the witness's viva voce testimony, and the Chamber has accordingly considered the prior recorded testimony together with and in the light of the witness's testimony given in court, and vice versa.
196. Further, the Chamber allowed the introduction, pursuant to Rule 68(2)(b), (c) or (d) of the Rules, of the prior recorded testimony of a total of further 77 witnesses.¹⁸⁵ The Chamber has assessed these for the purpose of the present judgment, together with all the other evidence submitted and discussed at trial. Besides the other relevant considerations generally applicable to the assessment of testimonial evidence as set out below, in its evaluation of the prior recorded testimony introduced under Rule 68(2)(b) or (c) of the Rules, the Chamber also considered that the witnesses did not testify before the court and that the non-tendering party did not have the opportunity to examine them. Like with any other type of evidence submitted before it, the Chamber has considered the arguments made by the participants concerning the relevance and probative value of this testimonial evidence made in the course

197. For the purposes of its assessment of the reliability of any witness's testimony, the Chamber considered a number of different factors, including the richness of details and coherence of the narrative provided by the witness, as well as the coherence of the testimony with other evidence before the Chamber.
198. The Chamber has also considered the coherence between in-court testimony and their prior accounts in relation to the same facts. In particular, the Chamber notes that throughout the trial, witnesses who testified fully live before the Chamber have often been asked questions in relation to prior accounts they gave in other contexts. Prior accounts were typically put to witnesses in two distinct situations: (i) when a witness declared themselves unable to respond to a question, in which case a prior account was used to refresh their memory; and (ii) in case of an alleged discrepancy between in-court testimony and a prior account.
199. In both cases, the witnesses were then given an opportunity to express themselves on the accuracy and truthfulness of their prior account, and the relevant part of such account, as read out in court, was incorporated into the testimony.¹⁸⁶ In case of a discrepancy between an in-court testimony and a prior account, the Chamber has carefully considered the content and circumstances in which such prior account had been made, including, but not limited to, its context, purpose and the (expected) level of details, as well as any explanation for such discrepancy as provided by the witness in court.
200. Amongst the relevant factors in the Chamber's assessment of testimonial evidence is also the consideration whether and to what extent the witness is, or is not, in position to provide certain information and the source of their knowledge.¹⁸⁷ This is particularly the case in those instances where the Chamber is faced with competing versions of events, and therefore has to determine which evidence it considers more probative.¹⁸⁸

201. The Chamber also took into account the individual circumstances of the witness, including their relationship to the accused, age, the provision of assurances against self-incrimination, indication of bias against the accused or lack thereof, as well as motives for telling the truth.¹⁸⁹ The Chamber considers that witnesses who suffered trauma or were children at the time of the events may also have had difficulty in providing a coherent and complete account, and the Chamber made appropriate allowance for imprecisions or contradictions.¹⁹⁰ The Chamber was also mindful and taken due account of the fact that, given the passage of time, the memory of some witnesses may have faded with regard to certain details.¹⁹¹
202. Further factors which might also have an influence on the Chamber's assessment of evidence given by witnesses who testified live are its immediate impression of the witness during their testimony, the witness's demeanour and bearing when testifying in court, willingness to respond to questions and spontaneity of their answers when responding.¹⁹²
203. Finally, the Chamber clarifies that the considerations expressed above can by no means be considered an exhaustive list of factors, or a 'check-list' of requirements for a witness to be relied upon. Any assessment of testimonial evidence, like of any other type of evidence, is in fact dependent on the specific circumstances at hand. Each claim made by a witness is assessed individually, while, at the same time, considering, holistically, the entire body of evidence available to the Chamber. Accordingly, the same witness may be reliable in one part of their testimony, but not in another.¹⁹³

ii. Specific credibility assessments

204. The Chamber considered that not all the witnesses who provided evidence in this case required an assessment of the credibility of their evidence, separate to the holistic assessment made, in any event, in the context of the evidentiary analysis below.¹⁹⁴

205. Below, the Chamber sets forth its general considerations with respect to some specific witnesses to the extent that the Chamber considered that the nature and extent of their testimonies, or the volume of issues relating to credibility and reliability, necessitated a more detailed analysis.¹⁹⁵ The Chamber emphasises that these assessments were based on the totality of the evidence before the Chamber. These must be read in conjunction with the evidentiary analysis further below in the present judgment. Indeed, specific aspects affecting the credibility of a number of witnesses and the relevance of their testimony to the Chamber deciding on the charges against the accused are addressed, as appropriate, in the relevant evidentiary analysis further below.

a. High-level Insiders

i. P-0306

206. P-0306, a former Anti-Balaka, testified fully live with in-court protective measures,¹⁹⁶ and with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.¹⁹⁷
207. P-0306 was a civilian who led a self-defence group in Bouca in 2013 and joined the Anti-Balaka in Gobere in 2013, participated in the attacks in September 2013, including the attack on Bouca, and then advanced with his group to Bangui to participate in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. At the time of his testimony, P-0306 was in prison in Bangui.¹⁹⁸
208. The Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence rely on limited parts of P-0306's evidence.¹⁹⁹ At the same time, the Ngaïssona Defence submits that evidence before the Chamber shows that P-0306 was a 'rogue, violent, and uncontrollable element'.²⁰⁰ It alleges that P-0306 had reasons to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona, fabricated evidence, and was coached to do so.²⁰¹ It submits that P-0306's account evolved from no mention of Mr Ngaïssona in 2018 to heavily incriminating him in 2019.²⁰²

¹⁹⁶ P-0306: T-064; T-065; T-066; T-067; T-068; Decision on the Prosecution Requests for In-Court Protective Measures for 73 Trial Witnesses, 9 March 2021, ICC-01/14-01/18-906-Conf-Exp, confidential ex parte, only available to the Prosecution and the VWU (confidential redacted version notified the same date; public redacted version notified on 19 April 2021, ICC-01/14-01/18-906-Red) (the 'Decision on In-Court Protective Measures'), paras 33-34, p. 41. The Chamber notes that P-0306 was granted in-court protective measures, including use of pseudonym, face and voice distortion. The Chamber further notes that he testified extensively about his and his group's activities and movements in advance of and during the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. Therefore, a significant portion of his testimony may tend to identify him to the public. For these reasons, and balancing the interests of the publicity of the proceedings, the Chamber has adopted the following approach. The Chamber has referred to his pseudonym when recalling his testimony. On occasions where he testified about his own conduct and where it may identify him, the Chamber has referred to him in third person, namely, as a witness who testified about 'Andjilo' and his group. This particularly concerns P-0306's evidence about his meeting with Yvon Konaté.

209. The Ngaïssona Defence raises several inconsistencies in P-0306's testimony.²⁰³ In particular, it submits that P-0306's 'narrative on the Bouca attack' 'diverges from other witnesses' accounts concerning the timing and circumstances of the onset of the fighting.²⁰⁴ It submits that P-0306's evidence concerning Mr Ngaïssona sending delegations to convince him to go to Bangui lacked credibility and gave an impression of a pre-rehearsed narrative, lacking the details and nuances expected from a witness who lived through the events.²⁰⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-0306's account of Mr Ngaïssona giving military instructions also lacked credibility, was 'remarkably vague', and exemplifies P-0306's exaggerated and uncorroborated claims about Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁶
210. At the outset, the Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence's submissions about P-0306 being rogue, violent and an uncontrollable person did not feature in the assessment of the credibility of his evidence below. In the view of the Chamber, such character traits have no meaningful relation with the credibility of the information provided by a witness; they also do not indicate a tendency to lie on oath.
211. Bearing this in mind and having reviewed it in light of the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments, the Chamber finds that P-0306's testimony is, nonetheless, generally credible. P-0306 had firsthand information about the participation of his group in the attacks on Bouca and Bangui, and was forthcoming and appeared sincere about the details of his own involvement. P-0306 recognised himself in a video saying that they 'no longer want any Arabs' or 'Goula' in the CAR,²⁰⁷ and explained the contents of this video as well as the characters featured in it.²⁰⁸
212. Further, the Chamber considers that P-0306 did not show a tendency to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona at all costs and therefore his testimony did not reflect a bias against Mr Ngaïssona or the Anti-Balaka generally. For example, when asked how he and his group armed, P-0306 did not implicate Mr Ngaïssona in the supply of weapons and described how he obtained his AK-47 and ammunition from the Seleka that he killed.²⁰⁹ P-0306 was also clear that he only got to know Mr Ngaïssona as the ‘general coordinator’ when they met in Bangui in 2014.²¹⁰ Related to the allegations that Mr Ngaïssona provided money to the elements during their advance to Bangui before 5 December 2013, P-0306 said that while money was promised to him and his group, they did not receive it.²¹¹ Similarly, in the context of the allegations that FACA members trained civilian elements prior to the attack on Bangui, P-0306, when asked about being trained to use weapons, said that ‘[n]obody’ taught them, they simply observed what needed to be done to pull the trigger and do whatever they observed others doing, and ‘simply proceeded by observation and imitation’.²¹²

213. In the view of the Chamber, P-0306 was clear when he could not provide precise details and admitted to forgetting exact dates. For example, P-0306, when asked how many people accompanied Konaté when the latter came to meet him, said that they were numerous but that he could not provide ‘a precise figure’ of people.²¹³ P-0306, when asked about the size of his group, said that it was ‘difficult to give [...] a number of people who were fighting’.²¹⁴ P-0306, asked about when his group arrived close to Bangui in 2013, said that they remained there ‘for about a month’ before December but that he could not be ‘very specific as to the date on which [they] arrived’.²¹⁵

214. Nonetheless, the Chamber noted that certain portions of his testimony were not consistent with other evidence received by the Chamber. However, in its view and in any event, these inconsistencies were not such that they rendered his testimony wholly unreliable. For example, P-0306 testified about having met Konaté in 2013 and participating in the attack on Bangui with him,²¹⁶ but then did not recognise an individual in a photograph which, according to the Ngaïssona Defence, shows Konaté.²¹⁷ On occasion, his testimony suggests that P-0306 met Konaté in Bouca,²¹⁸ and he acknowledged that he had forgotten the exact dates on which he met Konaté.²¹⁹ P-0306 provided evidence about Ngremangou's involvement in the events,²²⁰ and qualified that he heard about Ngremangou only when his group was about to enter Bangui.²²¹

215. Furthermore, in the view of the Chamber, none of the inconsistencies raised by the Ngaïssona Defence were such that threw into question his first-hand account of participating in the attacks on Bouca and Bangui. In this regard, the Chamber notes that other witnesses testified about the involvement of P-0306's group in these attacks and that the Chamber was in a position to assess the veracity of the details provided by P-0306. The same was true of the purported military instructions by Mr Ngaïssona concerning the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. The Chamber further considered that the alleged inconsistencies concerning his participation in the attack on Bouca were minor and otherwise explainable by the passage of time and the context of the conflict situation.
216. Having assessed P-0306's testimony about the notes he provided to the Prosecution,²²² the Chamber considers that these notes did not render his evidence wholly unreliable. At most, his testimony regarding these notes reflected a lack of understanding of legal procedure. The Chamber notes that P-0306 appeared to have drawn some of these notes as a memory aid 'to jog [his] memory' and, being illiterate, prepared with the assistance of someone else, thinking that they could 'serve as evidence whenever necessary'.²²³ It was clear to the

When asked further about Konaté, P-0306 insisted that he knew Konaté 'very well' and that they even lived together 'during the events' (see T-067, p. 38, line 18 – p. 39, line 7). Later in his testimony, P-0306 recognised Yvon Konaté in a compilation shown to him (see also footnotes 2876, 5944 below).

Chamber that, in making these notes, P-0306 did not fully understand the need to keep track of dates and sequence of events adequately for proper legal scrutiny. This did not reflect negatively on the credibility of the rest of his claims; however, they do render these notes unreliable for the purposes of drawing any factual conclusions. Accordingly, the Chamber has not relied on the contents of these notes in its evidentiary analysis below.

217. Furthermore, in the view of the Chamber, these notes did not reflect improper motives to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona nor a fabrication of evidence, or otherwise indicate that P-0306 was coached to provide evidence before the Chamber. The Chamber finds the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments in this regard entirely speculative.
218. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of P-0306's evidence on a case-by-case basis in light of other evidence before it. As regards specifically his testimony concerning Mr Ngaïssona sending delegations to bring P-0306 to Bangui and giving military instructions, the Chamber has assessed it, in the context of other evidence received by the Chamber, in its evidentiary analysis below.²²⁴

220. All parties rely on parts of the evidence provided by Brice Emotion Namsio.²²⁸ The Yekatom Defence specifically raises two issues with regard to his evidence. First, it argues that the witness's information concerning Mr Yekatom's participation in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 was not correct.²²⁹ Second, it argues that P-0446's claim that there was contact between Mr Yekatom and 'Konate' should be disregarded as it is not reflected in CDR and is inconsistent with audio-visual evidence.²³⁰
221. In the Chamber's view, Brice Emotion Namsio had first-hand knowledge about several events of interest to the Chamber and was forthcoming when providing details. He was in Zongo for some time in 2013 following the Seleka coup and crossed over to participate in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. In 2014, he assumed the role of the deputy spokesperson of the Anti-Balaka and spoke about the political organisation of the Anti-Balaka during this period, including the setting up of the military police. On occasion, he appeared to diminish his own role and attempted to dismiss the evidence concerning the Anti-Balaka's attitude towards Muslims. However, this did not diminish the fact that the Chamber found him internally consistent and coherent.
222. Having regard to the above, the Chamber concludes that Brice Emotion Namsio's testimony was generally credible. As regards the issues raised by the Yekatom Defence relating to certain other specific aspects of his evidence, as noted above, the Chamber has assessed them holistically, in light of the other evidence before it, in its evidentiary analysis below.

iii. P-0487

223. P-0487, a former FACA member and Anti-Balaka element, testified fully live with in-court protective measures,²³¹ and received Rule 74 assurances.²³²
224. P-0487 claimed to have joined Mr Yekatom's group at Yamwara in mid-December 2013 and is identified by other witnesses as having held a key role in the Anti-Balaka at the relevant time.
225. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution relies on P-0487's evidence in support of a number of key allegations relating to both accused.²³³
226. The Yekatom Defence challenges the credibility of P-0487,²³⁴ referring to him, inter alia, when arguing that there are 'testimonies in which witnesses minimise their own involvement, distort the facts, or present false accounts'.²³⁵ At the same time, it submits, inter alia, that 'P-0487's testimony contradicted P-1339's entirely' to challenge P-1339's account about his visit to procure money for weapons.²³⁶ The Yekatom Defence further relies on other limited parts of P-0487's evidence.²³⁷
227. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the testimony of P-0487 was 'unclear, inconsistent and at times entirely incredible', with the 'sole objective' of minimising his role within the Anti-Balaka,²³⁸ making the 'flagrant evidentiary shortcomings [...] so pervasive as to impugn the entirety of his testimony’, and further pointing to his bias against Mr Ngaïssona.²³⁹ It disputes, in particular, P-0487’s claims concerning (i) Mr Ngaïssona’s efforts to return François Bozizé to power and (ii) Mr Ngaïssona’s ‘secret agenda’, as well as (iii) P-0487’s refusal to join the meetings organised by Mr Ngaïssona and (iv) Mr Ngaïssona’s attempts to kill him.²⁴⁰

228. The Chamber notes that P-0487 made several claims during his examination distancing himself from the purportedly high-level role that he, according to the evidence before the Chamber, played within the Anti-Balaka, which greatly undermined the reliability of his evidence. For instance, the witness repeatedly said that he was a ‘nobody’ amongst the Anti-Balaka, a ‘real non-entity’, that he had ‘no title’ – in contrast with other testimonial and documentary evidence –, and attended Anti-Balaka meetings ‘out of curiosity’, while at the same time saying that he played a ‘strategic role’.²⁴¹ P-0487, asked about being the chief of staff of the Anti-Balaka, said that he was ‘under pressure’ to be with the Anti-Balaka and did not ‘take on the responsibilities’;²⁴² he acknowledged that he held this position but that it was ‘strategic’.²⁴³ P-0487, when asked if he ever provided military advice to Mr Yekatom, said that he could not fulfil that role and that he ‘was too lowly with elements’ without elaborating further.²⁴⁴

229. The Chamber was also not persuaded by the witness’s answers when he was confronted with information contained in contemporary notes of his, from which he tried to distance himself by saying that he wrote those notes ‘out of sheer pride’.²⁴⁵ The Chamber considers that the witness was evasive, contradictory, and attempted to minimise his role within the Anti-Balaka to an extent that put into question the entirety of his account.

230. Further, when considering P-0487's evidence with regard to Mr Yekatom and Mr Ngaïssona, the Chamber notes that the witness indicated several times that both of them wanted to kill him, and that Mr Ngaïssona was involved in a plan to kill him, without being able to provide further details when asked about it.²⁴⁶ The witness also provided on several occasions evidence against Mr Ngaïssona which the Chamber considers to be based on speculation and hearsay.²⁴⁷
231. The Chamber also considered that evidence about his own role in the Anti-Balaka stood out in contrast with the evidence received from other witnesses whom the Chamber finds credible. P-0487, when asked about his role during meetings at Yamwara, in relation to P-1839's evidence, repeated that he was 'nobody amongst the Balaka', 'really a nobody', that he had 'no responsibilities' or 'decision-making authority' and that he 'did not make any decisions'; P-0487 deflected the responsibility to take care of the elements to Ngremangou.²⁴⁸ P-0487 did not recall having been part of the meeting where Mr Yekatom's group discussed moving from Yamwara to the PK9-Mbaïki axis and said that they 'did not have any meetings in Yamwara'.²⁴⁹
232. In the Chamber's view, the number and nature of the inconsistencies in P-0487's account, as well as his demeanour and evasiveness in the courtroom, rendered his testimony wholly unreliable, especially when assessed holistically with the evidence of other witnesses that place him in a key role during the relevant period. Consequently, the Chamber has not relied on P-0487 for the purposes of determining any factual allegations.

233. Joachim Kokaté, a former FACA member, self-proclaimed Anti-Balaka supporter and key political figure at the time of the events, testified fully live without in-court protective measures,²⁵⁰ with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.²⁵¹
234. The Prosecution and the Yekatom Defence cited to parts of Joachim Kokaté's evidence in support of their arguments.²⁵² The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the Chamber cannot reasonably rely on Joachim Kokaté's testimony to convict Mr Ngaïssona because besides (i) his proven role in corrupting at least 14 witnesses in another case and (ii) his reputation as 'a person who tends to lie', (iii) his testimony is replete with contradictions.²⁵³ The Ngaïssona Defence submits, in particular, that these contradictions relate to, inter alia, his and Mr Ngaïssona's purported participation in meetings in Cameroon, Mr Ngaïssona financing the Anti-Balaka movement, Joachim Kokaté's involvement in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 and attempts to destabilise and overthrow the CAR government.²⁵⁴ The Ngaïssona Defence also refers to Joachim Kokaté's contradictory responses when confronted with Trial Chamber VII's findings in relation to him, and, generally, to his 'overall demeanour during testimony, exhibiting defensiveness, evasiveness and visible unrest'.²⁵⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence further submits that Joachim Kokaté is involved, together with other 'key witnesses', in a 'pattern of interference' with the underlying plan to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona.²⁵⁶
235. At the outset, the Chamber takes note of Trial Chamber VII's findings in relation to Joachim Kokaté's involvement in influencing witnesses to give false testimony in another case before this Court, in particular that Joachim Kokaté (i) participated in a meeting with witnesses in that case in which he ‘reassured them that they would receive money and be able to go to Europe’;²⁵⁷ and (ii) approached an individual with the suggestion that he testify ‘as a soldier’ in the case and promising in return ‘that if he testified he would be relocated to Europe’, while instructing the individual not to reveal to the Court that he (Joachim Kokaté) had put the witness in contact with the defence in that case.²⁵⁸

236. The Chamber emphasises that these findings by a different chamber do not, as such and by themselves, pre-determine the assessment of the witness’s testimony before it. Especially, the Chamber is of the view that it must evaluate the witness’s evidence as provided under oath in the circumstances of the current case, and in conjunction with and compared to other evidence provided to the Chamber.²⁵⁹
237. Having assessed Joachim Kokaté’s testimony overall in this case, in light of the Ngaïssona Defence arguments, the Chamber concludes that the witness’s testimony is, nonetheless, generally credible.
238. The Chamber notes that Joachim Kokaté was himself present in key meetings in 2013 and personally interacted with individuals of relevance to the present case and therefore was in a position to provide firsthand information about them. The witness also distinguished the sources of his knowledge.
239. In the Chamber’s view, the inconsistencies pointed out by the Ngaïssona Defence are not such that they would render his account unreliable.
240. First, as regards Joachim Kokaté’s and Mr Ngaïssona’s purported participation in meetings in Cameroon,²⁶⁰ the Chamber notes that the witness was asked to clarify whether Mr Ngaïssona was outside of the Hilton hotel or in Bozizé’s suite; to which Joachim Kokaté responded that after being received by ‘President Bozizé’ and leaving his suite, he saw Mr Ngaïssona and ‘many other people’ in the bar of the hotel on the ground floor.²⁶¹ When confronted with the fact that in 2018 he had stated that he met Bernard Mokom during the second meeting at the CAR embassy in Yaoundé yet testified that he actually saw Bernard Mokom when he went down after the first meeting at the hotel Hilton, Joachim Kokaté responded that when he went down from the suite, he saw Mr Ngaïssona and other people, and that he thought that this was the first time he physically saw Bernard Mokom.²⁶²

241. Second, in relation to Mr Ngaïssona financing the Anti-Balaka movement, the Chamber notes that Joachim Kokaté testified, inter alia, that Mr Ngaïssona was determined to see François Bozizé come to power with him and that Mr Ngaïssona told the witness that he organised and coordinated military actions in the field.²⁶³ Joachim Kokaté, when asked whether he spoke to Mr Ngaïssona about financing of the military wing of FROCCA, said that they did not talk about finance.²⁶⁴ However, Joachim Kokaté also said that Mr Ngaïssona organised and met Anti-Balaka in the field, and they reported to him; and that in the statements in Bangui, Mr Ngaïssona said himself that he had spent a lot for the Anti-Balaka, which he had helped finance.²⁶⁵
242. When confronted with his prior interview of 2018,²⁶⁶ Joachim Kokaté explained that he had not changed his statement and that he believed that he had said that Mr Ngaïssona told him during some telephone conversations that he was financing the movement, and that he had given in his testimony a concrete example of what various Anti-Balaka leaders were saying to the transitional head of state when they met at the presidency, which was that it was Mr Ngaïssona who took care of them, funded them and organised them.²⁶⁷ The Chamber notes that the witness had indeed referred to this in previous days of his testimony.²⁶⁸ When confronted with the fact that he had not mentioned this in his 2018 interview and that it was also not mentioned in the notes taken during the meeting with Catherine Samba-Panza, Joachim Kokaté indicated that during his questioning by the calling party, he had provided details as to how Mr Ngaïssona financed the Anti-Balaka and that the Anti-Balaka elements themselves had made that statement to the transitional president in the presence of her cabinet.²⁶⁹

²⁶⁶ The Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence counsel indicated that in 2018, Joachim Kokaté told the Prosecution investigators that he did not know how the military wing was financed and that it was Mr Ngaïssona who could tell them about the financing, which contradicted the witness's testimony. The Presiding Judge, however, indicated that according to the interview transcripts, the witness also said in 2018, 'Mr Ngaïssona told me on several occasions over the phone that they are meeting there. He is able to tell you about the military wing, the financing of this wing and everything. I think he is the man [...] or this is the man', which according to the Presiding Judge also had to be put to the witness for completeness (see P-0801: T-037, p. 79, line 17 – p. 81, line 12).

243. Third, regarding the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, and when asked why in 2018 he had not mentioned a discussion in Yaoundé in 2013 in which Mr Ngaïssona said that his troops would attack and, by contrast, had stated that he had not met any soldiers in Cameroon except for one colonel, Joachim Kokaté explained that he did not mention any meeting with soldiers but did talk about having met soldiers and civilians in exile in Cameroon and also mentioned the meeting with Mr Ngaïssona in which he said that ‘the attack was imminent’.²⁷⁰ Joachim Kokaté indicated that ‘to [his] mind, there is no inconsistency’.²⁷¹
244. The Chamber further notes that when asked in court about an alleged inconsistency in his account, Joachim Kokaté explained that during his interview, he had answered the questions put by the Prosecution and asked, ‘if during the trial there are new elements that come to mind, why shouldn’t I talk about them?’.²⁷² He added: ‘I have come here to help in the quest for the truth about what happened in our country so that, together, people can desist from having [...] the kind of conduct they had before. You see, for example, I’m here with you now. You are putting questions to me, and I can answer. You have talked about inconsistencies, but I know that I am not inconsistent’.²⁷³
245. The Chamber also considers that the Ngaïssona Defence’s allegations of Joachim Kokaté being involved in a scheme to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona²⁷⁴ are based on pure speculation, and, without more, do not affect the credibility of his testimony.²⁷⁵

246. However, the Chamber notes that Joachim Kokaté clearly distanced himself and downplayed his own involvement in certain aspects relevant to this case. For example, when confronted with a document dated December 2013 stating that he was the military coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, Joachim Kokaté claimed that his signature had been forged and that he had never seen that document; in relation to another document dated January 2014, purportedly drafted by him, Joachim Kokaté said that he had not seen this document and claimed that it was fraudulent.²⁷⁶ Joachim Kokaté also distanced himself from any involvement with the FROCCA and being able to provide information about it, despite his purported association with this movement.²⁷⁷ Similarly, he also appeared to downplay his knowledge of the attack on Bangui of 5 December 2013.²⁷⁸
247. In the Chamber's view, neither of these aspects undermined the credibility of the remainder of the witness's testimony. The Chamber has considered it within the context of other evidence before it. As regards the specific aspects of his testimony concerning his participation in meetings in Cameroon and his phone call with Mr Ngaïssona concerning the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, the Chamber has assessed them, in the context of other evidence received by the Chamber, further below.²⁷⁹

249. Alfred Legrand Ngaya was the director-general of youth in the ministry of youth and sports from 2006 to 2014²⁸³ and during part of that time worked with Mr Ngaïssona, who was the minister at the beginning of 2013.²⁸⁴ The witness testified about the formation, structure and elements of the Anti-Balaka and about his interactions with Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom.
250. All parties rely on parts of Alfred Legrand Ngaya's evidence in support of their arguments.²⁸⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence argues that Alfred Legrand Ngaya's email exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona 'were wholly unrelated to military action or the Anti-Balaka movement'²⁸⁶ and do not indicate 'a so-called military Plan Stratégique'²⁸⁷ or Mr Ngaïssona's coordination of FROCCA.²⁸⁸
251. Having reviewed his evidence, the Chamber finds Alfred Legrand Ngaya's evidence generally credible. He was knowledgeable about the context and political events in the CAR during the relevant period. He directly interacted with Mr Ngaïssona and was generally forthcoming about his exchanges with him. The witness appeared to be generally able to distinguish between the sources of his knowledge. For example, he considered that he was not 'the authorised person' to talk about Mr Yekatom because all that he could say about him were 'things that I learned from rumours'.²⁸⁹

252. The Chamber notes that Alfred Legrand Ngaya appeared to present a favourable and passive view of Mr Ngaïssona's role in 2014, which often led him to contradict himself. For example, he stated not being aware that anyone provided money to the Anti-Balaka.²⁹⁰ At the same time, according to him, Mr Ngaïssona supported the Anti-Balaka on his return with his 'own money' to dissuade them.²⁹¹ He did not recall if Mr Ngaïssona provided financial resources as requested, but indicated that at some point, Mr Ngaïssona sent money to him to help the Anti-Balaka in their neighbourhood and dissuade them from bothering the population.²⁹² He also thought that Mr Ngaïssona was designated as coordinator because the Anti-Balaka did not have resources to take care of themselves and Mr Ngaïssona had a reputation for being generous with money.²⁹³ He also said that Mr Ngaïssona 'had an influence on the movement because of his generosity, of doing good' and that they 'always needed him'.²⁹⁴
253. Alfred Legrand Ngaya also did not appear forthcoming as regards his email exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona. In places, he denied what is apparent from the clear text of the emails exchanged between him and Mr Ngaïssona in July and August 2013 that concern organising military actions.²⁹⁵ For example, he explained in relation to these emails that they had spoken on the phone two or three times while Mr Ngaïssona was in exile in Cameroon in 2013 and that Mr Ngaïssona would ask for news about the neighbourhood.²⁹⁶ The witness did not recall discussing the Anti-Balaka with him.²⁹⁷
254. However, in the Chamber's view, these aspects did not render his evidence wholly unreliable.

vi. P-0876

256. P-0876, a former Anti-Balaka element and member of the CAR government, testified with in-court protective measures,²⁹⁹ with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.³⁰⁰ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.³⁰¹
257. P-0876 participated in several meetings with various Anti-Balaka leaders, including Mr Yekatom, in December 2013 and until February 2014, and also represented a stream of the Anti-Balaka internationally. He held the position of Minister of Youth and Sports in the CAR transitional government as of January 2014.
258. All parties rely on parts of P-0876's evidence in support of their arguments.³⁰² The Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-0876's evidence concerning his phone call with Lin Banoukepa is uncorroborated,³⁰³ and also lists P-0876 as one of the witnesses that 'changed their evidence significantly during examination'.³⁰⁴
259. Having reviewed his testimony, the Chamber finds P-0876's evidence generally credible.

260. The Chamber notes that P-0876 was knowledgeable and forthcoming about his participation in meetings with various Anti-Balaka leaders in December 2013 to February 2014, including those that took place at Yamwara, the National Assembly and Catherine Samba-Panza's house. During the relevant time, P-0876 personally interacted with both accused and had firsthand information about a number of meetings with the various Anti-Balaka groups from end 2013 to early 2014. P-0876 was well-placed to provide informed opinions about the in-group dynamics within the Anti-Balaka during the relevant time.
261. The Chamber found that P-0876's evidence was largely consistent and coherent. The Chamber has considered that, at times, P-0876's answers were long-winding,³⁰⁵ and tending to emphasise his own role as a mediator and being the one striving for peace among the Anti-Balaka.³⁰⁶
262. The Chamber notes that P-0876 appeared unclear as regards the sequence and timing of certain events but offered clarifications during his testimony; for example, as regards the meetings and attendees at Yamwara in December 2013 and January 2014,³⁰⁷ and as regards his phone calls with Maxime Mokom, Francis Bozizé, and Lin Banoukepa.³⁰⁸ P-0876 not recalling the sequence of events perfectly did not diminish the credibility of his evidence but rather suggested that he was providing genuine, spontaneous, and un-rehearsed answers.
263. In the Chamber's view, P-0876 was able to distinguish the sources of his knowledge and was able to indicate where he did not have firsthand information.³⁰⁹

264. The Chamber has also considered the inconsistencies that appear between the evidence provided by P-0876 together with those of P-0954 and P-1858 in relation to ‘FRAP’,³¹⁰ and considers that these did not render P-0876’s evidence wholly unreliable.
265. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has considered P-0876’s evidence in light of other evidence available before it. As regards the specific aspects of his testimony concerning his phone call with Maxime Mokom and his meetings at Yamwara, the Chamber has assessed them in the context of other evidence received by the Chamber, further below.³¹¹

266. P-0884, a spokesperson of the Anti-Balaka national coordination appointed at the meeting shortly after 5 December 2013 and later deputy coordinator, testified fully live with in-court protective measures³¹² and with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.³¹³
267. The Yekatom Defence relies on certain aspects of P-0884’s evidence,³¹⁴ while arguing that he provided inconsistent testimony regarding his role following the events at Yamwara.³¹⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence argues that as a result of a ‘plan to incriminate’ Mr Ngaïssona, testimonies of ‘key witnesses’, including that of P-0884, were contaminated.³¹⁶ In particular, it argues that two months before Mr Ngaïssona’s arrest and ‘while the scheme to incriminate him was starting to materialise’, P-0884 was ‘being pressured’ by the CAR government.³¹⁷ It further submits that despite P-0884 denying such pressure, he ‘would have a reason to incriminate’ Mr Ngaïssona due to their relationship being strained from 2013 and 2014 when they both wanted to be the Anti-Balaka coordinator and to P-0884's dismissal from the movement in August 2014 by Mr Ngaïssona.³¹⁸

268. The Chamber notes that P-0884's testimony concerning the events at Yamwara is addressed in the evidentiary analysis below.³¹⁹ In relation to the Ngaïssona Defence's allegations of witness interference and contamination, the Chamber notes that there is no evidence on the case record supporting these claims and therefore considers that they are based on mere speculation and without merit.³²⁰
269. Further, the Chamber is of the view that during his testimony, the witness did not show any bias against either accused, pointing out negative and positive matters concerning both, and providing nuance and explanations about his opinions, where necessary. For example, P-0884 said that he knew Mr Ngaïssona 'very well',³²¹ and that Mr Ngaïssona was his 'elder' and he did not have the right to talk about Mr Ngaïssona's character and behaviour; P-0884 explained how they were related professionally and through their wives and that 'that was the limit' of their relations.³²² P-0884, when asked, agreed that it was his impression that Mr Ngaïssona had initially involved himself in the leadership of the Anti-Balaka to take advantage of the movement but then 'we' spoke out against this idea.³²³ P-0884 clarified that no one influenced him or spoke to him about testifying against Mr Ngaïssona.³²⁴
270. Moreover, P-0884 said that he would give advice to Mr Yekatom and said that when Mr Yekatom had not been drinking 'he was serious and really a sweetheart', but when he was drunk one would not recognise him.³²⁵

³²⁰ Moreover, the Chamber notes that in support of its argument that '[a]ccording to information circulating in Bangui in 2018 among high-ranking officials', P-0884 was 'being pressured', the Ngaïssona Defence solely refers to the content of a WhatsApp message allegedly sent by Yves Dépit to Mr Ngaïssona in October 2018 in which the former stated knowing that P-0884 was under pressure from the government but that P-0884 did not want to get intertwined and involved in discussions. In this regard, the Chamber notes that P-0884 indicated, when the message was read out to him in the courtroom, that 'no one exerted any pressure' on him (see P-0884: T-058, p. 83, lines 9-24). Further, the Chamber considers that the message, in any event and if anything, shows that P-0884 would not have given in to any pressure allegedly exerted on him. ³²⁵ P-0884: T-056, p. 16, lines 7-19.

271. The Chamber further notes that P-0884 appeared truthful, and particularly able to specify the sources of his knowledge and the limits thereof, about the actions of both accused.³²⁶
272. While the witness sometimes appeared to not directly answer the questions posed, overall, he did appear consistent and internally coherent in his in-court testimony. At the same time, the witness clearly downplayed his own involvement in the Anti-Balaka³²⁷ and tried to emphasise in court his efforts towards reconciliation in the later stages of the conflict.³²⁸ Due to his higher position within the Anti-Balaka coordination, as well as contacts with Maxime Mokom and former members of FACA also before 5 December 2013, the witness had first-hand information regarding the initial setting up and evolution of the Anti-Balaka, as well as the interactions between key members of the Anti-Balaka national coordination.
273. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has generally relied on the evidence provided by P-0884, with specific inconsistencies in his testimony pointed to by the parties being assessed, as appropriate, in the context of other evidence received by the Chamber, in the evidentiary analysis further below.

274. Jean-Jacques Demafouth, a former government official in the CAR,³²⁹ testified fully live without in-court protective measures.³³⁰
275. While not a direct insider within the Anti-Balaka, due to his various positions before, during and after the time relevant to the charges, Jean-Jacques Demafouth was well connected and proved to have vast knowledge on a variety of topics coming from various sources. He not only provided extensive information on the background to the conflict in the CAR, including the Seleka origins and objectives, but also on his observations regarding the Anti-Balaka structure, including Mr Ngaïssona's role therein, his meetings with the latter, Mr Yekatom and the Anti-Balaka elements under his control, crimes attributed to the Anti-Balaka, and the flight of Muslims in the CAR.

276. The Prosecution cites to parts of Jean-Jacques Demafouth's evidence in support of some of its allegations.³³¹
277. The Yekatom Defence argues that Jean-Jacques Demafouth's account is 'wholly unreliable' due to 'his propensity to lead serious allegations against Mr Yekatom, which 'appears to stem from personal animosity' towards him and 'a deliberate attempt to deceive the Chamber in order to exaggerate his own importance'; as a consequence of which his testimony should be disregarded.³³²
278. In particular, it disputes Jean-Jacques Demafouth's 'multiple baseless, untested and inconsistent claims', including that (i) during Catherine Samba-Panza's visit to Mbaïki on 12 February 2014, "“anti-balaka” reportedly part of RFACPP and “under Mr. Yekatom’s orders” brutally murdered one of the last Muslim civilians in Mbaïki”; (ii) Mr Yekatom controlled Boda, Boganangone and various secondary roads within those localities, and members of his group surrounded the enclave in Boda and attacked Muslims venturing out; (iii) ‘the RFACPP was responsible for the 5th December Operation’; as well as his claims concerning (iv) the structure of the Anti-Balaka and of ‘the RFACPP’.³³³ The Yekatom Defence also argues that Jean-Jacques Demafouth lied when confronted in the courtroom with accusations against him involving him in fraudulent and criminal activities.³³⁴ Further, it argues that motivated by power and to place himself at the centre of attention, Jean-Jacques

Demafoth ‘wilfully fabricat[ed] baseless, exaggerated, and entirely unsubstantiated claims, all aimed at incriminating Mr. Yekatom to the greatest extent possible’.³³⁵

279. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that the Chamber should exercise caution when assessing the reliability of Jean-Jacques Demafoth’s evidence due to his bias against François Bozizé, in respect of whom he provided evidence largely based on anonymous hearsay, and his bias against the Anti-Balaka and ‘by extension’ against Mr Ngaïssona, who he claimed sought to destabilise the transition and did not ‘even begin to implement good will vis-à-vis the DDR’.³³⁶
280. At the outset, the Chamber notes that it is undeniable from the evidence before it that Jean-Jacques Demafoth is seen as a controversial figure within the CAR who has been subject to various allegations. However, the Chamber is of the view that these allegations, in and of themselves, did not undermine the credibility of the information on the relevant facts provided by Jean-Jacques Demafoth. In particular, allegations against the witness concerning (i) embezzlement in the context of his supervision of a demobilisation programme after the 2003 crisis;³³⁷ (ii) being involved in an attack on a church during which civilians died;³³⁸ (iii) planning an alleged coup against the transitional government of Catherine Samba-Panza;³³⁹ or (iv) in fact steering the transitional government headed by Catherine Samba-Panza through his influence on her;³⁴⁰ with witnesses at times referring to him as a ‘manipulator’³⁴¹ were generally either unspecific or based on rumours.
281. Having assessed Jean-Jacques Demafoth’s testimony overall, in light of the Defence’s arguments, the Chamber concludes that the witness’s testimony is, nonetheless, generally credible. The Chamber is of the view that Jean-Jacques Demafouth was generally clearly capable of differentiating in his answers between the sources of information and his own interpretation. The Chamber did not find that he was necessarily biased against either of the accused or the Anti-Balaka in general. Jean-Jacques Demafouth was respectful to both accused when testifying about them and did not express any negative feelings. The witness was forthcoming and provided a significant number of details concerning events and interactions he was personally involved in.

282. Regarding the three purported inconsistencies pointed out by the Yekatom Defence, concerning the witness's testimony that (i) a Muslim was killed on the day of Catherine Samba-Panza's visit to Mbaïki;³⁴² (ii) Mr Yekatom controlled neighbourhoods in Bangui, the Mbaïki road and suburbs and that Anti-Balaka under his command encircled the Boda enclave;³⁴³ and (iii) Mr Yekatom controlled the area of Boeing and PK9 and was 'the one controlling the attack from that zone',³⁴⁴ the Chamber has considered them in the context of the witness's entire testimony and did not find them such as to render his entire evidence unreliable.
283. At the same time, and having regard to his evidence holistically in light of other evidence available before it, the Chamber has not relied on Jean-Jacques Demafouth's evidence concerning these three aspects.
284. Lastly, regarding his alleged 'irreconcilable assertions' about the structure of the Anti-Balaka, the Chamber notes that Jean-Jacques Demafouth explained that the police referred to the Anti-Balaka at the time as 'nébuleuse' because 'it was no longer possible to understand what was inside and [they] were not aware of the specific hierarchy', which is why they ('we') decided that FOMAC would arrest some Anti-Balaka leaders and question them to find out their structure and actions.³⁴⁵ He also testified that 'the Rambo group depended on the coordination and was a member of the coordination of Mr Ngaïssona’.³⁴⁶ The Chamber does not consider these allegations to be ‘irreconcilable’, particularly in the context of other explanations Jean-Jacques Demafouth provided,³⁴⁷ and in light of the abundant evidence on the case record on the structure and coordination of the Anti-Balaka.

285. Overall, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of Jean-Jacques Demafouth’s evidence in the context of its holistic evaluation of the evidence before it.

ix. P-2625

286. Georges Adrien Serge Poussou (hereinafter: ‘Adrien Poussou’), a journalist and former member of the CAR government, testified fully live without in-court protective measures.³⁴⁸ Adrien Poussou was subject to a summons by the Chamber³⁴⁹ and eventually took oath in September 2022,³⁵⁰ with his testimony following in January 2023.³⁵¹

287. During the relevant time, Adrien Poussou held various positions in the CAR government, including special advisor to the prime minister Nicolas Tiangaye, in charge of communication, national reconciliation and civic and democratic culture, as well as spokesperson for the prime minister’s office; and also held a position within Catherine Samba-Panza’s government. He was also a member of FROCCA and in charge of PR or communications. As such, he testified about FROCCA’s creation, objective and various meetings he attended. He also testified about the formation, structure and coordination of the Anti-Balaka, as well as about Mr Ngaïssona’s role within the movement.

³⁵¹ P-2625: T-188; T-189; T-190; T-191; T-192; T-193. At the beginning of his testimony, the witness was assisted by counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 171(5) of the Rules (see Notification of the Appointment of Mr John Philpot following the Trial Chamber’s Order to assign Counsel to Witness P-2625, 14 October 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1610, with confidential annexes I and II; Decision on the Request for clarification with respect to the mandate of counsel for P-2625, email from the Chamber, 17 January 2023, at 09:34).

288. The Prosecution cites to parts of Adrien Poussou's evidence in support of some of its allegations.³⁵² The Yekatom Defence refers to his evidence twice in support of its arguments.³⁵³
289. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that the Prosecution excessively relied on the uncorroborated insider evidence of Adrien Poussou.³⁵⁴ It further submits that his evidence is 'irreparably impugned' and should therefore be rejected in full due to his (i) clear bias against Mr Ngaïssona and the Defence, (ii) non-cooperation with the Court, and (iii) contradictory claims and overall demeanour.³⁵⁵
290. Having assessed Adrien Poussou's testimony overall, in light of the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments, the Chamber concludes that the witness's testimony is, nonetheless, generally credible. In light of his involvement in the early stages of FROCCA and within the governments of Michel Djotodia and then of Catherine Samba-Panza, Adrien Poussou had direct information about many events of relevance to the Chamber. He clearly had access to a wide variety of sources on different sides of the conflict and provided a significant amount of information. The Chamber is of the view that Adrien Poussou clearly distinguished between what he witnessed himself and what he heard about and was able to specify the source of his knowledge with sufficient detail.
291. The Chamber first turns to the Ngaïssona Defence's allegations that Adrien Poussou attempted to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona 'at all costs', and 'demonstrated a hostile, obstructive and aggressive demeanour' during his examination, often refusing to answer questions, making 'inappropriate and disparaging remarks' and using 'violent language'.³⁵⁶ Having reviewed his testimony in light of these arguments, the Chamber did not consider that Adrien Poussou was biased against Mr Ngaïssona or the Ngaïssona Defence. He indicated that he had no specific interest in Mr Ngaïssona nor in making things up about him or harming him.³⁵⁷ Also, when confronted with the fact that during his interview with the Prosecution he had not mentioned that Mr Ngaïssona led COAC together with Yambeté, signed COAC statements and participated at the PK0 rally, Adrien Poussou provided consistent and reasonable explanations which did not denote, in the Chamber's view, any hostility towards Mr Ngaïssona nor his defence counsel.³⁵⁸

292. Regarding the Ngaïssona Defence's argument that the witness often refused to answer its questions, the Chamber notes that Adrien Poussou sometimes indicated that he could not answer certain questions because he did not have the details or was not in the meetings or groups about which he was asked³⁵⁹ – which, if anything, reflected positively on the credibility of his evidence. Likewise, on various occasions, the witness said that he stood by what he had said in response to questions he had already answered.³⁶⁰ The Chamber does not attribute the witness appearing at times exasperated or insolent during his examination by the Ngaïssona Defence to having feelings of hostility towards the counsel.³⁶¹

293. The Chamber now turns to the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments that Adrien Poussou aimed to secure personal gain from his cooperation with the Court by fabricating material allegedly containing key incriminating evidence against Mr Ngaïssona which he never produced; and that once he realised he would not obtain any gain, he abruptly withdrew his cooperation.³⁶²

³⁵⁷ See e.g. P-2625: T-192, p. 14, lines 10-22; T-193, p. 72, line 25 – p. 73, line 4. The Chamber further notes that when asked about his 'motivation to testify against Mr Ngaïssona', the witness responded as follows: 'This has absolutely nothing to do with my deposition before this Chamber. May I specify that I'm not deposing against Mr Ngaïssona. I have got absolutely no interest in doing so. There were crimes that were committed in my country. And I told the investigators of the OTP the first day when we met, my wish is that the perpetrators of these crimes be punished. That's my only motivation. I do not have any animosity or a bone to pick with the Anti-Balaka.' (see P-2625: T-193, p. 107, line 18 – p. 108, line 7).

And that's important. I would prefer to have my throat slit than coming back tomorrow. ³⁶² Ngaïssona Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2736-Conf-AnxA-Corr, para. 22.

The Chamber is of the view that the efforts required to secure his testimony,³⁶³ any actions he may have taken in relation to his asylum applications,³⁶⁴ or as regards certain contemporaneous documents he may have had in his possession,³⁶⁵ did not have any impact on the credibility of his testimony.

294. Similarly, the Chamber has found irrelevant to its overall determinations any criminal allegations against the witness pointed out by the Ngaïssona Defence in court.³⁶⁶

295. Lastly, as regards the Ngaïssona Defence's allegations on Adrien Poussou's alleged contradictions, inability to specify his source of knowledge, and evasive and speculative answers, based on anonymous hearsay,³⁶⁷ the Chamber assessed the specific examples provided by the Ngaïssona Defence and considers that they did not affect the credibility of the evidence that he provided.³⁶⁸

296. Having regard to the above, the Chamber considered Adrien Poussou's evidence generally reliable and has assessed it in light of other evidence available before it.

b. Mid-level Insiders

i. P-0954

297. P-0954, a former Anti-Balaka element, testified with in-court protective measures,³⁶⁹ and with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.³⁷⁰ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.³⁷¹

298. All parties relied on parts of P-0954's testimony in support of their arguments.³⁷²

299. At the same time, the Yekatom Defence raised several challenges to the reliability of P-0954's account, referring to him, inter alia, when arguing that there are 'testimonies in which witnesses minimise their own involvement, distort the facts, or present false accounts'.³⁷³ It argues that P-0954 provided false testimony based on personal animosity towards Mr Yekatom and his self-serving interest to use the testimony 'as leverage to be released from prison in CAR'.³⁷⁴ In particular, the Yekatom Defence submits that P-0954 provided a false narrative concerning the events at Yamwara, and that his account on this aspect as well as concerning Mr Yekatom's equipment of arms is contradicted by other evidence.³⁷⁵ It also

³⁶⁹ P-0954: T-112 (no testimony); T-113 (no testimony); T-166; T-167; T-168; T-169. The Chamber notes that P-0954, who at the time was in prison in the CAR, was expected to commence his testimony on 28 March 2022. However, at the beginning of the hearing, the Chamber was informed that the witness refused to testify in the presence of the accused and the Defence, reportedly due to security concerns (see T-112). After inquiring with the participants, an ex parte hearing was conducted with the witness, in order for the Chamber to explain to the witness that the accused and the Defence have a right to be present during his examination (see T-113). claims that while the Prosecution relies on P-0954's evidence to assert that Mr Yekatom issued orders to kill Muslims, it has not been demonstrated that P-0954 ever personally saw or heard Mr Yekatom issue such orders – which the Yekatom Defence considers to be yet another example of P-0954's evidence being based on second-hand information, often stemming from anonymous hearsay and/or media reports.³⁷⁶ The Yekatom Defence further challenges P-0954's evidence concerning phone calls that he claims to have made.³⁷⁷

300. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that several witnesses, including P-0954, changed their evidence significantly during examination before the Chamber.³⁷⁸ In particular, it submits that P-0954 admitted during his oral testimony that mentioning Mr Ngaïssona as a 'financier' in his prior recorded testimony was 'perhaps an error'.³⁷⁹
301. Having reviewed it in light of the Defence's arguments, the Chamber finds that P-0954's evidence is nonetheless generally credible.
302. In the view of the Chamber, P-0954 did not have a lot of firsthand information about the charged incidents in 2013, particularly, having not participated in the preparation or the execution of the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. While P-0954 claims to have personally interacted with Mr Yekatom over the telephone during the relevant time, he appears to have qualified these interactions by distinguishing between what he had heard and what he assumed. The Chamber particularly noted that P-0954 himself also did not claim to have direct or accurate information about the events when providing information about what he did not experience himself. This reflected positively on the reliability of his testimony.
303. Nonetheless, the Chamber has borne in mind the source of his information when assessing the weight to be given to his evidence. This applies to P-0954's evidence concerning the arming and financing of Mr Yekatom's group,³⁸⁰ as well as his testimony concerning his phone call with Mr Yekatom regarding the events that took place at Yamwara on and around 24 December 2013.

304. As regards the Yekatom Defence's arguments, the Chamber finds that P-0954's evidence reflected a degree of animosity towards Mr Yekatom. In this regard, the Chamber has considered, inter alia, that P-0954 stated that Mr Yekatom considered others 'as dogs'³⁸¹ and, in court, said that Mr Yekatom 'doesn't listen', behaved 'as the good Samaritan' while in The Hague but was a 'semi-god' on the ground, and alleged that Mr Yekatom was 'after' him and had tried to kill him.³⁸² However, in the Chamber's view, these comments did not reflect a bias towards Mr Yekatom such that it affected the credibility of his evidence. In this respect, the Chamber has considered that P-0954's evidence did not show a tendency to incriminate Mr Yekatom at all costs, as he was otherwise forthcoming to the Chamber about the extent of his knowledge and the source of his information concerning Mr Yekatom. For example, the witness described one incident in which Mr Yekatom initially wanted to kill a young civilian, then however, following the witness's request to let the civilian go, 'agreed to free' him.³⁸³
305. Further, the Chamber notes that P-0954's statement and his in-court testimony are inconsistent concerning Mr Ngaïssona financing the Anti-Balaka. In his interview with the Prosecution, P-0954 stated that 'N[gaïssona], M[okom] [...] and Francis B[ozizé] financed the A[nti-Balaka] to buy weapons and ammunition'.³⁸⁴ When asked about this statement in court, P-0954 said that Mr Ngaïssona's name was 'perhaps an error' and, when asked, agreed that information in this statement as regards Mr Ngaïssona concerned 'after the meeting in the UNDP', adding that he did not know what Mr Ngaïssona was doing in Cameroon and did not 'hear his name in relation to the financing in 2013'.³⁸⁵ In the view of the Chamber, P-0954 downplayed Mr Ngaïssona's role during his in-court testimony but this did not impact the credibility of the remainder of the evidence he provided.

306. Having regard to the above, the Chamber also considers the Yekatom Defence's allegation that P-0954 gave a false account to use his testimony as leverage to be released from prison in the CAR to be speculative. The Chamber further notes that P-0954 testified in October 2022,³⁸⁶ and had been released from prison in June 2022 before his testimony.³⁸⁷ P-0954 had indicated to the Chamber in March 2022, when his testimony was initially scheduled and whilst he was still in prison, that he was concerned about his security and that of his family,³⁸⁸ and expressed concerns that 'after his testimony [he] will be taken back to prison'.³⁸⁹ P-0954 said that if he was 'outside', he could testify.³⁹⁰ However, there is no indication that P-0954 was released in order to testify before the Chamber, or that his imprisonment adversely affected how P-0954 testified in this case.
307. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of P-0954's evidence on a case-by-case basis in light of other evidence before it. As regards specific aspects of his testimony such as his phone call with Mr Yekatom in relation to the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, Mr Yekatom's involvement in the events at Yamwara, and the presence of Mr Yekatom's group at PK9 and checkpoints on the PK9-Mbaïki axis, the Chamber has assessed them, in the context of other evidence received by the Chamber, in the evidentiary analysis further below.³⁹¹

In the view of the Chamber, had he believed – as the Yekatom Defence claims – that his testimony could have a positive impact on the domestic justice system, he would not have refused to testify before the Chamber while still in prison in the CAR.

assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.³⁹³ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.³⁹⁴

309. The Prosecution places limited reliance on P-0965's evidence.³⁹⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-0965 is 'an impostor' and that he 'lied on the stand on several key facts, such that he cannot be relied upon'.³⁹⁶ It raises issues concerning when he joined Andjilo's group and when he became his 'secretary'.³⁹⁷ It points to P-0306's evidence in which he did not recognise P-0965's name and 'identified someone else as his secretary'; and also points to other witnesses, who also did not recognise P-0965's name.³⁹⁸ The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the uncertainty about the foundation of all of P-0965's knowledge means that his testimony should be disregarded in its entirety.³⁹⁹ It further argues that since P-0965 lacks overall credibility, his claims have no probative value, including (i) his evidence concerning the notebook provided by him, supposedly containing information on the gathering and leaders in Gobre, ⁴⁰⁰ (ii) his claims that Mr Ngaïssona 'had the means to buy weapons and was the Anti-Balaka financier', and (iii) his claims that Mr Ngaïssona 'gave instructions to the Anti-Balaka gathered at the hill in advance of the 5 December attack'. ⁴⁰¹
310. Having reviewed his testimony in light of these arguments, the Chamber concludes that P-0965 is, nonetheless, generally credible. The Chamber notes that it is not contested, and his testimony leaves no doubt, that P-0965 was a member of the Anti-Balaka within Andjilo's group. P-0965 provides a firsthand account of his experiences and a significant number of details regarding the preparation and his participation in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. P-0965 appeared generally knowledgeable about the groups and individuals who had been in Gobere, even though he himself was not present there. P-0965's evidence concerning the advance of the Anti-Balaka groups to Bangui before 5 December 2013 and how the attack unfolded is largely coherent and consistent with other evidence received before it.

311. At the same time, as set out below, the Chamber noted inconsistencies in his testimony that, in its view, were not such that rendered his testimony wholly unreliable.
312. First, as regards the question and the timeline of P-0965's role as Andjilo's 'secretary', the Chamber notes that while P-0965 used this term to describe his role,⁴⁰² his functions more closely resembled that of an attendant and informal scribe than a secretary in its traditional sense. In any event, the Chamber considered that the reliability of P-0965's entire account did not rest on his formal role or appointment as Andjilo's secretary.
313. Second, as regards the notebook provided by P-0965 in which there is information that he claimed to have copied from Konaté's notes in December 2014,⁴⁰³ the challenges raised by the Ngaïssona Defence in court also did not affect his credibility overall. P-0965 provided adequate explanations about the source of information in the notebook and consistently confirmed that it was not based on his searches in Maxime Mokom's computer.⁴⁰⁴ The Chamber has also assessed the notebook holistically, in light of P-0965's testimony, his level of education, and the context in which it was written, and finds that its contents and the circumstances in which it was prepared also did not affect the reliability of his testimony.
314. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of P-0965's evidence on a case-by-case basis in light of other evidence before it. As regards the specific aspects of his testimony concerning the procurement of weapons at the Ndress cemetery, a phone call with François Bozizé, and Yvon Konaté's contacts with Mr Ngaïssona, the Chamber has

315. Chrysostome Yapélé, also known as ‘Chiki Chiki’,⁴⁰⁶ a former ComZone of Berbérati and later the Anti-Balaka coordinator for the Mambéré-Kadéï prefecture, testified without in-court protective measures,⁴⁰⁷ and with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.⁴⁰⁸ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁴⁰⁹
316. The Ngaïssona Defence relies on Chrysostome Yapélé’s evidence to argue that it was difficult to differentiate between the civilians and the Anti-Balaka⁴¹⁰ and that the Anti-Balaka did not target the Muslim civilians.⁴¹¹ In particular, the Ngaïssona Defence refers to this witness’s evidence that in Berbérati, the Anti-Balaka only targeted the Seleka to argue that harming Muslim civilians was not the Anti-Balaka’s collective intent but was conducted by some uneducated Anti-Balaka who were acting on their own.⁴¹²
317. At the outset, the Chamber notes that Chrysostome Yapélé testified about his experience in the Anti-Balaka during the relevant time, the situation in Carnot and Berbérati, including the attack in Berbérati in February 2014, and the Brazzaville talks. His testimony about Carnot and Berbérati does not directly relate to any of the charged incidents in this case.

318. As set out below, the Chamber concludes that his evidence concerning a key aspect relevant for this case – whether Anti-Balaka elements made a distinction between the Seleka and Muslims – was not forthcoming and therefore, not reliable. In the view of the Chamber, Chrysostome Yapélé distanced himself from the statements he made to the Prosecution investigators and did not offer any meaningful clarity in court about how the Anti-Balaka elements understood the terms ‘Muslims’ or ‘Seleka’. Notably, in court, when asked about his previous statement that ‘when I find a Muslim I’m going to kill him’, Chrysostome Yapélé explained that ‘they’ did not want to kill Muslims but the Seleka because ‘there was a difference’ and ‘some’ Anti-Balaka were not educated and thought that Seleka were Muslims and did not distinguish between them.⁴¹³
319. Moreover, Chrysostome Yapélé was shown in court a video footage in which he appears introducing himself as ‘the person responsible for the Anti-Balaka in Mambere-Kadei’ and offering to show the reporter to ‘take a Muslim and come kill [them] before her’.⁴¹⁴ Asked why he used the term ‘Muslim’ instead of ‘Seleka’, the witness said that this was because he was answering ‘in response to their questions’.⁴¹⁵ Chrysostome Yapélé, asked about his response to a similar question in his interview with the Prosecution about why he used the term ‘Muslim’, said that ‘in the majority, the Seleka were Muslims and especially the Muslim Selekas committed a lot of torture’ against the CAR civilian population, so ‘when we talk about the Seleka, we were talking about Muslims’; and in the same answer also said ‘when we talk about Muslims, we were talking only about the Seleka’.⁴¹⁶ In his interview with the Prosecution, he had said that, at that time, ‘all the S[eleka] were Muslims, so sometimes we would say the Muslims’.⁴¹⁷

320. Further, the witness's own interpretation of what 'Seleka' were is further exemplified by his description of the events in Berbérati, regarding which he stated in a generalised manner that the Muslim neighbourhood was targeted, and specifically Chadian and Fulbe individuals, because the majority were part of the Seleka,⁴¹⁸ and even saying that he warned that the Anti-Balaka would attack Muslims as they did not know the difference between Muslims and Seleka.⁴¹⁹ At the same time, the witness claimed that acts like killing and pillaging were carried out by Anti-Balaka elements who 'acted in their own way', and of which he was not a part.⁴²⁰
321. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has only relied on the evidence provided by Chrysostome Yapele on a very limited aspect in its evidentiary analysis below.

iv. P-1193

322. P-1193, a former Anti-Balaka element who was part of Mr Yekatom's group, testified with in-court protective measures,⁴²¹ with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.⁴²² His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁴²³

323. All parties rely on P-1193 in support of their arguments.⁴²⁴ The Yekatom Defence points to limited aspects of his evidence that, it argues, are based on his ‘rudimentary understanding’ of the functioning of Mr Yekatom’s group.⁴²⁵
324. P-1193 testified that it might have been in May 2014 when he became member of the Anti-Balaka.⁴²⁶ P-1193 joined Mr Yekatom’s group in 2014 and had first-hand knowledge of the events that occurred after he joined, including the Brazzaville talks and his personal interactions with Mr Ngaïssona. P-1193 also provided several documents to the Prosecution, including lists of Anti-Balaka elements.
325. The Chamber notes that P-1193 was able to provide specific details relating to the structure and functioning of this group and the Anti-Balaka more generally but only related to events that occurred in 2014. P-1193 said that before May 2014, he had had ‘no contact’ with Mr Ngaïssona.⁴²⁷
326. In the Chamber’s view, the witness appeared to show a tendency to portray favourable pictures of both accused. For example, P-1193 said that Mr Yekatom ‘protected’ some Muslims in Lobaye by bringing them to MISCA to be sent to safety in Bangui,⁴²⁸ and that Mr Yekatom was ‘protecting the population in PK9’ by setting himself up behind the bridge as there was no state control.⁴²⁹
327. In a similar vein, P-1193 testified that ‘Mr Ngaïssona was a man of peace and [...] a God-fearing man’,⁴³⁰ that ‘because of the patriotism of Ngaïssona’, he ‘save[d] the partition of the country’ and tried to facilitate peace, and that they had ‘to be grateful of this because of the acts or actions he undertook’.⁴³¹ P-1193 described Mr Ngaïssona as a ‘firefighter’ who never asked the Anti-Balaka to do anything and did not have any men at his disposal; according to the witness, Mr Ngaïssona acted for peace and opposed violence and the commission of crimes and his willingness to stop the atrocities, looting and banditry made him look ‘weak’ in the eyes of the Anti-Balaka.⁴³² P-1193, asked to explain what he meant with the qualification of Mr Ngaïssona as a ‘firefighter’, said that he did not see it himself but knew from the media that there was a lot of disorder and that Mr Ngaïssona would give instructions for it to stop because he always vouched for peace.⁴³³ Asked which timeframe this was referring to, P-1193 agreed that it referred to the time when he became a member of the unified coordination in June 2014, and that before that time, he had ‘no information’; once the Anti-Balaka merged, that is when he got to know Mr Ngaïssona; and in the meetings that were held, Mr Ngaïssona ‘never ever gave instructions or orders to go and do harm’ or ‘advocat[ed] hatred’.⁴³⁴

328. Furthermore, the Chamber considered less credible the witness’s assertion that what he knew about crimes against civilians he heard only from media and did not see it himself.⁴³⁵

329. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the veracity of P-1193’s claims and opinions in light of other evidence received.

v. P-1339

330. P-1339, a former Anti-Balaka element in Mr Yekatom’s group, testified fully live with in-court protectives measures,⁴³⁶ and received Rule 74 assurances.⁴³⁷ P-1339 participated in the 5 December 2013 attack on Bangui and during this time also acted as Mr Yekatom’s secretary. He testified about, inter alia, the preparation and execution of the attack on Bangui, the attack on and destruction of the mosque in Boeing, and Djido Saleh's death.

331. The Yekatom Defence argues that the accounts of four witnesses, including that of P-1339, are 'wholly unreliable and as such should be disregarded'.⁴³⁸ In particular, it submits that as a result of P-1339's narrative shifting readily, compounded with 'his apparent incentive to secure personal gains from his testimony', P-1339's testimony is full of major and minor (inter- and intra-) contradictions as well as baseless allegations.⁴³⁹ Specifically, the Yekatom Defence alludes to (i) P-1339's comments on the veracity of his prior statement, in the context of which he raised 'numerous issues' 'in an attempt to explain the increasing contradictions' between his testimony and his prior statement, yet evaded his responsibility;⁴⁴⁰ (ii) his unreliable account, inconsistencies and/or contradictions regarding his role as secretary, Mr Yekatom's orders, the 'destruction' of the mosque in Boeing, the '5th December Operation' (in particular the 'Boeing Market incident' and the group's retreat), and the procurement of weapons;⁴⁴¹ and (iii) his provision of false information about other witnesses in this case.⁴⁴²
332. Having assessed P-1339's testimony overall, considering the inconsistencies pointed out by the Yekatom Defence, the Chamber concludes that the witness's testimony is, nonetheless, generally credible. The Chamber notes that there are indeed some discrepancies between P-1339's prior statement and his testimony. For example, P-1339's recollection that P-1839 and Stéphane Chrisostome Dawili were in Mr Yekatom's group prior to 5 December 2013 does not match their respective testimonies that they joined only after 5 December 2013 when Mr Yekatom's group was stationed at Yamwara.⁴⁴³ The Chamber considers these inconsistencies immaterial and, in any event, understandable given the passage of time. Similarly, the Chamber notes that P-1339's account of when and how exactly he assumed the role of secretary in Mr Yekatom's group is unclear. In the view of the Chamber, this did not discredit P-1339's remaining testimony, nor the fact that he did, at some point in 2013, perform the role of secretary of this group.

333. Further, the Chamber is of the view that P-1339 showed a genuine disposition to answer the questions put to him truthfully, and did not hesitate to correct himself or admit that he had made a mistake when pointed out to him. The Chamber found his explanations in this regard generally reasonable and credible. The Chamber considers that these discrepancies did not render his testimony wholly unreliable.
334. In addition, given his being part of Mr Yekatom's group, the Chamber notes that the witness was forthcoming about the words and actions of Mr Yekatom and Habib Beina.⁴⁴⁴ For example, he clearly distinguished between acts committed by Mr Yekatom's group or the Anti-Balaka movement and others, such as the local population.⁴⁴⁵
335. With regard to his notebook, the Chamber notes the Yekatom Defence's allegation that contrary to P-1339's initial explanation, he could not have written it in 2013 because the photographs on its cover were of events that occurred in 2014.⁴⁴⁶ It further notes the Yekatom Defence's suggestion that when confronted with this discrepancy during his testimony, P-1339 provided various different explanations.⁴⁴⁷ The Chamber considers that the witness's answers show that he did not understand the Yekatom Defence counsel's questions in the first place and appeared not to remember the photographs depicted on the cover of this notebook.⁴⁴⁸ In any event, the Chamber considers reasonable P-1339's indication that he wrote down the notes in scrap pieces of paper and later re-transcribed them onto the notebook, which he bought in 2014.⁴⁴⁹ Further, the Chamber does not find any indication

⁴⁴⁵ See e.g. P-1339: T-152, p. 71, line 17 – p. 72, line 5, p. 74, lines 10-20. The Chamber further notes its discussion on P-1339's evidence regarding the 'attack' on the mosque in Boeing, which P-1339 attributes to Mr Yekatom's group, and its subsequent 'destruction' or dismantling, which he attributes to the local population (see paragraphs 2621-2640 below). that the notebook or the information contained therein was fabricated. In any event, and bearing in mind the above, the Chamber has not relied on this item of evidence.

336. Regarding the Yekatom Defence's argument that P-1339 'fabricated' his account on the procurement of weapons, the Chamber notes that the purported inconsistencies in this account appeared to be the result of the witness's confusion when answering the counsel's questions rather than of a deliberate intention to lie.⁴⁵⁰ In the view of the Chamber, and similar to the above, these inconsistencies in P-1339's account were not such that rendered his testimony wholly unreliable on this aspect. The Chamber therefore relied on the limited aspects of his account concerning the procurement of weapons to the extent that it considered them credible.⁴⁵¹

vi. P-1521

338. P-1521, a former FACA member and Anti-Balaka, testified fully live with in-court protective measures.⁴⁵²

339. P-1521 joined the Anti-Balaka after August 2013, participated in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 and was later the Anti-Balaka coordinator for operations in the context of the DDR process and national reconciliation.⁴⁵³

341. Having reviewed his testimony, the Chamber notes that parts of P-1521's evidence stood in contrast with other evidence before it. For example, P-1521, as someone who participated in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 and continued to remain part of the Anti-Balaka during 2014, testified that he was unaware of an attack on Bossangoa on the same day.⁴⁵⁵
342. Further, in the view of the Chamber, although P-1521 said that '[he] explained what [he] experienced in the Anti-Balaka movement' and did not 'exonerate [himself] or to protect Ngaïssona or the Anti-Balaka',⁴⁵⁶ he appeared to present a one-sided, favourable and passive view of Mr Ngaïssona's role in 2014.
343. On the one hand, P-1521 confirmed the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona did not have the power to chase the ComZones from their positions and said that Mr Ngaïssona was 'even attacked by some ComZone commanders several times' and 'didn't have the power to decide on a ComZone leader' or 'exert pressure' on the ComZones ('Il n'a pas de pression en tant que telle sur les commandants de zone').⁴⁵⁷ P-1521 also confirmed the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona signed some mission orders but 'others' could have signed them as well.⁴⁵⁸ P-1521 also confirmed the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona's signatures were forged at some point, but did not provide any further details as regards the basis of this information.⁴⁵⁹ Further, P-1521 confirmed that Maxime Mokom wanted to be the head of the Anti-Balaka movement and acted without the order or authority of Mr Ngaïssona;⁴⁶⁰ and added that there were 'misunderstandings' between them and that sometimes Mokom carried out visits in the hinterland without Mr Ngaïssona's orders.⁴⁶¹ On the other hand, P-1521 suggested that Mr Ngaïssona had sufficient authority to demand the Anti-Balaka to take down the roadblocks. For example, P-1521, when asked in relation to evidence concerning Mr Ngaïssona asking the ComZones to erect roadblocks or provoke disorder, testified that it was ‘Ngaïssona himself who called us and asked us to tell those people to dismantle the roadblocks that they had set up’.⁴⁶²

344. Nonetheless, in the view of the Chamber, these claims and opinions did not render P-1521’s testimony wholly unreliable.
345. As regards other aspects of his evidence, P-1521 appeared generally forthcoming about his involvement in the preparation and participation in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 and how the attack unfolded.⁴⁶³ As a resident of Boy-Rabe,⁴⁶⁴ P-1521 was able to explain the routes taken for the attack and answer questions about locations on an annotated map.⁴⁶⁵ P-1521 was knowledgeable and forthcoming about several individuals of interest to the case, including Andjilo, Yvon Konaté, Thierry Lebene, Richard Bejouane, Sebastien Wenezoui and Ngremangou, among others.⁴⁶⁶ His account concerning his involvement in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 is largely internally coherent and consistent with other evidence. Further, P-1521, as a FACA member at the time,⁴⁶⁷ was in a position to observe the in-group dynamics between civilians and FACA members within the groups that were advancing to Bangui for the attack on 5 December 2013.⁴⁶⁸
346. P-1521 was less knowledgeable about Mr Yekatom’s actions during the attack on Bangui and how the attack unfolded in other parts of Bangui, where he was himself not participating.⁴⁶⁹ The Chamber has considered this when assessing his testimony.
347. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the veracity of P-1521’s claims and opinions in light of other evidence received.

348. P-1719, a former Anti-Balaka element, testified fully live with in-court protective measures,⁴⁷⁰ with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.⁴⁷¹
349. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the witness is not credible because he is ‘volatile’, ‘easy to manipulate and to corrupt’, and participated in an alleged scheme to falsely accuse Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁷² The Ngaïssona Defence also argues that the witness’s demeanour was ‘revealing’ in that when responding to questions he ‘repeatedly chose not to elaborate on his answers, limiting himself to referring to his statement’ while also providing ‘crucial information’ during his testimony which is absent from his prior statement, without a convincing explanation.⁴⁷³
350. The Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence’s submissions in support of these arguments rely mostly on D30-4914’s evidence.⁴⁷⁴ Having reviewed the information provided by the latter, the Chamber observes that D30-4914 appeared to have had some contact with P-1719 and was able to provide evidence about P-1719’s role and activities in Douala and in the CAR, including in Bangui, as well as his work at the African Union in 2015.⁴⁷⁵ However, the Chamber is of the view that D30-4914’s impressions that P-1719’s was ‘volatile’ and ‘easy to corrupt’ appeared to be based on his own reading of P-1719’s behaviour as he did not point to any objective information in support, and more importantly, that could affect P-1719’s reliability.⁴⁷⁶
351. Further, D30-4914’s allegations that P-1719 lied about Mr Ngaïssona were, in the view of the Chamber, based on speculations and hearsay.⁴⁷⁷ D30-4914 stated that P-1719 and Juvénal

Ngouakossi had lied about Mr Ngaïssona for money ‘surely’ and had been used by Samba-Panza to give her information about what was going on in Boy-Rabe.⁴⁷⁸ This seems to be solely based on D30-4914’s assumptions having had contact with P-1719 over telephone during which the latter asked about his positions.⁴⁷⁹ D30-4914 did not offer any further information that could assist the Chamber in assessing the source of his claims.⁴⁸⁰

352. As to P-1719’s demeanour in court, it did not appear to the Chamber that he was attempting to withhold information. Rather, in the specific examples cited by the Ngaïssona Defence, the Chamber finds that the witness was forthcoming, provided detailed information and answered when additional clarification was needed. For example, when asked to specify the identity of an individual with whom he was in contact through Facebook, the witness provided a long answer, at the end of which he said, ‘I’m going to stop here’, adding that ‘[p]erhaps there may be further questions which you are going to put me as regards what I’ve just told you’.⁴⁸¹ After a follow-up question, the witness again provided a long answer and ended with, ‘I think I’ll stop here on this particular point. If there are any questions, I will do my best to answer them’.⁴⁸² In the Chamber’s view, this demeanour does not show any unwillingness to respond to questions.

353. Furthermore, in relation to the alleged omission of ‘crucial information’ from his prior statement, the Chamber considers that this does not render P-1719’s testimony unreliable, as such. The Chamber notes that this concerns instructions coming from Yaoundé, which he mentioned during his testimony.⁴⁸³ In the Chamber’s view, P-1719 adequately explained why he only mentioned this in court. Indeed, P-1719 said that what prompted him to mention it was that the ‘personalities’, who were ‘part of the general staff’ and who are mentioned in his prior statement, ‘were in permanent coordination with Yaoundé’, although he clarified that he did not receive any instructions directly ‘from the authority’.⁴⁸⁴ The Chamber is of the view that the witness was simply providing a further clarification to his prior statement and that the fact that he only mentioned Yaoundé in court does not affect the credibility of this account.

354. Having regard to the above, the Chamber concludes that P-1719's testimony is generally credible. The Chamber has considered it within the context of other evidence before it.

355. P-1839, a former Anti-Balaka element in Mr Yekatom's group, testified fully live with in-court protective measures,⁴⁸⁵ and received Rule 74 assurances.⁴⁸⁶
356. P-1839, a civilian, joined Mr Yekatom's group at Yamwara after 5 December 2013 and followed the group on their advance along the PK9-Mbaïki axis, carrying out various roles, including bodyguard for Alkanto, treasurer for Mr Yekatom and later his bodyguard as she gained Mr Yekatom's trust. As such, she testified about, inter alia, her experience at Yamwara, including training the elements received there; the advance of Mr Yekatom's group along the axis, including instructions on the targeting of Muslims; weapons and ammunition of the group along the axis; Mr Yekatom's relationship with Mr Ngaïssona; meetings the witness attended, including a 'mediation' meeting and one at Catherine Samba-Panza's residence; as well as the meeting at the Mbaïki church and Mr Yekatom's 'peace messages' after this meeting. Importantly, the witness also testified about several incidents involving the mistreatment and/or killing of individuals at Yamwara and along the axis by Mr Yekatom and/or elements of his group. P-1839, who at some point also worked for Léopold Bara as part of his security, left the Anti-Balaka after Mr Yekatom reportedly killed two of his bodyguards.

⁴⁸⁵ P-1839: T-170; T-171; T-172; T-173; T-174; T-175; Decision on In-Court Protective Measures, ICC-01/14-01/18-906-Red, paras 50, 52, p. 41. The Chamber notes that P-1839 was granted in-court protective measures in the form of use of pseudonym, face and voice distortion. The Chamber further notes that she testified extensively about her activities at Yamwara and on the PK9-Mbaïki axis and her experience working closely with Mr Yekatom. Therefore, a significant portion of her testimony may tend to identify her to the public. For these reasons, and balancing the interests of the publicity of the proceedings, the Chamber has adopted the following approach. The Chamber has referred to her pseudonym when recalling her testimony. On occasions where she testified about her own conduct and where it may identify her, the Chamber has used descriptive phrases, such as 'an element in Alkanto's section', an element 'assigned' as 'Alkanto's bodyguard' or 'an element in Mr Yekatom's group'.

⁴⁸⁶ P-1839: T-170, p. 27, lines 9-25, p. 36, lines 22-24, p. 62, lines 3-5. See also Notification of the Appointment of Mr Mamadou Diarrassouba as Legal Adviser to Witness P-1839, 6 October 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1598 (with confidential Annexes I and II).

357. All parties rely on parts of P-1839's evidence.⁴⁸⁷ At the same time, the Yekatom Defence alludes to the 'limits' of her account to the extent that she attempted to self-justify her position as a civilian who voluntarily joined Mr Yekatom's group and that, as a civilian, she made erroneous assumptions with regard to any hierarchical command structure within Mr Yekatom's group.⁴⁸⁸ It also submits that 'hearsay evidence sourced from Alkanto via P-1839 is particularly unsafe' since 'Alkanto's tendency to make false claims to P-1839 is demonstrable'.⁴⁸⁹
358. Having reviewed it in light of the above arguments, the Chamber finds that P-1839's evidence is nonetheless fully credible.
359. P-1839's testimony was comprehensive, offering evidence with a level of depth that spoke to her first-hand knowledge and personal experiences in Mr Yekatom's group. For example, she testified in detail about the command structure and hierarchy within the group and the personal interactions and power dynamics between Mr Yekatom and other Anti-Balaka such as Cœur de Lion, Alkanto or Mr Ngaïssona. In this regard, the Chamber considers entirely without merit the Yekatom Defence's submissions that P-1839 lacked military understanding and would not have been privy to these details. The Chamber notes that her evidence in this regard is extensively discussed further below.⁴⁹⁰
360. In the view of the Chamber, P-1839 provided an internally coherent and consistent testimony, which was also clear and detailed. She was forthcoming and appeared to be honest, including in relation to her involvement with the Anti-Balaka more generally and to her participation in certain incidents more specifically. For example, P-1839 testified that she joined Mr Yekatom's group of her own free will,⁴⁹¹ and that she did 'some horrible things

⁴⁹¹ P-1839: T-170, p. 13, lines 15-20. The Chamber notes that P-1839 specified that she joined Mr Yekatom's group, and not any other Anti-Balaka group, because it was the closest group to where she was (see P-1839: T-170, p. 13, line 23 – p. 14, line 4). [...] just to gain their trust’, specifically referring to her personal involvement in the events that took place at Yamwara on and around 24 December 2013.⁴⁹² She also spontaneously testified about her personal involvement in other incidents in which individuals were killed.⁴⁹³

361. P-1839 explained how she came to have certain information, distinguishing between events she personally witnessed and information she was given by others, for example in relation to the events that took place at Yamwara on and around 24 December 2013,⁴⁹⁴ or the incident in which Mr Yekatom reportedly killed two of his bodyguards.⁴⁹⁵ P-1839 was also clear about events or details she could not recall or did not know, for example in relation to the presence of other Anti-Balaka chiefs around Yamwara during the abovementioned events,⁴⁹⁶ or when two ‘thieves’ were reportedly killed at Yamwara.⁴⁹⁷ Similarly, when asked whether she noticed that civilians, Christians, who were not part of the Anti-Balaka attacked Muslims in December 2013, she testified that she had no idea because she had not seen it and so she could not confirm.⁴⁹⁸

362. The Chamber notes that P-1839 asked to be shown the transcript of her interview with the Prosecution investigators on more than one occasion during her testimony. However, on almost every such occasion, P-1839 provided nuanced explanations about her responses to the investigators.⁴⁹⁹

363. P-1839 did not show a tendency to incriminate Mr Yekatom at all cost and therefore her testimony did not reflect a bias against him. For example, the witness testified that at some point, Mr Yekatom ‘did his best so that people could resume their duties from PK9 to Sekia’, calling upon these people, referring to civil servants, to get back to duty ‘in collaboration with his elements’.⁵⁰⁰ She confirmed that Mr Yekatom delivered ‘peace messages’ to

Christians after the meeting in Mbaïki.⁵⁰¹ She testified that as Muslims and Anti-Balaka elements exchanged insults when Muslims crossed PK9 on their way out of Mbaïki, Mr Yekatom (‘our chief’) told them not to insult the Muslims and to let them leave.⁵⁰² In relation to the events at Yamwara, she testified that Mr Yekatom was not present when the captives were brought to Yamwara.⁵⁰³

364. Bearing in mind the above, the Chamber is convinced that P-1839 testified truthfully about her personal experiences while being a member in Mr Yekatom’s group, providing particularly relevant and credible testimony in this regard.

365. P-1847, a former advisor of François Bozizé when he was president of the CAR, testified fully live with in-court protective measures.⁵⁰⁴ The Chamber introduced P-1847’s prior recorded testimony (the ‘Statements’) into evidence pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules, as it found that the witness had been subjected to interference.⁵⁰⁵
366. P-1847 joined François Bozizé at the Hilton hotel in Yaoundé following the Seleka coup, and stayed at this hotel for three months with him. In his Statements, P-1847 discusses, inter alia, his relations with François Bozizé and the latter’s activities in Cameroon; interacting with individuals in Yaoundé; meetings or activities of groups such as COCORA and FROCCA; the objectives, organisation, hierarchy and financing of the Anti-Balaka, the roles of both accused within the movement, as well as attacks it executed, including the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013.

367. The Prosecution cites to parts of P-1847's evidence in support of some of its allegations.⁵⁰⁶ The Ngaïssona Defence submits that the Chamber should attribute minimal weight to P-1847's Statements, especially where his statements and live testimony are 'completely inconsistent with respect to Mr N[gaïssona]'s alleged acts and conduct'.⁵⁰⁷ In particular, it argues that it is impossible to reconcile the Statements with his live testimony; that the Chamber made no findings on 'P-1847 changing his testimony at the behest of Mr N[gaïssona] or someone close to him'; that there is evidence of this witness's prior involvement in a scheme to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona; and that given the lack of evidence on P-1847's reasons for recanting his Statements, it cannot be inferred beyond reasonable doubt that his Statements are true whereas his live testimony is false.⁵⁰⁸ The Ngaïssona Defence also argues that P-1847's Statements are (i) internally inconsistent, (ii) hearsay, (iii) largely uncorroborated, and (iv) contradicted by other, direct, evidence.⁵⁰⁹
368. At the outset, the Chamber recalls that it introduced P-1847's Statements into evidence pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules after finding that the witness had failed to testify on material aspects included in the Statements and that such failure was due to him having been materially influenced by improper interference.⁵¹⁰ Noting that the Statements made extensive references to the acts and conduct of both accused, the Chamber decided not to rely on the paragraphs of the Statements mentioning Mr Yekatom's acts and conduct to the extent that they would be unduly prejudicial to him.⁵¹¹ As for the references to Mr Ngaïssona, the Chamber found that this situation could be distinguished in that despite the Prosecution's attempts to elicit incriminating evidence contained in the Statements, P-1847 'plainly failed to give evidence on material aspects', with the Ngaïssona Defence being put 'in a position to fully and meaningfully question the Witness'.⁵¹² Importantly, the Chamber notes that this decision was upheld by the Appeals Chamber.⁵¹³

369. Turning to the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments, the Chamber first notes its submission that it is 'likely' that P-1847's evidence was contaminated in the context of the scheme or plot against Mr Ngaïssona and that his account of Mr Ngaïssona's contribution to the Anti-Balaka movement, 'riddled with inconsistencies', should be examined in light of the witness's close relationship to Touadéra and Ngrebada and the latter's involvement in the abovementioned plot.⁵¹⁴ The Chamber considers that these allegations, based on P-1847's relationship with other individuals and the likelihood of his evidence being contaminated, are entirely speculative.⁵¹⁵ The Chamber further considers them to be implausible, in that any involvement in a scheme or plot 'against' Mr Ngaïssona would be expected to lead to an in-court testimony less favourable to Mr Ngaïssona, rather than the opposite. Further, the Chamber recalls its findings about the witness being 'materially influenced by improper interference' and notes that this relates to his live testimony, but not to his Statements.
370. Regarding the Ngaïssona Defence's argument that the Chamber made no findings on 'P-1847 changing his testimony at the behest of Mr N[gaïssona] or someone close to him', the Chamber recalls its finding that interference under Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules need not be attributable to the accused.⁵¹⁶ Significantly, this was confirmed by the Appeals Chamber when finding that the Chamber 'reasonably concluded that the witness had been improperly interfered with in relation to his testimony, and it was not required to make any further findings on the exact nature of such interference'.⁵¹⁷ For the same reasons, the Chamber equally dismisses the argument that '[g]iven this lack of evidence on P-1847's motives for recanting, it cannot be inferred beyond a reasonable doubt that P-1847's prior recorded statements are true whereas his live testimony is false'.

371. As for the Ngaïssona Defence's challenges to the substance of P-1847's evidence, the Chamber notes that it specifically disputes the witness's account on, inter alia, (i) meetings at the Golf residence (arguing that the Statements contain hearsay and uncorroborated evidence in this regard);⁵¹⁸ (ii) Joachim Kokaté gathering officers on behalf of FROCCA (arguing that P-1847's source of knowledge is unclear and contradicted by more reliable evidence);⁵¹⁹ (iii) François Bozizé being in touch with the Anti-Balaka in the CAR through Florent Kema (which it qualifies as a speculative and uncorroborated claim);⁵²⁰ (iv) ammunition being provided to the Gobere group by a woman;⁵²¹ (v) Mr Ngaïssona 'regularly' visiting François Bozizé at the Hilton hotel or Golf residence (arguing that it is uncorroborated, based on hearsay and discredited by Didier Ouebio's testimony, further noting that P-1847 subsequently refuted in court having seen Mr Ngaïssona at the Golf residence during François Bozizé's stay);⁵²² (vi) meetings at the Hilton hotel taking place with François Bozizé;⁵²³ (vii) Mr Ngaïssona 'crossing over' to Bouar (arguing that P-1847's sources of information on this aspect are unreliable) and, more generally, his evidence in relation to the border area;⁵²⁴ (viii) Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom liaising with Anti-Balaka elements at the border from the Golf residence (evidence which it argues is contradicted by other direct evidence);⁵²⁵ (ix) Mr Ngaïssona's role in providing financial assistance to the Anti-Balaka;⁵²⁶ and (x) Mr Ngaïssona giving instructions to Anti-Balaka elements, including in relation to the attack in Bangui on 5 December 2013.⁵²⁷

372. In the view of the Chamber, the arguments raised by the Ngaïssona Defence are not such that they rendered the Statements and his in-court testimony unreliable. In this regard, the Chamber notes that P-1847 provided first-hand and detailed information about François Bozizé's activities in Cameroon – an information which P-1847 obtained in his unique position accompanying him around Yaoundé and other places. In the view of the Chamber, the witness appeared to be honest and forthcoming when responding to the investigators' questions, also when he did not have the information he was asked about. For example, P-1847 specified that he went with François Bozizé to meetings in Cameroon but he himself did not attend, and also indicated that he did not know the names of all the people who participated in those meetings.⁵²⁸ P-1847 also explained the sources of his information, which included Anti-Balaka elements such as Levy Yakété, Dedane, Joachim Kokaté and Achille Godonam.⁵²⁹

373. In relation to P-1847's Statements, and specifically also with regard to his in-court testimony, the Chamber considered the material aspects on which P-1847 failed to testify,⁵³⁰ as well as the inconsistencies pointed out by the Ngaissona Defence, and has assessed this witness's evidence, as appropriate, in the context of other evidence before it, in the evidentiary analysis below.

x. P-1962

374. P-1962, a former Anti-Balaka leader,⁵³¹ testified with in-court protective measures,⁵³² and with the assistance of counsel appointed pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules.⁵³³ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁵³⁴ The witness was a deputy coordinator of the Anti-Balaka in Boda,⁵³⁵ and was present in Boda during the Anti-Balaka attack.⁵³⁶

375. The Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence rely on parts of P-1962's evidence in support of their arguments.⁵³⁷
376. The Yekatom Defence argues that P-1962's evidence was untruthful, 'as is clear from the multiplicity of contradictions and inconsistencies, both internal and external', notably concerning his whereabouts and activities during the violence that broke out in Boda in January 2014, and his role in the Boda Anti-Balaka coordination that was established in the aftermath.⁵³⁸
377. Having reviewed it in light of the Yekatom Defence's arguments, the Chamber finds that P-1962's evidence is nonetheless generally credible. As set out below, the Chamber finds that none of the inconsistencies raised by the Yekatom Defence were such that they threw into question P-1962's entire evidence.
378. First, as regard P-1962's trip to Boda, the Yekatom Defence submits that P-1962's account should not be relied upon because it contradicts the evidence provided by P-1786 and Stéphane Chrisostome Dawili.⁵³⁹ The Yekatom Defence also relies on the evidence of, inter alia, the latter two individuals to question P-1962's account in relation to his claim that attack plans were adopted at a meeting at the Boda Church.⁵⁴⁰

379. The Chamber notes that P-1962 provided a considerable number of details about his trip to Boda via Mbaïki on 3 February 2014 together with FACA elements, both in his prior statement and during his testimony. These details included the stops made during the trip, the time, the vehicles used, and individuals they met.⁵⁴¹ P-1962 also provided details about the relationship between different Anti-Balaka elements, including among himself, Habib Soussou, and Cœur de Lion, as well as the source of his knowledge.⁵⁴² P-1962 also testified that he remembered P-1786 and that they ‘talked a lot’ because they lived in the same neighbourhood in Bangui.⁵⁴³
380. The Chamber further notes that P-1962 distinguished the sources of his knowledge and provided short, direct and detailed answers when questioned by the Yekatom Defence on his trip to Boda.⁵⁴⁴ As to the fact that P-1786 and Stéphane Chrisostome Dawili did not place or recognise P-1962 on this trip, the Chamber did not consider it necessary to assess the purported contradictions in the context of its evidentiary analysis below.⁵⁴⁵
381. Similarly, having reviewed the accounts of P-1962, P-1786 and Stéphane Chrisostome Dawili with regard to the attack on Boda in February 2014 holistically, the Chamber is of the view that the credibility of P-1962’s account remains unaffected. As to the CDR mentioned by the Yekatom Defence, the Chamber recalls its general considerations above on the probative value of CDR for purposes of ascertaining geographical location.⁵⁴⁶ The Chamber is further of the view that P-1962 also provided coherent details and circumscribed the limits to his knowledge, clarifying that he was present at a meeting at which instructions were given concerning the attack, but did not participate in the attack himself.⁵⁴⁷ The Chamber has had regard to this when assessing P-1962’s evidence concerning how the attack unfolded.

382. The Chamber now turns to the Yekatom Defence's reliance on Fidèle Soussou's evidence to dispute P-1962's claim that he took part in a meeting of 'Bangui-based Boda FACA' led by Fidèle Soussou, and to its argument that Fidèle Soussou's account 'should be preferred over that of P-1962'.⁵⁴⁸ In this regard, the Yekatom Defence further submits that P-1962's testimony is inconsistent with his prior statement, and that he could not explain his presence in that meeting.⁵⁴⁹
383. Having reviewed their evidence together as regards this meeting, the Chamber finds that Fidèle Soussou's evidence did not put into question the credibility of P-1962's evidence overall. The Chamber notes that P-1962 provided details about the meeting in his prior statement, such as the number of attendees.⁵⁵⁰ In the view of the Chamber, P-1962 provided reasonable clarifications in court about the meeting.⁵⁵¹ Further, in the Chamber's view, P-1962 did not recant his testimony, as argued, in explaining that when Habib Soussou 'called' him to invite him to the meeting, he did so in person, and not by telephone.⁵⁵²
384. The Chamber now turns to the Yekatom Defence's submission that P-1962 downplayed his role within the Anti-Balaka. In particular, the Yekatom Defence submits that P-1962 claimed that Habib Soussou was the Anti-Balaka coordinator in Boda, and that P-1962 had a motive to assign responsibility for his actions during the events in Boda to others so as to avoid prosecution himself.⁵⁵³ The Yekatom Defence notably refers to P-1962's contemporary notes in which Soussou appears as a 'ComZone' as well as to the analysis of the Sangaris commander in Boda.⁵⁵⁴

385. The Chamber notes that P-1962 provided a notable number of details in his statement and was forthcoming during his testimony on the structure of the Anti-Balaka coordination in Boda and its relationship with the national coordination.⁵⁵⁵
386. The Chamber has also considered P-1962's remark that Mr Ngaïssona and the national coordination 'never contributed anything' to the coordination in Boda, 'not even a drop of water', and that 'he' was only giving them advice that they 'should bring back the peace'.⁵⁵⁶ P-1962 stated that ComZones for Boda were 'officially' recognised as such following a meeting of the national coordination and Mr Ngaïssona.⁵⁵⁷
387. The Chamber has also considered P-1962's statement that his role as a deputy coordinator was 'to bring calm and peace and to make sure that women and children were not harmed'.⁵⁵⁸ P-1962 also explained how he became the 'acting Anti-Balaka coordinator' in lieu of Habib Soussou until this position was officially recognised as such in November 2014.⁵⁵⁹
388. Having regard to this, the Chamber considers that the witness was forthcoming both in his prior statement and his in-court testimony when addressing his own role within the Anti-Balaka and provided an adequate level of detail. The Chamber also considers minor the inconsistency raised by the Yekatom Defence regarding P-1962's role in Boda and how he, and not Habib Soussou, was regarded as the 'effective [...] leader' by the Sangaris.⁵⁶⁰ In the view of the Chamber, P-1962 did appear, in places, to be minimising his own role in the events. However, in the Chamber's view, this did not render his evidence wholly unreliable.
389. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the veracity of P-1962's claims and opinions in light of other evidence received.

xi. P-2027

390. P-2027, a FACA member who fled to Cameroon after the Seleka coup in 2013, testified with in-court protective measures,⁵⁶¹ with his prior recorded testimony introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁵⁶²
391. Both the Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence rely on parts of P-2027's evidence in support of their arguments.⁵⁶³
392. Overall, the Chamber noted various discrepancies between the witness's statement and the information he provided in court. However, they did not go to such extent as to render his evidence fully unreliable.
393. For instance, in his statement, P-2027 stated that Mr Ngaïssona gave him money in Cameroon; that Mr Ngaïssona had helped him before in Bangui, that he did this 'out of the goodness of his heart' and helped a lot of people like this, including pensioners in Bangui; and further stated that he felt no obligations towards Mr Ngaïssona nor like he 'owed' him anything because of the money he gave him.⁵⁶⁴ In court, P-2027 said that Mr Ngaïssona would help people in need, including 'retired people who had unpaid arrears', and that Mr Ngaïssona 'wanted to calm down the Anti-Balaka' and give them money to not cause disorder.⁵⁶⁵ P-2027, asked if Mr Ngaïssona would help fellow citizens in exile with money for survival, said that he personally did not know what Mr Ngaïssona did, '[p]erhaps he helped others', '[p]erhaps he paid them from his own pocket', and that he 'really [did not] know anything about this'.⁵⁶⁶ P-2027, when asked, indicated that he did not know whether Mr Ngaïssona gave money for the distribution of weapons or ammunitions.⁵⁶⁷

394. Further, as set out below, in his statement, P-2027 was generally forthcoming about the events in Cameroon, including his direct interactions with other individuals of relevance to the case. P-2027's statement is also largely internally consistent and coherent.
395. As per his statement, P-2027 was in Yaoundé in 2013 and lived in Levy Yakété's apartment for a few days with, inter alia, Kevin Kpefio.⁵⁶⁸ P-2027 also met Bernard Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona in Yaoundé.⁵⁶⁹ P-2027 also shared an apartment with Sebastien Wenezoui in both Douala and Yaoundé during the relevant time and would speak to him often over the phone.⁵⁷⁰ P-2027 stated that he met Dazoumi Yalo in Yaoundé and Douala.⁵⁷¹ He also claimed to have information about the activities of Gbangouma, with whom he was arrested in Cameroon, and Ngaikosset, Mboya, and Seregaza.⁵⁷² P-2027 further stated that he was also in contact with FACA elements in Bangui at the time.⁵⁷³ He also indicated that he was in telephone contact with Maxime Mokom, including on 5 December 2013.⁵⁷⁴ At the same time, P-2027 stated that he had 'never heard that others in exile were preparing a coup. These were just all stories, people were just talking'.⁵⁷⁵
396. In court, P-2027 was not asked in detail about the individuals mentioned above.
397. Having reviewed his testimony, the Chamber finds that P-2027 did not provide a lot of detail about the actions of either accused relevant to the charged incidents, particularly regarding Mr Ngaïssona, despite the high level of details given in his prior statement, and despite the interactions and contacts he stated to have had in his statement. Further, when asked specifically about Mr Ngaïssona's involvement with the Anti-Balaka, P-2027 gave blanket generalisations and did not offer any details. For example, when asked, P-2027 said that he did not hear from Mr Ngaïssona 'nor from somebody else in Cameroon' that Mr Ngaïssona was involved in organising or gave orders to any of his former FACA colleagues to engage in military operations from Cameroon and that ‘[m]aybe’ this happened after P-2027 left.⁵⁷⁶ He also claimed that Mr Ngaïssona ‘himself was trying to advise [the Anti-Balaka] to put down their weapons’.⁵⁷⁷

398. Furthermore, the Chamber notes that during his testimony, the Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence asked the witness several questions about certain Facebook exchanges in which he was not the interlocutor, but his name had been mentioned. For example, the witness was asked about an exchange in which two individuals said that P-2027 had received a ‘large’ sum of money and had to be watched because he was a danger for their movement,⁵⁷⁸ or that P-2027 was mandated to meet with ‘white people’.⁵⁷⁹ Although the witness repeatedly indicated that he had no knowledge about the content of these Facebook exchanges, the Chamber considers that this did not affect the credibility of the information provided in his statement. In this regard, the Chamber recalls that P-2027 did not take part in any of these Facebook exchanges but was merely asked to comment on what others had said.

399. Having regard to all the above, the Chamber has assessed with great caution the veracity of P-2027’s claims and opinions in light of other evidence received.

xii. P-2232

400. P-2232, a former Anti-Balaka member who previously worked as an intelligence officer for François Bozizé and then for Maxime Mokom, testified fully live with in-court protective measures.⁵⁸⁰

401. Both Defence teams cite to parts of P-2232’s evidence in support of their arguments,⁵⁸¹ while disputing other parts of his evidence. Notably, the Yekatom Defence disputes his account about Mr Yekatom (i) regularly meeting ‘Mokom’ whilst in Zongo and being in contact with him;⁵⁸² and (ii) being the ‘chef’ of the sector up to Lobaye and Boda.⁵⁸³ Likewise, the Ngaïssona Defence disputes P-2232’s evidence on (i) contacts between Mr Yekatom and Mokom while in Zongo and after they left the area;⁵⁸⁴ (ii) Mr Ngaïssona joining Bernard Mokom in Cameroon to set up ‘a crisis office’ called FROCCA;⁵⁸⁵ (iii) the attack organised by Yambété at the border;⁵⁸⁶ (iv) the procurement of weapons by the ‘Gobere Group’;⁵⁸⁷ (v) Mr Ngaïssona financing the Anti-Balaka for the purchase of weapons and ammunition after the 5 December 2013 attack;⁵⁸⁸ and (vi) the frequency of contacts between ‘Mokom’ and his father.⁵⁸⁹

402. Having assessed P-2232’s testimony overall, the Chamber finds it generally credible. In this regard, the Chamber found P-2232 forthcoming and truthful, and able to distinguish and clarify in court his sources of knowledge. The Chamber is also of the view that the witness did not show any bias towards any of the accused – if anything, he attempted not to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona at all costs, indicating that he had never heard Mr Ngaïssona’s name before 5 December 2013. In the view of the Chamber, the issues raised by the Defence were not such that they would render his testimony wholly unreliable. The Chamber has considered them when assessing P-2232’s evidence in light of other evidence before it, in its evidentiary analysis below.

403. P-2251, a FACA member and former Anti-Balaka, testified with in-court protective measures.⁵⁹⁰ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁵⁹¹
404. P-2251, a civilian at the time, fled to the bush in June 2013 and joined the Anti-Balaka in Gobere in July 2013.⁵⁹² P-2251 met Thierry Lebene aka Douze Puissances and other Anti-Balaka chiefs in Gobere where he stayed until September 2013.⁵⁹³ P-2251 participated in the attacks on Bossangoa, Bouca and Bogangolo in September 2013 and then participated in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013.⁵⁹⁴ In the first few months of 2014, P-2251 lived with other Anti-Balaka elements in Mr Ngaïssona's warehouse in Bangui.⁵⁹⁵
405. All parties cite parts of P-2251's evidence in support of their arguments.⁵⁹⁶ In addition to relying on him, the Ngaïssona Defence points to certain inconsistencies in his testimony with other evidence before the Chamber, namely the location of Gobere on a map and the placing of the attack on Bossangoa in September 2013 before the attack on Bouca.⁵⁹⁷

In court, P-2251 stated that a few details in his witness statement were not consistent with what he had said, including certain things that he did not recognise. The Chamber gave the witness extra time to review his witness statement and provide corrections. The witness provided those corrections during the break. These corrections were communicated to the Chamber and the participants by email. In the opinion of the Chamber, these discrepancies were not major. The Presiding Judge directed the Prosecution to go through the three discrepancies and ask the witness in court what he wanted to change in those paragraphs (see P-2251: T-043, p. 7, line 25 – p. 12, line 8).

406. The Chamber finds P-2251's testimony generally credible. P-2251 had first-hand information and was knowledgeable about the individuals who were in Gobere from July to September 2013, including their activities,⁵⁹⁸ and was able to comment generally on the relations between civilian and FACA elements there until their advance to Bangui.⁵⁹⁹ P-2251 was forthcoming when he did not have further details about some of these individuals or their activities.⁶⁰⁰ The witness was generally able to explain when his observation and/or knowledge of the events were limited. On at least two occasions, P-2251 admitted to not having all the details because he was 'just an element'.⁶⁰¹
407. In the view of the Chamber, P-2251's prior statement was largely internally coherent as regards the assembly and movement of Anti-Balaka groups prior to the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, use of gris-gris, creation of Anti-Balaka ID cards, and the existence and general organisation of Anti-Balaka bases in Bangui. P-2251's account in court did not substantively contradict his prior statement.
408. Having regard to his evidence as a whole, the Chamber notes the following two sets of claims made by P-2251 that stood out in complete contrast to other evidence before it.
409. First, as regards the Anti-Balaka activities prior to December 2013, P-2251 said that he did not see any training taking place in Gobere.⁶⁰² P-2251 said that there was 'no political party or politician behind the Anti-Balaka'.⁶⁰³ P-2251 also recalled seeing Konaté in Gobere,⁶⁰⁴ and the latter having participated in the attack on Bossangoa in September 2013.⁶⁰⁵ P-2251

also placed the Bossangoa attack in September 2013 as having taken place before the attack on Bouca.⁶⁰⁶

410. Second, as regards the commission of crimes against Muslim civilians, P-2251 said that ‘there were no Muslims’ when they arrived to Bouca and had ‘no idea about what might have happened to the Muslims’ there.⁶⁰⁷ When confronted with the killings of Muslim civilians in places like Bossangoa, Bouca and Bogangolo, where he had participated in attacks, P-2251 said that he did not see ‘any dead bodies until [he] got to B[angui]’.⁶⁰⁸ P-2251 also said that during the events of December 2013, he did not know where the Muslims were and so was not able to know whether they were direct victims.⁶⁰⁹ P-2251 said that the Anti-Balaka would not harm anyone who did not have any association with the Seleka.⁶¹⁰ P-2251 heard that Andjilo did kill Muslims during the conflict, but he did not know if he did so in Bossangoa or Bouca and said that he did not hear about other Anti-Balaka chiefs killing Muslims during the conflict.⁶¹¹
411. Further to this, the Chamber had regard to P-2251’s opinions about Thierry Lebene and Mr Ngaïssona’s role during the relevant period.
412. In the view of the Chamber, P-2251 seemed to over-emphasise Thierry Lebene having ‘protected the Muslims’, repeatedly portraying him in better light, and in contrast with Andjilo’s character and actions.⁶¹² In this respect, the Chamber has regard to P-2251’s past close association with Thierry Lebene and the fact that P-2251 was granted in-court protective measures because of his express fears that this person ‘would not allow him to testify at the ICC'.⁶¹³ It recalls that P-2251 was this person's subordinate in 2014,⁶¹⁴ and remained based in Bangui in the 7th arrondissement until joining the FACA in 2017.⁶¹⁵ P-2251 also reported to him 'every day', at least during the events relevant to the charges.⁶¹⁶ P-2251 also spoke about being in contact with this person prior to meeting the Prosecution, and also said that the latter would not be 'happy' if he found out that P-2251 was meeting with the Prosecution.⁶¹⁷

413. Furthermore, as regards Mr Ngaïssona's role, P-2251 viewed the latter's financial contributions to the Anti-Balaka as humanitarian in nature, suggesting that parts of such sustenance were necessary to avoid crimes.⁶¹⁸

414. In relation to the abovementioned aspects of his evidence, the Chamber has assessed the veracity of P-2251's claims and opinions in light of other evidence received. Overall, the Chamber has considered P-2251's evidence within the context of other evidence before it.

xiv. P-2269

415. P-2269, a former FACA member and Anti-Balaka element, was initially expected to testify fully live.⁶¹⁹ Later, the Chamber found that he was unavailable to testify orally and his prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(c) of the Rules.⁶²⁰

416. P-2269 fled to Zongo upon the Seleka's arrival in March 2013 and joined the Anti-Balaka in Gobere.⁶²¹ In his statement, P-2269 provides information about the groups in Gobere, the planning and execution of the attacks in Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013, Mr Yekatom's group, the setting up of the Anti-Balaka national coordination, as well as Mr Ngaïssona's appointment as general coordinator and the alleged financial assistance the latter provided to the elements.
417. The Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence rely on parts of P-2269's evidence in support of their arguments.⁶²² At the same time, the Ngaïssona Defence submits that key aspects of P-2269's account with regard to the group in Gobere are uncorroborated and that his narrative is both internally and externally inconsistent.⁶²³
418. In particular, the Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-2269's account is 'wholly unreliable' and that he lied about having been in Gobere;⁶²⁴ and disputes his claims that 'everyone' within the Anti-Balaka 'conflated Muslim civilians and Seleka members', that he reported to Mokom who was in Zongo, that he initiated the movement, that they obtained weapons from a person in Bangui, and that Mr Ngaïssona sent money to his group in Gobere.⁶²⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence also challenges the handwritten list P-2269 provided arguing that 'it fails to corroborate other evidence and to provide an overall picture of the elements present in G[o]bere'.⁶²⁶
419. The Yekatom Defence also disputes P-2269's evidence, in particular his claim that Mr Yekatom would have crossed to Zongo on the day of the Seleka coup with several individuals from ‘the Anti-Balaka Northern Coordination’, arguing that ‘this unique allegation should not be relied on against Mr. Yekatom’.⁶²⁷

420. Having assessed P-2269’s testimony holistically, in light of the Defence’s allegations and in relation to other evidence before it, the Chamber concludes that it is nonetheless generally credible. P-2269 had a vast amount of first-hand knowledge about the events in 2013, especially about the various groups in Gobere, including his own, the movement of some of these groups towards Bangui and their participation in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. The Chamber did not consider this evidence unique in that others like him, including FACA members, testified about the events starting from the formation of Anti-Balaka groups in Gobere and their participation in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. In the view of the Chamber, P-2269 appeared forthcoming and truthful about his own involvement in the Anti-Balaka and his actions in 2013. P-2269’s account was largely internally consistent, and he was able to explain the differences in his interview with the Prosecution sufficiently.
421. As regards the Ngaïssona Defence’s arguments, the Chamber found that none of them individually or taken together discredited the entirety of P-2269’s testimony. Turning to specific inconsistencies raised by it, the Chamber considered that those regarding P-2269’s presence in Gobere were minor and did not throw into question the fact that he himself was present there. This is particularly supported by the detailed account P-2269 provided on the base set up in Gobere, the different groups present there and the activities they carried out.⁶²⁸ Similarly, the Ngaïssona Defence’s arguments concerning the list provided by P-2269 and his handwriting are based on speculation and do not make the remainder of his evidence unreliable. As regards the remaining inconsistencies raised concerning his account, in particular on the leadership structure in Gobere and his concrete role in the movement, as well as regarding financial and materiel support, the Chamber has assessed P-2269’s evidence together with other evidence before it.

423. Overall, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of P-2269's information on a case-by-case basis and within the context of other evidence before it.

xv. P-2602

424. P-2602, a former FACA member and Anti-Balaka chief,⁶³⁰ was initially expected to testify fully live.⁶³¹ Later, the Chamber found that he was unavailable to testify orally and his prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(c) of the Rules.⁶³²

425. P-2602 testified on the creation, structure, organisation, recruitment and training of the groups based in Gobere, their attacks on the villages around Bossangoa prior to 5 December 2013, and the planning and execution of the Anti-Balaka attacks on Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.

426. All parties have relied on parts of P-2602's evidence in support of their arguments.⁶³³ At the same time, the Ngaïssona Defence submits that key aspects of P-2602's account with regard to the group in Gobere are uncorroborated and that his narrative is both internally and externally inconsistent.⁶³⁴ In particular, it argues that P-2602's evidence is inconsistent with the evidence of other witnesses as regards the location of Gobere, the origins of the 'Gobere group', its organisation and structure, the nature of the training received there, and the command structure and internal hierarchy within the group.⁶³⁵ In addition, the Ngaïssona Defence challenges some aspects of P-2602's account with regard to the attacks on the villages around Bossangoa prior to 5 December 2013. More concretely, it argues that P-2602's evidence is inconsistent with that of other witnesses as to which villages were attacked, when these attacks took place and what the underlying strategy was.⁶³⁶

427. Having assessed P-2602's testimony holistically, in light of the Ngaïssona Defence's allegations and in relation to other evidence before it, the Chamber concludes that it is generally credible. P-2602 had a vast amount of first-hand knowledge about the events in 2013, especially about the various groups in Gobere, including his own, and the attacks in the Bossangoa region. As to the latter, the Chamber finds that the inconsistencies raised by the Ngaïssona Defence concerning the exact circumstances of the attacks on the villages were minor, especially since P-2602 was not present in all of the attacks and did not claim to list them exhaustively in his account.⁶³⁷ In the view of the Chamber, P-2602 appeared forthcoming and knowledgeable about his own involvement in the Anti-Balaka and his actions in 2013.⁶³⁸ P-2602's account was largely internally consistent, he appeared to be generally able to distinguish between the sources of his knowledge and was able to explain the differences in his interview with the Prosecution sufficiently.⁶³⁹ Overall, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of P-2602's information on a case-by-case basis and within the context of other evidence before it.

428. P-2673, a member of the FACA who previously worked as an intelligence officer with the Presidential Guard of François Bozizé, testified with in-court protective measures.⁶⁴⁰ His prior recorded statement was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁶⁴¹
429. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-2673's evidence should be afforded no weight since he 'admitted' that his colleagues and people in Bangui did not trust him and considered him a traitor, his contacts stopped sharing information with him while he was allegedly gathering incriminating information on Mr Ngaïssona in Cameroon, and because he also 'admitted' that certain people might have had a motive to give him false or misleading information.⁶⁴² The Ngaïssona Defence also submits that the witness participated in a scheme to falsely incriminate Mr Ngaïssona.⁶⁴³ In particular, it argues that P-2673's demeanour was 'unnatural and rehearsed' and to avoid contradicting himself, he 'repeatedly referred to his statement when answering questions'.⁶⁴⁴
430. The Chamber considers that the witness's in-court testimony was coherent with his prior recorded statement, and that his openness and explanations about why certain individuals did not trust him, as well as admitting that he might have received false or misleading information, reinforced the witness's credibility.⁶⁴⁵ Furthermore, the Chamber notes that the witness provided differentiated answers and made clear that some of the information he received from others turned out to be incorrect, but that he usually attempted to cross-check the information he received. P-2673 was also clear about which events he experienced himself, and distinguished own experiences from matters he heard from others, often specifying sources of the information he received. The Chamber also considers that, in this instance, the fact that these individuals might have had a negative opinion about P-2673 is not in itself sufficient to undermine the witness's credibility overall. The Chamber also considers the Ngaïssona Defence's argument about P-2673's demeanour to be speculative.

431. As to the Ngaïssona Defence's claim that P-2673 was part of a scheme to falsely incriminate Mr Ngaïssona, the Chamber notes, as further detailed below, that it is essentially based on the evidence of D30-4914 and D30-4197, whom the Chamber considers not credible in this regard.⁶⁴⁶ Furthermore, in this instance and taking into account its findings in the preceding paragraph on the witness's candour, the Chamber does not consider that P-2673's testimony was 'rehearsed' or that it lacked spontaneity simply because he 'repeatedly' referred to or stood by his prior recorded testimony during his examination in court, but rather merely referred to information which he already provided.
432. The Chamber further notes that the Ngaïssona Defence points to aspects in P-2673's testimony that it argues were inaccurate, speculative and inconsistent, and therefore, cannot be relied on to reach any conclusions.⁶⁴⁷ These relate, inter alia, to his testimony concerning Mr Ngaïssona's stay in Cameroon,⁶⁴⁸ links between the FROCCA and the Anti-Balaka,⁶⁴⁹ and Mr Ngaïssona's activities at the border with Cameroon, including financing of elements.⁶⁵⁰ The Chamber considered that these aspects, as such, did not render P-2673's testimony unreliable.
433. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed P-2673's testimony holistically, in light of the other evidence received before it.

434. P-2843, who worked with Mr Ngaïssona during the relevant time as deputy secretary general of the Central African Football Federation and was a member of the KNK party, testified fully live with in-court protective measures,⁶⁵¹ and received Rule 74 assurances.⁶⁵²
435. The Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence rely on parts of P-2843's evidence in support of their arguments.⁶⁵³ The Prosecution relies on P-2843's evidence, especially his emails and Facebook exchanges, to show Mr Ngaïssona's coordinating role in the Anti-Balaka.⁶⁵⁴ In particular, the Prosecution refers to P-2843's testimony about emails concerning Doguela and Lakouetene's 'requests for military, financial, and material assistance for Anti-Balaka elements in the field' to Mr Ngaïssona.⁶⁵⁵
436. Concerning these emails, the Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-2843 testified that the contents of the email exchanges 'were entirely fabricated as a ruse to extort money' from Mr Ngaïssona.⁶⁵⁶ It also argues that the email exchanges between P-2843 and Mr Ngaïssona do not have sufficient indicia of reliability 'as the timestamps are not consistent for email threads containing the same exchange'.⁶⁵⁷ The Ngaïssona Defence further argues that P-2843 confirmed he never discussed with Mr Ngaïssona the Anti-Balaka or military matters during their frequent exchanges.⁶⁵⁸

437. In the view of the Chamber, considering their past association, P-2843 was well placed to comment on Mr Ngaïssona's email address and the emails he exchanged with Mr Ngaïssona.⁶⁵⁹ P-2843 interacted with Mr Ngaïssona and had regular telephone and email contact with him during the relevant period.⁶⁶⁰ P-2843 was also able to observe Mr Ngaïssona from the perspective of their work together with the Central African Football Federation.⁶⁶¹ Further, the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments concerning these emails were not such that they affected P-2843's overall credibility.
438. At the same time, the Chamber noted that P-2843 had very limited direct information about Mr Ngaïssona's involvement with the Anti-Balaka. P-2843 claimed that he did not speak to Mr Ngaïssona about military operations.⁶⁶² P-2843 said that he was 'not able to tell' or 'capable of telling' what Mr Ngaïssona was doing as a coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.⁶⁶³ P-2843, asked what Mr Ngaïssona did at the time as the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, said that since he himself did not belong to the Anti-Balaka, he 'did not really know' what Mr Ngaïssona did.⁶⁶⁴
439. The Chamber also considered that P-2843 provided inconsistent evidence in relation to the content of his Facebook exchanges with Rod Larry Martial Gallaut. For example, P-2843 initially denied having discussions about military operations with this individual,⁶⁶⁵ but later confirmed that the word 'matos' was used in their exchanges and was a reference to military equipment.⁶⁶⁶
440. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of P-2843's evidence on a case-by-case basis in light of other evidence available before it, in particular the specific aspects of his testimony concerning the emails mentioned above and the related Ngaïssona Defence's arguments are assessed further below.⁶⁶⁷

xviii. D29-3014

441. Fidèle Soussou, a former civil servant from Boda and father of Habib Soussou,⁶⁶⁸ testified without in-court protective measures.⁶⁶⁹ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁶⁷⁰
442. As discussed above, the Yekatom Defence relies on the evidence of Fidèle Soussou to dispute P-1962's claims on a number of issues, notably concerning the attack on Boda.⁶⁷¹
443. Fidèle Soussou indicated that he knew P-1962 'rather well' because they were living in the same district in Boda, he knows 'his whole family' and would even see him nowadays 'from time to time' in Boda.⁶⁷² In his prior statement, Fidèle Soussou said that he never saw P-1962 during the events in 2013 and 2014.⁶⁷³ He then clarified in court that by 'events' he meant the events in Boda, indicating that he was in Bangui for his medical treatment after the Seleka left Boda in January 2014, and that he only knew about what happened in Boda once he returned there. He also indicated that he could not say anything about what occurred in Bangui.⁶⁷⁴
444. In relation to the above and his claims concerning P-1962 and Boda, the Chamber notes that Fidèle Soussou repeatedly indicated that he was not in Boda during the attack in February 2014 and therefore, had limited evidence concerning the attack on Boda, which did not assist the Chamber in assessing the credibility of P-1962's evidence. Furthermore, the Chamber notes certain claims made by Fidèle Soussou that do not appear reliable. First, the witness testified that he would call members of his family ‘from time to time’ to tell them about his health issues when he was in Bangui,⁶⁷⁵ and that he did not have contact with his son Habib Soussou when the latter was in Boda.⁶⁷⁶ The Chamber does not find it probable that Fidèle Soussou was in touch with other family members in Boda at the time, but did not call his son during that period. Second, the Chamber considers it unlikely that Fidèle Soussou did not know at the time that his son was an Anti-Balaka coordinator in Boda,⁶⁷⁷ and that the latter was sanctioned for the alleged commission of serious crimes.⁶⁷⁸ Third, the Chamber also takes note that Fidèle Soussou said that he knew ‘nothing’ about Mr Ngaïssona,⁶⁷⁹ and does not consider credible his statement that he had ‘no information’ concerning the Anti-Balaka, despite being in contact with people in Boda.⁶⁸⁰

445. In any event, the Chamber has not relied on D29-3014 for the purposes of determining any factual allegations.

446. Brice Stanislas Mohi, a former football player who fled to Douala after the Seleka coup, testified without in-court protective measures,⁶⁸¹ with his prior recorded testimony introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁶⁸²

447. The Ngaïssona Defence relies on Brice Stanislas Mohi’s evidence to demonstrate the presence and circumstances of Mr Ngaïssona’s stay in Cameroon in 2013 and to contest the claim that Mr Ngaïssona financed transportation of elements to the Cameroonian border.⁶⁸³

448. At the outset, the Chamber notes that Brice Stanislas Mohi stayed in Douala, visited Mr Ngaïssona's house and directly interacted with Mr Ngaïssona and his family in 2013.
449. As set out below, having reviewed his evidence, the Chamber notes that Brice Stanislas Mohi was not forthcoming in his testimony and limited the scope of his knowledge on the events throughout the testimony. In particular, the Chamber finds that the witness downplayed the frequency and nature of his interactions with Mr Ngaïssona in Douala and thereafter in the CAR. At the same time, the witness also overemphasised Mr Ngaïssona's involvement in football-related activities at the time, admitting either not knowing or having heard about Mr Ngaïssona's involvement in anything but football-related activities during the relevant time.⁶⁸⁴ In the view of the Chamber, the witness's claims, in and of themselves, are highly improbable and contradicted by other evidence before it.
450. For example, in his statement, Brice Stanislas Mohi said that in Douala, he would see Mr Ngaïssona 'often', one or two times per month, including on Saturdays, during the weekend.⁶⁸⁵ In court, asked about his visits to Mr Ngaïssona, the witness said that they did not take place often and that '[s]ometimes', he would go there on Saturday or Sunday, if there was nothing to do at home.⁶⁸⁶
451. Furthermore, in court, Brice Stanislas Mohi claimed that in his interactions with Mr Ngaïssona, they did not 'speak about what had happened in the country' and that they would speak 'a lot more about football' and 'sometimes' watch matches together.⁶⁸⁷ Brice Stanislas Mohi, when asked, said that he never had a conversation with Mr Ngaïssona about people going back from Cameroon to the CAR to 'rise in revolt'.⁶⁸⁸ He said that Mr Ngaïssona was not a member of the Anti-Balaka and was 'much more interested in football'.⁶⁸⁹ The witness said that, at the time, 'all Central Africans', including himself, had heard about the Anti-Balaka movement but that he never saw Mr Ngaïssona participate in it and only knew him as the president of the football federation.⁶⁹⁰ Brice Stanislas Mohi also said that during his interactions with Mr Ngaïssona in 2013, he ‘never heard’ that Mr Ngaïssona supported those who wanted to go back to the country and fight, and repeated that ‘he was interested a lot more in football’.⁶⁹¹ He also denied having heard about Mr Ngaïssona participating in meetings in Cameroon with François Bozizé and others, saying that Mr Ngaïssona ‘invested himself in Central African football’ but was not a ‘soldier’.⁶⁹² The witness, when asked if he had heard Mr Ngaïssona being involved in reinstating François Bozizé to power, said that he never heard Mr Ngaïssona say that, but ‘[p]erhaps people spoke about it’.⁶⁹³ The witness also did not hear about Mr Ngaïssona having gone to the border to Bertoua or Garam-Boualai.⁶⁹⁴

452. The Chamber notes that the witness’s claims as outlined above are overly generalised and in part blanket denials deprived of context, in addition to some of these claims being in stark contrast to the evidence before the Chamber.

453. In addition, the Chamber notes that Brice Stanislas Mohi continued to limit his own knowledge about his interactions with other Central African individuals at the ‘Total’ gas station in Douala to football, and said that neither Mr Ngaïssona nor the Anti-Balaka were ever discussed during these conversations.⁶⁹⁵

454. The Chamber also notes that the witness denied having phone contacts with ‘Machin Machin’, Samy Urbain, and Eusebe Emtenu, when shown CDR reflecting such contacts.⁶⁹⁶ When asked whether he was ever in contact with Perrieur Dongombe, Brice Stanislas Mohi said that he did not know him at all and said that perhaps the latter worked for the federation.⁶⁹⁷

455. Regarding the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments contesting Brice Stanislas Mohi's claim that Mr Ngaïssona financed the transportation of elements to the Cameroonian border, the Chamber recalls its conclusions concerning the credibility of P-1719's evidence.⁶⁹⁸
456. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed with great caution the veracity of Brice Stanislas Mohi's claims and opinions in light of other evidence received.

xx. D30-4679

457. Didier Ouebio, a FACA member and former co-pilot of the presidential helicopter of François Bozizé at the relevant time, testified fully live without in-court protective measures.⁶⁹⁹
458. Didier Ouebio testified about the events that occurred in Cameroon, where he took François Bozizé into exile in March 2013.⁷⁰⁰ Didier Ouebio lived with François Bozizé at the Hilton hotel⁷⁰¹ and then in a villa at the Cité du Golf,⁷⁰² leaving Cameroon in April 2014,⁷⁰³ after François Bozizé's departure therefrom.⁷⁰⁴
459. The Prosecution and the Ngaïssona Defence rely on parts of his evidence.⁷⁰⁵ At the same time, the Ngaïssona Defence argues that Didier Ouebio 'did not necessarily have access to secret information, but absent the extra context, could be mistaken to have greater knowledge than he did'.⁷⁰⁶ It argues that Didier Ouebio's use of slang, in particular 'the boss', in his Facebook exchanges can refer to 'many different individuals'.⁷⁰⁷ The Ngaïssona Defence also argues that his testimony does not confirm the veracity of the Facebook exchanges concerning Mr Ngaïssona's alleged military instructions in November 2013.⁷⁰⁸ In addition, it submits that Didier Ouebio's evidence contradicts or refutes that of P-1847 and P-2673 concerning the activities in Cameroon.⁷⁰⁹

460. In the view of the Chamber, despite such close ties with François Bozizé, Didier Ouebio provided little information and repeatedly denied knowing the details of the events and meetings that occurred in Cameroon.⁷¹⁰ While the Chamber did not assume he would have access to 'secret information', as argued by the Ngaiissona Defence, his reticence to provide very few details about the events he witnessed himself suggests that he was not forthcoming. The Chamber notes that Didier Ouebio explained that when he was initially approached by the Prosecution in 2020, he was uncomfortable and refused to answer questions about François Bozizé.⁷¹¹ The Chamber found that a similar attitude prevailed during his testimony. Further, due to his position and relationship with François Bozizé, the Chamber considers that Didier Ouebio was not entirely truthful.⁷¹²
461. Concerning the Facebook exchanges shown to him in court, Didier Ouebio did not deny writing them but, in the Chamber's view, downplayed the content of the messages, insofar as they related to François Bozizé and the activities in Cameroon. For example, Didier Ouebio indicated that all the information he had was 'based on rumours',⁷¹³ and although the messages included very specific information regarding attacks, he answered that they were mere references to 'terms [they] used when playing cards'.⁷¹⁴ Further, while acknowledging that the term 'le patron' mentioned in his messages referred to François Bozizé, Didier Ouebio repeatedly said that those actions indicated by 'le patron' did not come from François Bozizé but from Didier Ouebio himself.⁷¹⁵ The Chamber also considered unreasonable his

462. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the veracity of Didier Ouebio’s claims and opinions in light of other evidence received.

xxi. D30-4848

463. D30-4848, a member of the Presidential Guard under François Bozizé from 2003 until 2005,⁷¹⁷ testified fully live with in-court protective measures.⁷¹⁸ In 2013, D30-4848 fled from Bangui to the Republic of the Congo and later to Douala, Cameroon, and returned to Bangui after Djotodia’s resignation in 2014.⁷¹⁹

464. The Prosecution relies on D30-4848’s evidence, especially regarding his Facebook exchanges, to show Mr Ngaïssona’s presence and activities in Douala.⁷²⁰ The Ngaïssona Defence relies on parts of this witness’s evidence,⁷²¹ while also arguing that his Facebook exchanges are based on rumours and not reliable.⁷²²

465. Having reviewed his evidence holistically, in light of these arguments, the Chamber finds D30-4848 evasive and not forthcoming, despite being in a position to provide direct information about events in Cameroon. For example, when asked about his Facebook exchange regarding Mr Ngaïssona’s role within ‘the anti’, D30-4848 said that this is ‘something that we lived through, but it’s something that we heard about, and we were sharing in the conditional sense in order to shed light on matters’, adding that they were speaking in the conditional ‘because we’re seeing the situation from afar’.⁷²³ Similarly, when asked about certain Facebook exchanges suggesting that he was circulating information about Bozizé's location, D30-4848 said that he did not believe that was the case and that he knew 'nothing more' in this regard.⁷²⁴

466. Further, D30-4848 distanced himself from the activities in Cameroon and downplayed his knowledge, by saying, inter alia, that 'in no way was I part of anything when I was in Cameroon', despite the fact that he appeared in Facebook exchanges concerning activities there.⁷²⁵ D30-4848 also claimed not to be in a 'good position' to tell the court anything about Mr Ngaïssona's designation as the general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.⁷²⁶ D30-4848, when asked about Olivier Gbangouma, said that they grew up in the same neighbourhood, that they would meet as CAR compatriots but they never talked 'about anything', that 'I was not close to that environment, I was in my own corner', and that 'since we are compatriots, we may just have exchanges, but not on any particular issue'.⁷²⁷
467. Furthermore, the Chamber has noted the answers provided by D30-4848 concerning his interactions with P-2673 after learning that the latter had testified before the Chamber,⁷²⁸ in the context of assessing his answers on his own involvement during the events relevant to the charges. The Chamber has considered this as one additional factor supporting the Chamber's conclusion but would have reached the same conclusion based on D30-4848's overall evasiveness even without considering these interactions.
468. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed with great caution the veracity of D30-4848's claims and opinions in light of other evidence available before it.

469. D30-4914, a gendarme and former Anti-Balaka element, testified with in-court protective measures,⁷²⁹ and received Rule 74 assurances.⁷³⁰ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁷³¹ D30-4914 explained that he was a ‘non-commissioned officer’ and therefore ‘not an officer in the gendarmerie’ at the time he was seconded from Bangui to Beloko in October 2013, at the CAR border with Cameroon,⁷³² where he led a group and participated in the attack against the Seleka in 2014.⁷³³
470. The Ngaïssona Defence heavily relies on D30-4914’s evidence, including to support its argument that certain individuals, such as P-1719 and P-2673, were involved in a scheme to falsely incriminate Mr Ngaïssona.⁷³⁴
471. Having reviewed his evidence as a whole, the Chamber concludes that D30-4914’s account did not appear truthful on certain aspects. In particular, the Chamber notes that D30-4914, when asked, said that the population of Beloko nicknamed him as the ‘chief of general staff of the Anti-Balaka’, and that he was ‘divinely chosen to try to save an entire people who were in trouble’.⁷³⁵ At the same time, D30-4914 denied the existence of the Anti-Balaka before October 2013, claiming that the term only came into being ‘after’ 20 January 2014,⁷³⁶ which the Chamber notes contradicts the evidence before it. 4914 that stand out have been specifically addressed in the Chamber's evidentiary analysis further below.⁷³⁷

472. Concerning D30-4914's evidence on the alleged meetings to incriminate Mr Ngaïssona, the Chamber considers this evidence entirely speculative and based on anonymous hearsay.⁷³⁸
473. In particular, D30-4914 testified that these 'counteroffensive meetings' were 'recurrent' and 'held every Sunday [...] at Mondjo, in the private residencies of number one in Bangui', after Mr Ngaïssona's arrest, and provided more details about them.⁷³⁹ D30-4914, when asked, explained that he understood 'counteroffensive' to mean persons or elements who would be 'prepared, where possible, to come and testify from a different angle but along the same lines of the case' against Mr Ngaïssona.⁷⁴⁰ When asked about the sources of his information, D30-4914 said generally that he knew how to gather information through the elements of the PG.⁷⁴¹ He did not provide any further information that could assist the Chamber in evaluating the weight to be given to these claims. Furthermore, when asked about the content of these meetings, D30-4914 used very qualified language that did not suggest a clear answer; he said that going by the information he had gathered before his testimony, 'there was [a] need to have a counteroffensive meeting in relation to the Patrice-Edouard Ngaïssona case'.⁷⁴² Importantly, D30-4914 said, 'I became aware of this meeting in the corridors, but I don't know whether the meeting actually held. But I found out that there was going to be a counter-positional meeting in the Patrice Ngaïssona case'.⁷⁴³
474. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has assessed the reliability of D30-4914's evidence on a case-by-case basis, in light of other evidence available before it.

c. Crime-base witnesses

i. P-2049

475. P-2049, a Muslim civilian from Bossangoa, testified fully live with in-court protective measures.⁷⁴⁴ He testified about the Anti-Balaka attacks on and near Bossangoa in 2013, including the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013. In particular, he provided evidence on the identities of victims of these attacks.

476. The Prosecution relies on P-2049's evidence in support of some of its arguments.⁷⁴⁵ The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the witness is not credible as his claims are contradictory, implausible, insincere, biased and inconsistent with other reliable evidence.⁷⁴⁶ It also submits that his evidence about the death of individuals in the various attacks in Zere, Benzambé and Bossangoa is unsubstantiated, untruthful and based on anonymous hearsay;⁷⁴⁷ and further argues that P-2049 and his family were associated with the Seleka.⁷⁴⁸

477. As set out below, having reviewed his testimony in light of these allegations, the Chamber nonetheless considers P-2049's account generally credible.

478. In the view of the Chamber, P-2049 was clear about how he became aware of the events that occurred in and around Bossangoa, and explained his sources of knowledge.⁷⁴⁹ The Chamber notes that throughout his testimony, P-2049 differentiated clearly between his personal experiences and the information he came to learn from others. For example, P-2049, when asked about an individual selling gris-gris, stated that he 'did not see those products with [his] own eyes' and that his information on this was based on what he had heard.⁷⁵⁰ P-2049, when asked about 'Caporal Ndangba', said that he had 'heard people talk about him',⁷⁵¹ and explained the source of his information.⁷⁵² P-2049, when asked if he was ‘informed about everything that was happening’ in Bossangoa at the time, said that one had to ‘make a distinction’ and that, at the École de la Liberté, it was possible for him to receive information because he was present but could not receive information about what was happening in their area or in the bush.⁷⁵³

479. The Chamber considered P-2049 forthcoming about not knowing certain details of the events in general. For example, P-2049 denied knowing details about the Seleka bases or elements in Bowaye, and stated that he ‘had not been to Bowaye for more than 10 or 20 years’ and did not have any information as he did not have ‘any friend or family member in Bowaye’.⁷⁵⁴ Similarly, P-2049 said that he did not know whether certain Muslim civilians were armed during the attacks in Benzambé, Koro-Mpoko and Sadjó since he was not there,⁷⁵⁵ and that he also did not know about Muslim traders giving money to the Seleka in Ouham-Bac.⁷⁵⁶ Shown a video footage in court, P-2049 recalled seeing the footage and having provided it to the Prosecution, but acknowledged that he did not know how the images were taken and qualified his answers about the location depicted in the video with ‘I believe’.⁷⁵⁷
480. The Chamber notes that P-2049 continued to remain discerning about his source of knowledge and limits thereof also when it concerned the details of the victims of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013. For example, P-2049, when asked whether one of the victims he had listed was a young boy, said that ‘these people’ were not his family members and that he was not able to know the ages of everyone.⁷⁵⁸
481. In light of this, the Chamber finds baseless the Ngaïssona Defence’s arguments that P-2049 claimed to be ‘aware of everything when it suited him but nothing when it did not, while extensively resorting to hearsay’.⁷⁵⁹

482. Turning to the inconsistencies raised by the Ngaïssona Defence, the Chamber finds that they were minor and did not affect P-2049's credibility. This includes the alleged inconsistencies regarding P-2049's studies,⁷⁶⁰ the time of Achille Godonam's return to the CAR,⁷⁶¹ and people speaking to the imam about seeking refuge.⁷⁶²
483. As to the Ngaïssona Defence's argument that P-2049 repeatedly referred to his prior statement to avoid contradicting himself,⁷⁶³ the Chamber considered that this did not affect his credibility negatively but rather positively. P-2049 was not only able to provide plausible explanations whenever such occasions arose, he specified clearly when he was not able to recall the specific names of victims as written in his notebook, which he was not able to bring to the courtroom.⁷⁶⁴
484. Turning to the Ngaïssona Defence's argument that P-2049 provided untruthful evidence concerning the victims of the attacks in Zere and Benzambé,⁷⁶⁵ the Chamber has assessed this evidence in light of other evidence received.⁷⁶⁶
485. As regards the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments that his testimony about a photograph that was supposedly taken in Bossangoa was untruthful,⁷⁶⁷ the Chamber considers that P-2049 was clear that he did not take the photograph himself, but that it was shown to him by someone else who had said that the bodies depicted therein were people who had been killed on 5 December 2013.⁷⁶⁸ In any event, the Chamber has not relied on this photograph to reach any conclusions on this attack. ‘declared publicly that he had 10,000 men’ and that this ‘was known by everybody’, the Chamber has not relied on P-2049’s general claim in this regard.⁷⁶⁹

486. Turning to the Ngaïssona Defence’s arguments regarding P-2049’s and his family’s alleged association with the Seleka,⁷⁷⁰ the Chamber notes that these arguments are based on generalisations and the anonymous hearsay account provided by another witness, who said that she ‘only heard’ but never saw P-2049 bearing a machete and speculated generally that the Seleka and the Muslims had a ‘perfect understanding’ between them.⁷⁷¹ The Chamber also cannot draw any conclusions from the comparison of audio-visual material used by the Ngaïssona Defence to show that it was P-2049 holding a machete in a video.⁷⁷²
487. Further, in the Chamber’s view, P-2049 did not show bias towards either the Anti-Balaka or the Seleka. He referred to the Seleka as ‘rebels’, testified about crimes committed by both the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka, and attributed his suffering to both equally.⁷⁷³
488. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has considered P-2049’s evidence within the context of other information before it. Specifically, as regards his evidence concerning the identity of the victims of the attack on Bossangoa on 5 December 2013, the Chamber has addressed them in its evidentiary analysis below.⁷⁷⁴ was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁷⁷⁶ He testified about his experience in the Anti-Balaka in Dedane's group and his involvement in the attacks that occurred on and near Bossangoa in 2013. P-2658 was also present in Bossangoa during the attack on 5 December 2013 and its aftermath.

490. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that P-2658 is not credible as his evidence is contradictory,⁷⁷⁷ based on second-hand information,⁷⁷⁸ and inconsistent with other reliable evidence.⁷⁷⁹

491. At the outset, the Chamber notes that P-2658 was in a unique position as a Muslim in an Anti-Balaka group in and around Gobere and Bossangoa in 2013. Having assessed his testimony holistically, the Chamber considered that P-2658 was forthcoming about his own involvement in the events. P-2658 admitted that he was viewed with suspicion by certain Muslims in Bossangoa because of his links with the Anti-Balaka.⁷⁸⁰ In the Chamber's view, P-2658's openness about this reflected positively on the credibility of his account.

492. Moreover, in the view of the Chamber, P-2658 provided largely consistent and internally coherent evidence.⁷⁸¹ Further, P-2658 clearly differentiated between his personal experiences and information he came to learn from others and was able to explain and point out the sources of his knowledge.⁷⁸² As to the inconsistencies with other evidence, the Chamber notes that when P-2658 was confronted with them in court, he maintained his account and clearly explained what he had personally experienced.⁷⁸³

493. The Chamber notes that while P-2658 had first-hand experience being part of Dedane's group until the Bossangoa attack in September 2013, he was not in a position to be well informed of all the details of the group's circumstances. Indeed, P-2658 did not accompany Dedane on a few trips in 2013.⁷⁸⁴ Further, the time that P-2658 spent with the Anti-Balaka was limited.⁷⁸⁵ In the view of the Chamber, this did not affect the credibility of his account in general. The Chamber has also borne this in mind when assessing the purported issues in his evidence raised by the Ngaïssona Defence.

494. As regards certain inconsistencies pointed out by the Ngaïssona Defence, the Chamber found them immaterial and not affecting the credibility of P-2658's account as a whole. For example, there is no contradiction in P-2658's testimony about Dedane having a group and travelling by motorbike⁷⁸⁶ and Dedane, or the Anti-Balaka, entertaining anti-Muslim sentiment. Similarly, P-2658's evidence concerning the location of Gobere and the activities there did not suggest that he was never there or that his account on this aspect was wholly unreliable.⁷⁸⁷
495. Having regard to the above, the Chamber concludes that P-2658's testimony is generally credible. As regards the issues raised by the Ngaïssona Defence relating to certain other specific aspects of his evidence, as noted above, the Chamber has assessed them holistically, in light of the other evidence received before it, in its evidentiary analysis below.

The Chamber considers P-0966's evidence that he never saw Dedane riding a motorbike during that period or that he never saw any motorbikes. However, in the view of the Chamber, this does not negate P-2658's evidence.

iii. D30-4608

496. D30-4608, a Catholic priest from Bossangoa who was present during the attacks on Bossangoa in September and December 2013, testified with in-court protective measures.⁷⁸⁸ His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.⁷⁸⁹
497. The Ngaïssona Defence heavily relies on D30-4608's evidence to counter the arguments made by several witnesses on the events that occurred in Bossangoa in 2013 and 2014.⁷⁹⁰ The Prosecution argues that some of D30-4608's evidence is not reliable as it is based on hearsay, such as claiming that it 'was common knowledge' that there were arms stored in the mosques.⁷⁹¹
498. As set out below, the Chamber considers that D30-4608's claims and opinions concerning the Seleka and the Muslims, when assessed together, indicated a strong bias against the Muslim community in Bossangoa, so much so that they threw into question his evidence on key aspects relevant to the Chamber. Furthermore, these claims were not supported by any other evidence before the Chamber.
499. D30-4608 made broad generalisations about the Muslims in Bossangoa and was unable to explain the source of his knowledge or opinion.⁷⁹² For example, D30-4608 stated that Muslim civilians were armed, even the women, even before the Seleka arrived, such as with Kalashnikovs; that there had always been arms stored at the mosques, even before the rebellion of 2003; and that the Seleka gave arms to the Muslims to protect themselves, and also protected the traders.⁷⁹³ He further stated that some Muslim civilians joined the Seleka, providing some names, including that of a woman.⁷⁹⁴ During his testimony, when asked whether he had seen Muslim civilians with arms back then, he said that he saw '[n]otably young people', that he remembered one by face and name, and that 'all the young Muslims of Bossangoa, even traders, they all had weapons'.⁷⁹⁵ When asked whether he saw other women besides the one he mentioned in his statement who had weapons, he said that he had 'heard of that' and that 'many people' had seen the woman he mentioned.⁷⁹⁶ When asked how he learnt that there were arms stored in the mosques, he said that 'everybody knew that', that it was 'common knowledge', that he had discovered 'a lot of weapons in the mosque of Paoua' and that '[i]n Bossangoa, everybody talked about it'.⁷⁹⁷ When asked whether his statement that all the Muslims, even the women, were armed, was a generalisation, he said that 'it was more the majority of women', that it was 'known even in the town of Bossangoa' and that '[p]eople knew that'.⁷⁹⁸ He also said that Muslim civilians at the École de la Liberté were armed and 'walked around with their arms', 'always' carrying them.⁷⁹⁹

500. Further, D30-4608 testified that 'for the Muslim people, everyone who was not a Muslim was a Christian' and that one has to 'acknowledge this quality they have' in that 'they stick together', and '[i]f you do anything to one member of the Muslim community, you've hurt the entire community, but in the Christian community they will say a particular person was hurt, or shot, or whatever' and this is 'why there was this struggle between Muslims and Christians'.⁸⁰⁰

501. D30-4608, asked if he had heard that there were 90 Muslim civilians killed in Zere in September 2013, only said 'No. No', and when asked if he had heard different numbers, said that all he knew was that ‘they were threatened because the population knew that they were informants and therefore they fled’.⁸⁰¹

502. D30-4608 also said that the Muslims dislocated to the École de la Liberté in Bossangoa ‘had what they needed to live’ and all they needed was ‘to take shelter’ there.⁸⁰² D30-4608, asked if these Muslims feared for their lives, said that ‘[t]hat’s what they said’.⁸⁰³

503. Further, his bias appeared to also permeate his answers in favour of the Anti-Balaka. For example, in his prior recorded testimony, D30-4608 denied having had contact with the Anti-Balaka and stated that there were no Anti-Balaka in the bishopric compound in Bossangoa at the relevant time.⁸⁰⁴ However, when asked, D30-4608 admitted that Bertin Namdoka, a spokesperson of the Anti-Balaka, stayed in the bishopric compound, further admitting that he may have contacted this Anti-Balaka to ask what was going on.⁸⁰⁵ D30-4608 explained that, for him, the Anti-Balaka spokesperson was an ordinary civilian as he was not a ‘practitioner’ and ‘did not carry out the [Anti-Balaka] practices’.⁸⁰⁶

504. The Chamber notes that the witness’s whole testimony displayed anti-Muslim animus. In addition, the Chamber considered that parts of his evidence were largely inconsistent with that provided by many other witnesses, including Anti-Balaka insiders.⁸⁰⁷

505. Having regard to the above, the Chamber has only relied on D30-4608’s evidence on a very limited aspect in its evidentiary analysis below.⁸⁰⁸

d. Count 29

i. P-2475

506. P-2475, a former alleged ‘child soldier’ and Anti-Balaka element, testified fully live with in-court protective measures,⁸⁰⁹ and received Rule 74 assurances.⁸¹⁰ He reported being forcibly recruited by Mr Yekatom’s group in Boeing in or about July 2013, and having actively participated in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013. He also reported being stationed with Mr Yekatom’s elements at an Anti-Balaka base at Yamwara following the attack on Bangui. He later participated in the ‘child soldier’ demobilisation process in Pissa in August 2014, conducted by Enfants sans frontières (hereinafter: ‘ESF’ and the ‘ESF programme’, respectively), was present at the ‘centre de transit et d’orientation’ (the ‘CTO’) in Mbaïki, and appears on the list prepared by ESF officials containing the names of children that participated at the Mbaïki CTO (the ‘ESF List’).⁸¹¹

507. The Yekatom Defence has raised several challenges to the reliability of P-2475’s account and argues that P-2475’s ‘obvious lack of regard to his oath’ requires ‘the exclusion of his evidence’.⁸¹² In particular, it argues that P-2475 falsified his identifying details, namely his age;⁸¹³ the death of his mother;⁸¹⁴ his membership in Mr Yekatom’s group;⁸¹⁵ as well as his testimony in respect of (i) his abduction;⁸¹⁶ (ii) the presence of child soldiers in Mr Yekatom’s group;⁸¹⁷ (iii) Muslims being killed and buried at Yamwara;⁸¹⁸ and (iv) the killing of Djido Saleh by the Anti-Balaka.⁸¹⁹ Further, the Yekatom Defence argues that P-2475 provided an inconsistent account concerning, inter alia, his section chiefs, the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, and P-1839's role in this attack.⁸²⁰ Moreover, it asserts that P-2475 is connected with the certain officials 'in relation to his false testimony', and alleges that P-2475 was motivated by monetary gains to provide an unreliable account.⁸²¹

508. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution has not relied on P-2475's evidence to ascertain his age relevant to Count 29,⁸²² nor to support any other factual allegations.

509. Having considered the documents presented to demonstrate P-2475's age, the Chamber finds the attendant challenges to their reliability and authenticity well founded. First, the year of birth on P-2475's baptism certificate '1994' appears to have been overwritten with '1999' and does not correspond with the purported original copies of the baptism certificate obtained by the Yekatom Defence.⁸²³ Second, P-2475's school certificate appears to have been issued by someone who did not have the authority to do so.⁸²⁴ Third, another one of P-2475's school certificates appears to contain a correction in white ink and overwriting on the years of attendance as '2011-2012', and D29-6011, who issued this certificate, stated that this correction was not done by him.⁸²⁵ For these reasons, the Chamber cannot rely on these documents to enter any findings relating to P-2475's age.

The Prosecution also indicated that it did not intend to rely on the documents collected by P-2580 namely, P-2475's school records and baptism certificate. This concerns Certificates, CAR-OTP-2128-1197; CAR-OTP-2128-1201; and CAR-OTP-2128-1202. See further Prosecution Response to the Yekatom Defence 'Request for the Exclusion of Fabricated Evidence' (ICC-01/14-01/18-2240-Conf), ICC-01/14-01/18-2313-Conf, para. 14.

⁸²⁴ Certificate, CAR-OTP-2128-1201. This certificate is issued in October 2020 by someone named Elisée Hermann Yanguere Nganasse, who was not the school principal in 2020. See List, CAR-D29-0014-0071, that displays a list of principals at the relevant school showing that 'Elisée H.YANGUERE-NG' was the principal from 2013 to 2016. D29-6011, a director in an elementary school, confirmed in his statement that it was not possible for a former principal to issue a school certificate when they were no longer in that role; only a current principal had that capacity. See D29-6011 Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0362-R01, at 0366, para. 27. See also P-2084: T-235, p. 3, lines 10-13; Photograph, CAR-OTP-00000366.

⁸²⁵ Certificate, CAR-OTP-2128-1202. D29-6011, the Director of Pissa elementary school from March 2017 onwards was shown Certificates, CAR-OTP-2128-1202 and CAR-D29-0013-0130 (copy of CAR-OTP-2128-1202). He stated that they appear to be the same document but, in the latter, noted that some corrections appear in white ink; D29-6011

510. In addition, and having reviewed the testimonial evidence presented in relation to P-2475's age, the Chamber finds that it cannot conclude that he was indeed under 15 years of age at the relevant time. In this regard, the Chamber considered the evidence of P-2475's parents, namely D29-6016 and D29-6018, whom it finds credible. In particular, both D29-6016⁸²⁶ and D29-6018⁸²⁷ provided information indicating that P-2475 was not under 15 years at the relevant time.

511. The Chamber also notes the Yekatom Defence's submission that Didier Beninga (P-2580), who was not a witness in this case, may have been involved in falsifying P-2475's documents stated that he did not recall having made these corrections; he also did not recognise the handwriting in which the academic year ('2011-2012') had been written. D29-6011 provided that he verified the records in the archives of the school in the school at Pissa and P-2475's name appears in the list of candidates that obtained their certificate in 2010; he confirmed that P-2475's name does not appear for the academic years that followed beginning from years 2010-2011; to him, this confirmed that P-2475 was not registered in Pissa elementary school after the academic year 2010-2011 (see D29-6011 Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0362-R01, at 0366, paras 25-26).

⁸²⁷ D29-6018 First Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0396-R01, at 0399, paras 15-16, 19 (the witness, P-2475's biological father, stated that P-2475 was born in 1994 in Pissa, and that his mother is still alive, as opposed to deceased as claimed by P-2475 (see P-2475: T-130, p. 73, lines 21-24)), at 0399-0400, para. 21 (the witness confirmed P-2475's date of birth as 13 August 1994, as stated in the baptism card reflected in CAR-D29-0013-0004 (see also Baptism card, CAR-D29-0009-0404)). The Chamber notes in this regard also that a Prosecution report of a mission in September 2022 to the Saint Esprit Parish shows that P-2475's baptism records state that he was born in the year 1994 (see Report, CAR-OTP-00000320; Photographs, CAR-OTP-00000333; CAR-OTP-00000334). P-2084 confirmed that the secretary of that parish is called Yongolo Rigobert and says he is still in office even today (see P-2084: T-234, p. 13, lines 12-16). P-2084 confirmed that Yongolo keeps a baptism register and has been working in the parish for at least 20 years (see P-2084: T-234, p. 13, lines 17-22). P-2084 confirmed that there is St Esprit parish at Pissa (see P-2084: T-234, p. 12, lines 20-22). P-2084 further explained how the baptisms were carried out and recorded in the baptism register at the church (see P-2084: T-234, p. 14, lines 2-18). D29-6018 stated that P-2475 was never an Anti-Balaka member, but participated in the ESF programme in 2014 in Mbaïki when he was 19 years old, receiving money at the end of the training which was meant to prevent children from joining an armed group (see D29-6018 Second Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0557-R01, at 0560, para. 22). The witness identified P-2475 in Facebook screenshots, but did not recognise him when shown a still from a video purportedly showing elements being trained at Yamwara (see D29-6018 First Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0396-R01, at 0400, para. 26 referring to Facebook screenshots, CAR-D29-0016-0066 and CAR-D29-0016-0067. See also Annex 3 to D29-6018 First Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0408; Annex 4 to D29-6018 First Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0409; D29-6018 Third Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0562-R01, at 0565 referring to Photograph, CAR-OTP-2095-5254). See also P-2084: T-234, p. 21, line 18 – p. 22, line 13 (P-2084 confirming D29-6018's identity and links with P-2475 and D29-6016).

purporting to show his age.⁸²⁸ A Prosecution investigation report mentions how P-2580 obtained P-2475's baptism certificate, himself saw the information in the church registry,⁸²⁹ and obtained the two school certificates for P-2475, confirming to the Prosecution that he had checked the information in the respective school registry.⁸³⁰

512. The Chamber further notes the evidence of D29-6011, director of Pissa elementary school from March 2017 onwards.⁸³¹ D29-6011 recalled 'Didier B[eninga]' (P-2580)⁸³² requesting P-2475's schooling certificates⁸³³ and issuing the primary school certificate after having looked at the school register for year 2009-2010,⁸³⁴ the overwritten years '2011-2012' therefore not being correct. As regards P-2475's school certificate, the Chamber concludes, as noted above, that it also appears to have been issued by someone who did not have the authority to do so.⁸³⁵ The Chamber notes that P-2475's name also appears in the school registers for the academic year 2010-2011.⁸³⁶ The Chamber recalls that P-2475, shown the names of principals in connection with his school certificates, said that he did not know how this certificate had been issued, had nothing to do with it and was not the one who produced it.⁸³⁷

513. Furthermore, and regardless of P-2580's involvement in acquiring P-2475's age-related documentation, the Chamber is not convinced that P-2475 was ever a member of Mr Yekatom's group or the Anti-Balaka, as set out below.

The document is wrongly referred to as 'CAR-OTP-2058-0568' in his statement (see D29-6011 Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0362-R01, at 0365, para. 19).

514. In this regard, the Chamber heard evidence from P-1839 and D29-6036, in addition to the testimony of P-2475's parents mentioned above, which it considers credible on this aspect.
515. P-1839, when asked, did not know a person called 'Ossema', a nickname that P-2475 purportedly used during his time with the Anti-Balaka.⁸³⁸ On the other hand, P-2475 correctly identified P-1839 in a photo⁸³⁹ but did not remember her name.⁸⁴⁰
516. D29-6036 testified fully live⁸⁴¹ and knew P-2475. They met in the period between the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013 and the arrival of the Anti-Balaka in Pissa. The witness played football matches with P-2475 in the period after 5 December 2013 when the Seleka were still in Pissa.⁸⁴² The witness said that he would meet P-2475 during this period,⁸⁴³ and would visit P-2475's family during this time.⁸⁴⁴ The witness said that he was with P-2475 when the Anti-Balaka entered Pissa.⁸⁴⁵ He also said that after the Seleka's departure and after the Anti-Balaka entered Pissa, P-2475 would give water to the Anti-Balaka stationed at the checkpoint in the vicinity of the gendarmerie.⁸⁴⁶ According to the witness, during this time, P-2475 continued his activities and meeting each other.⁸⁴⁷ The witness said that he never saw P-2475 within the Anti-Balaka movement.⁸⁴⁸
517. The Chamber also has regard to the evidence of other witnesses who also resided in Pissa, D29-6039 and D29-6048, who knew P-2475 and had no knowledge about his involvement with the Anti-Balaka.⁸⁴⁹

519. However, the Chamber is not persuaded that P-2475 participating in this programme meant that he was a ‘child soldier’ and/or an Anti-Balaka member. Indeed, P-2018, when asked why information about P-2475’s age was not found despite P-2580 living in Pissa next door to P-2475’s biological father, said that the verification process was done under UNICEF supervision and he was part of the team but, at the end, it was only UNICEF that did the work in managing the database and giving them the names, so it could be that P-2475 lied about being an unaccompanied child.⁸⁵²
520. Having considered his testimony in totality with the rest of the evidence before it, the Chamber finds that P-2475 was wholly unreliable on his involvement within Mr Yekatom’s group.
521. In light of this, the Chamber considers it unnecessary to address the Yekatom Defence’s submissions concerning the inconsistencies in P-2475’s evidence about his experiences as an element of Mr Yekatom’s group.

of the Rules.⁸⁵⁴ P-2476 testified that he was born in Bangui on ‘27 June 1999’ and is a national of the CAR.⁸⁵⁵ He claimed to have joined Mr Yekatom’s Anti-Balaka group in Mbaïki after meeting with Cœur de Lion, who appeared to have enlisted him.⁸⁵⁶

523. In particular, P-2476 claimed that at the time, at which he would have been approximately 14 years of age,⁸⁵⁷ he stayed at an Anti-Balaka base with two other alleged child soldiers, guarding it with a knife when other older Anti-Balaka elements or chiefs went out to fight; and that he himself did not participate in fighting.⁸⁵⁸ P-2476 also said that he was present and heard when the Anti-Balaka were planning their attack on Boda.⁸⁵⁹ P-2476 also attended the ESF programme.⁸⁶⁰

524. Further, P-2476 testified about (i) meeting Cœur de Lion prior to joining the Anti-Balaka; (ii) being present when Cœur de Lion went to attack Boda, which took place on or around 5 February 2014; and (iii) being privy to the meeting prior to the Boda attack between Cœur de Lion and ‘the prefect of Mbaïki’, which he described in some detail.⁸⁶¹

525. The Yekatom Defence argues that P-2476 was never a member of Mr Yekatom’s group,⁸⁶² and that his account concerning joining the group in Mbaïki is ‘completely unreliable’, pointing to inconsistencies in his account,⁸⁶³ including regarding P-2476 (i) changing his version about the amount of time he spent in Mr Yekatom’s group; (ii) being inconsistent about when he joined the group; and (iii) not being able to initially identify Cœur de Lion in a photoboard.⁸⁶⁴ It further submits that P-2476's family was present in Mbaïki or Pissa when he participated in the ESF programme,⁸⁶⁵ and that the ESF functionaries did not verify his family background even when such contact details were available to them.⁸⁶⁶

526. The Prosecution submits that P-2476 gave a credible and internally consistent account.⁸⁶⁷ It argues that the Yekatom Defence's arguments are primarily based on P-2476 participating in the ESF programme despite having family in Mbaïki.⁸⁶⁸ It adds that P-2476 not sharing his experience within the Anti-Balaka with his family members is 'corroborated by P-1974' and is 'particularly credible given the limited time of about one week' that P-2476 spent in the group.⁸⁶⁹ The Prosecution submits that P-2476's credibility is reinforced by his identification of Cœur de Lion in a photoboard.⁸⁷⁰

527. Having assessed P-2476's testimony in light of the submissions by the parties, the Chamber finds that there are indeed significant inconsistencies when it comes to his experiences within Mr Yekatom's group.

528. As discussed in detail below, the Chamber by majority, Judge Chung dissenting, finds P-2476's account to be wholly unreliable. In the view of the Chamber by majority, Judge Chung dissenting, these inconsistencies are irreconcilable with his remaining account and other evidence before the Chamber, namely, the length of time he spent in Mr Yekatom's group, when and how he joined it, and observing Cœur de Lion's role and actions in relation to Mbaïki and Boda.

529. Judge Chung considers that these inconsistencies were of a minor nature, especially given P-2476's age at the time of the events and his own admission that he was too young at the time to remember all the details correctly.⁸⁷¹

530. The majority appreciates that P-2476 did not need to remember all the details having to do with his experience in Mr Yekatom's group coherently and consistently, especially given his purported age at the time. However, in the view of the majority, the inconsistencies in his testimony were crucial to his account as an alleged child soldier, and such that the majority was unable to resolve the bold claims made by P-2476 about Cœur de Lion's actions with his inability to place himself in time in relation to the latter's death. The same held true for the amount of time that P-2476 allegedly spent in Mr Yekatom's group.
531. The Chamber notes that P-2476 would have arrived in Mbaïki somewhere in mid-2013.⁸⁷² P-2476 said that he did not remember the exact date that he joined the Anti-Balaka and met with Cœur de Lion, but claimed that this was before the Muslims were evacuated from Mbaïki,⁸⁷³ which took place at the earliest on or around 6 February 2014, and later agreed that it was after the Muslim evacuation.⁸⁷⁴ P-2476 stated that he joined the group in the spirit of revenge against the death of his 'cousin' at the hands of the Seleka.⁸⁷⁵ During the testimony, however, this person referred as a cousin appeared to be his uncle,⁸⁷⁶ a fact that he did not correct when re-reading his statement prior to his testimony.⁸⁷⁷
532. Based on this evidence, the Chamber by majority, Judge Chung dissenting, considers that P-2476 would have been an Anti-Balaka element at the earliest after 6 February 2014. In the view of the Chamber by majority, Judge Chung dissenting, this is incompatible with his seemingly substantive interactions with Cœur de Lion, who is known to have died during the attack on Boda on or around 5 February 2014.⁸⁷⁸

⁸⁷⁸ See section IV.A.8.ii.c below; P-1786 Statement, CAR-OTP-2058-0200-R03, at 0209, para. 49.

533. Judge Chung considers that P-2476's date of joining Mr Yekatom's group is unclear and, on this basis, cannot conclude that it would necessarily have taken place after Cœur de Lion's death.
534. The Chamber notes that P-2476 could not initially identify Cœur de Lion in a photoboard and eventually did so correctly when asked again.⁸⁷⁹ P-2476's claims about the time spent in Mr Yekatom's group varied immensely from about a month to 'some weeks' to 'one week'.⁸⁸⁰ P-2476 testified that he stayed and slept at the base in Mbaïki when he was with the Anti-Balaka.⁸⁸¹ P-2476 could not provide reasonable explanations for why his family members, who lived close to the Mbaïki base at the time,⁸⁸² were seemingly unaware of his membership and his stay there.⁸⁸³
535. As regards the ESF programme, P-2476's testimony contained inconsistencies that he was unable to clarify in court. For example, P-2476 provided his age to the officials orally when he participated in the programme,⁸⁸⁴ and appeared to have provided a younger age of '12 years' which is different from his age on his birth certificate.⁸⁸⁵ P-2476, when asked about this, said that he did not know what age may have been recorded by these officials.⁸⁸⁶ P-2476 explained that he did not have a clear idea about his date of birth and this could have led to the difference.⁸⁸⁷

⁸⁸² P-2476: T-213, p. 61, line 18-22 (testifying that his family compound was located near Maison de Jeunes). P-2476 said that the Anti-Balaka were mainly based at the town hall before repositioning themselves at the Maison de Jeunes (see P-2476: T-213, p. 15, lines 12-16). P-2476 also said that the Maison de Jeunes and the town hall were 5 minutes apart by walking (see P-2476: T-213, p. 56, lines 5-8).

536. P-2476 also could not reasonably explain why he, despite belonging to a family from Mbaïki that lived 50 metres away from the ESF training compound, stayed with a person called Yvette during the training as part of the ESF programme.⁸⁸⁸ P-2476 did not know the location of the training that took place as part of the programme,⁸⁸⁹ or in which month he participated in it.⁸⁹⁰ P-2476 also stated that the training itself lasted three months and that he lived with Yvette during that time, but could not remember the names of this person's family,⁸⁹¹ nor of the other two ESF programme participants who supposedly lived with this person.⁸⁹² P-2476 could not explain why this person did not contact his family members when speaking to him about the ESF Programme or when he was thinking about joining or when he registered,⁸⁹³ even though she knew the family and went to see them after the programme terminated.⁸⁹⁴
537. As regards P-2476's age, P-2018, asked about P-2476's name, Kevin Mbomassa, and his indicated age of 12 years, testified that he had a recollection of this person being a 'small child' who was in the group and who came from that area.⁸⁹⁵ P-2018 recognised Kevin Mbomassa in a photograph,⁸⁹⁶ and recalled that he was a 'child soldier' and participated in the programme.⁸⁹⁷ P-2018, asked how his age was determined, said that the children themselves gave their age.⁸⁹⁸ P-2018 did not know if it was him or another verifier who interviewed P-2476 about his age, as there were many verifiers.⁸⁹⁹
538. P-2018 stated not remembering Kevin Mbomassa's role within the group because there were many children and he could no longer talk about what individual children did.⁹⁰⁰ After having been confronted with his prior statement where he had mentioned Kevin Mbomassa's role, P-2018 confirmed that he had copies of the verification sheets with the roles of children in Mbaïki, but indicated that he did not know where he put the copy when leaving Mbaïki for Bangui.⁹⁰¹ P-2018 clarified that it was not him who claimed that Kevin Mbomassa was a ‘commissionaire’, but each child said what role they played in the group, and this was then included in the database.⁹⁰² As regards Kevin Mbomassa’s stay with the host family, P-2018, said that the children spent about a month at the CTO and then two months with their host families, so he thought Kevin Mbomassa spent one, maximum two months at the CTO and was then placed in the host families.⁹⁰³ In contrast, P-2476 himself said that the training lasted for three months, first staying five days at the ‘centre’ and then living with Yvette for a couple of months.⁹⁰⁴

539. P-1839, when asked, agreed that she told the Prosecution during her interview that she did not know someone with P-2476’s name.⁹⁰⁵

540. P-1974, when asked about P-2476, said that they were related and recalled that the latter participated in the ESF programme and was later reunited with his family in Bangui.⁹⁰⁶

541. On this basis, the Chamber finds by majority, Judge Chung dissenting, that it cannot be established that P-2476 was enlisted as an element in Mr Yekatom’s group by Cœur de Lion or any other Anti-Balaka element. Accordingly, the Chamber by majority, Judge Chung dissenting, is unable to rely on his account that he was an element in Mr Yekatom’s group.

V45-0001 applied to participate as a victim and, on the basis of his victim application form, was recognised as such by the Chamber.⁹¹⁰

543. The Yekatom Defence submits that V45-0001 is the son of Wilfred Molouba (P-2638), an individual who acted as focal point for the ‘Registry’s team in the Bangui office’ for ‘Kapou’.⁹¹¹ The Yekatom Defence suggests that V45-0001, Kevin Mborolo (P-2018) and Wilfred Molouba falsified V45-0001’s identity documents and testimony with the aim of getting V45-0001 relocated out of the CAR in return for his participation in the Court’s proceedings.⁹¹²

Following the testimonies of V45-0001 and V45-0002 (the ‘CLRV1 Witnesses’) in September 2023 and during its threat and risk assessment of these witnesses, the VWU discovered material concerning their identities and brought this to the attention of the Chamber. Upon order by the Single Judge,⁹¹⁴ the VWU filed a report⁹¹⁵ in which it stated that it found several indications on V45-0001's phone that suggested that his identity was not 'Dimitry Socrate Mongo' but 'Dimitri Socrate Molouba' and that he was Wilfred Molouba's son.⁹¹⁶ In support, the VWU reported that there had been exchanges between V45-0001 and a phone number used by Wilfred Molouba in which the former used the word 'papa'.⁹¹⁷

546. In this regard, the Chamber also considers that V45-0001's identity-related documents contain discrepancies that he was unable to reasonably explain in court and as such were not reconcilable with other evidence on the record. Additionally, as discussed further below, the Chamber also observed serious inconsistencies in his testimony concerning his alleged experience within the Anti-Balaka.

547. As regards his identity-related documents, V45-0001, shown the reconstitution of the birth certificate of 'Mongo Dimi Socrate' born on '13 August 2003' and parents named 'Jean-

⁹¹⁶ VWU Report on V45-0001 and V45-0002, ICC-01/14-01/18-2290-Conf, para. 11. Following this report, the Chamber was seized of multiple requests from the Yekatom Defence concerning the CLRV1 Witnesses' phones, all of which were rejected. On 23 February 2024, the Chamber rejected a request by the Yekatom Defence for an order to have the CLRV1 Witnesses' phones handed over to a competent third party for forensic examination (see Decision on the CLRV1 and Yekatom Defence Requests following the VWU Report on V45-0001 and V45-0002, 23 February 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2376-Conf (public redacted version notified on 17 May 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2376-Red)). On 17 May 2024, the Chamber rejected the Yekatom Defence's request to order the VWU to facilitate a limited inspection by the Yekatom Defence of V45-0002's phone (which was in VWU's custody at the time) in order to identify and examine the latter's communications with P-2580 during a specific period (see Decision on the Yekatom Defence Request for a Limited Inspection of Material Obtained by the VWU, 17 May 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2496-Conf). On 24 May 2024, the Chamber rejected the Yekatom Defence's request to partly reconsider its decision to inspect V45-0002's phone (see Decision on the Yekatom Defence Request for Partial Reconsideration of the Decision concerning the Limited Inspection of Material Obtained by the VWU, 24 May 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2507-Conf (public redacted version notified on 17 July 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2507-Red)). In this request, the Yekatom Defence had sought for the Registry to retain possession of the CLRV1 Witnesses' phones until the CAR authorities conclude their investigation/prosecution of P-2580 and P-2638's potential criminal misconduct under the applicable domestic law (see Decision on the Yekatom Defence Request for Partial Reconsideration of the Decision concerning the Limited Inspection of Material Obtained by the VWU, 24 May 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2507-Conf, para. 2; see also Urgent Yekatom Defence Request for partial reconsideration of 'Decision on the Yekatom Defence Request for a Limited Inspection of Material Obtained by the VWU', 17 May 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2500-Conf (public redacted version notified on 28 May 2024, ICC-01/14-01/18-2500-Red)).

Baptiste Mongo’ and ‘Stella Mitiami’,⁹¹⁸ testified that he recognised this document and confirmed that it was a court ruling handed down subsequent to an application made on his behalf.⁹¹⁹

548. However, the Chamber notes that the information in this judgment purportedly reconstituting V45-0001’s birth certificate is not consistent with his testimony, nor is it consistent with other evidence before it.

549. First, while V45-0001 maintained that his date of birth was 13 August 2003, it is not consistent with other documents on the record. V45-0001’s victim application form and the declaration of identity contained therein state that his date of birth is 13 June 2002.⁹²⁰ Asked whether he had told Kevin Mborolo, the person who took down the information to fill the victim application form, his date of birth, V45-0001 said that he had told this person that he was born on 13 August 2003.⁹²¹ When confronted with the dates as they appear on his victim application form, V45-0001 said that he did not know a lot about it because he had indicated that it was 13 August 2003 and his statement was not read back to him after they took it and perhaps that is where the problem came from.⁹²²

550. Second, it is unclear how the information concerning the time of birth as included in the reconstituted birth certificate was obtained and why it appears on this document. V45-0001, when asked, did not know the time of his birth.⁹²³ V45-0001, read out a document which provides an hour of birth,⁹²⁴ and asked where this information came from, said that this information was featured in another birth certificate which did not have a counterfoil; he said that he had two birth certificates, one of which does not have a counterfoil and is not valid; he made a copy of the original and brought it with him.⁹²⁵

551. Third, the Yekatom Defence presented prior recorded testimonies from ‘Stella Mitiami’, who is mentioned on V45-0001’s reconstituted birth certificate as his mother,⁹²⁶ as well as from her partner with whom she has seven children,⁹²⁷ none of whom bear the same name as V45-0001.
552. Fourth, there is inconsistent information about what V45-0001’s full name is. His victim application form states ‘Dimy Socrate’⁹²⁸ whereas in other documents it appears as ‘Aimé Socrate’. Shown and read out another document,⁹²⁹ V45-0001 agreed that this was the information (containing ‘Aimé’) that he provided to his lawyer to request a reissue of his birth certificate and that this information was contained in his birth certificate that did not have a counterfoil.⁹³⁰ V45-0001 added, where it concerned his first name Aimé, that this error came from the officials at the tribunal in Mbaïki.⁹³¹ When asked to explain, V45-0001 said that as regards ‘Aimé’, the name that was sent to Mbaïki for a birth certificate to be drawn up was ‘Dimi Socrate’ and when they issued the document, they modified the name.⁹³²
553. Fifth, and relatedly, V45-0001’s testimony suggests that his reconstituted birth certificate was issued without his knowledge of the process. Asked about the administrative process of issuing the aforementioned document,⁹³³ V45-0001 said that his counsel obtained it so that his birth certificate could be issued.⁹³⁴ V45-0001 agreed that he himself gave the information on the basis of which this document was issued.⁹³⁵ V45-0001 was not aware if any supporting documents had been filed before requesting this document as he was not present before the tribunal to obtain the ruling.⁹³⁶ Asked if he gave the reason for filing an application for this document, V45-0001 said that his counsel wanted to have his passport issued and therefore asked for his birth certificate, however, his birth certificate did not have a counterfoil; and at the tribunal, they did not have access to his birth certificate and this is why they decided to issue a new birth certificate.⁹³⁷ When asked about it, V45-0001 agreed that he had never said that his birth certificate had been stolen and nor had he provided any information sheet in support of a reissue of his birth certificate.⁹³⁸

554. At the same time, when asked how he obtained the birth certificate, V45-0001 said that it was provided to him by his lawyers, while later saying that this whole process of obtaining his new birth certificate took place without his knowledge.⁹³⁹ Shown another document,⁹⁴⁰ V45-0001 said that he had seen this document before; the first time he saw it was the day that they were supposed to have the passport produced at the office and it came to light that there was a problem with the mention of his name as ‘Aimé’, and that a correction needed to be made, which was done subsequently.⁹⁴¹ When asked further, V45-0001 said that the changing of ‘Aimé’ to ‘Dimi’ was done without his knowledge of the process.⁹⁴²
555. V45-0001, when shown yet another document,⁹⁴³ also recognised this document as his birth certificate;⁹⁴⁴ however, he provided a different explanation about his ‘original’ birth certificate. When asked about the registration of his birth records, V45-0001 said that he did not know or learn from his parents which town hall issued his birth certificate.⁹⁴⁵ V45-0001 said that the original of his birth certificate did exist, in Bangui, and that he had a copy of it in his hotel in The Hague.⁹⁴⁶ V45-0001, asked about who had issued this original birth certificate and whether he had it in his possession for several years, said that it had been issued by the town hall of Pissa and it had not even been a year in his possession.⁹⁴⁷ Asked by the Presiding Judge how he obtained his original birth certificate, V45-0001 said that he went to the town hall and contacted the mayor to get it during the time when there were police controls.⁹⁴⁸ Asked by the Presiding Judge why he needed to have a birth certificate, V45-0001 said that it could prove that one is a citizen of a state and it can be presented to the police when they are carrying out checks.⁹⁴⁹ When asked, V45-0001 said that he had not shown his original birth certificate, or given a copy thereof, to his legal representative;⁹⁵⁰ when asked if he had spoken to them about it, V45-0001 said that he spoke about it with his legal representative but it was a false birth certificate and the number had not been authenticated.⁹⁵¹

556. V45-0001, when asked to bring a copy of his original birth certificate with the assistance of the Registry and shown it in court, said that when he was provided with a copy of the birth certificate, the first name was ‘Aimé Socrate’ and he changed it himself so that it would become ‘Dimi’ and this can be seen in this document; he made this change before he came there.⁹⁵² When asked about it, V45-0001 said that his lawyers did not know that he had replaced ‘Aimé’ with ‘Dimi’; the lawyers provided him with a copy of the birth certificate with ‘Aimé’ and then went away with the original to have it changed; and then he himself, made a change on the copy of the birth certificate that he had.⁹⁵³

557. In conclusion, the Chamber finds that V45-0001’s testimony about his birth and family is not consistent with the documents it received. V45-0001’s parents’ names in the victim application form are different to those he mentioned during his testimony. V45-0001, when asked in court, said that his father’s name was Jean-Baptiste Mongo and his mother’s name was Stella Mitiami.⁹⁵⁴ As regards the names of his parents in the ‘Déclaration relative à l’identité’ attached to his victim application form – ‘John Patrick Mongo’ and ‘Prisca Mbongo’,⁹⁵⁵ V45-0001, when asked, said that it was a mistake made by ESF because there were a lot of child soldier applicants at Kevin Mborolo’s office at that time and they were quickly taking notes of everything because there was not enough time; afterwards, these were not read back to them.⁹⁵⁶ V45-0001, asked about his parents, said that he lived with his mother but could not say for how many years he had been living with her; he said that his parents were divorced and that he did not know where his father was currently.⁹⁵⁷ When asked, V45-0001 said that he was living with his mother when he met with Kevin Mborolo.⁹⁵⁸

558. While the Chamber has regard to the VWU's report which stated that V45-0001's phone contained information suggesting that his real identity may be Dimi Socrate Molouba and that he may be Wilfried Molouba's second son,⁹⁵⁹ the Chamber notes that V45-0001 maintained in court that he had no familial links with the Molouba family.

559. In this regard, the Chamber notes that V45-0001 said that he did not know this person's (Wilfried) surname,⁹⁶⁰ but recognised the individual depicted in a photograph,⁹⁶¹ as Wilfried, the focal point of the ESF.⁹⁶² V45-0001 himself refuted the suggestion, on the basis of various documents, that he was in fact this person's son and that his identity had been fabricated by Kevin Mborolo, working in tight cooperation with this person.⁹⁶³ Further, he stated not knowing the children of this person and Prisca Mbongo or, that they had children together.⁹⁶⁴ He did not know Cloé Molouba, Wilfried's daughter,⁹⁶⁵ and said not knowing the child depicted in a photograph,⁹⁶⁶ suggested to be one of this person's daughters, and reiterated that he had no family relationship with Wilfried Molouba and that the purpose of their relationship was to facilitate matters with the office.⁹⁶⁷ V45-0001 did not recognise anyone in photographs shown to him, which, according to the Yekatom Defence, depict individuals also related to Wilfried Molouba.⁹⁶⁸

560. V45-0001 maintained his testimony concerning his identity even when confronted with school and birth records purporting to show that he was Wilfried Molouba's son. Specifically, he stated that (i) the 'Socrate Moloubar' mentioned in a school register,⁹⁶⁹ was not him;⁹⁷⁰ (ii) a school certificate seemingly issued by the Kapou 1 elementary school concerning a 'Dimi Socrate Molouba' born on 13 June 2003, parents Wilfried Molouba and Prisca Mbongo,⁹⁷¹ did not concern him;⁹⁷² (iii) a school register containing the name of 'M[olouba] Dimy Socrate'⁹⁷³ and a school attendance certificate for 'M[olouba] Dimmy Socrate'⁹⁷⁴ did not concern him, that he was never registered at Bimbo secondary school,⁹⁷⁵ did not get far in his education and only rarely goes to Bangui;⁹⁷⁶ (iv) a birth certificate for 'M[olouba] Socrate Jimmy', born on 13 June 2003 to 'M[olouba] Wilfrid' and 'M[bongo] Prisca'⁹⁷⁷ was not his;⁹⁷⁸ and (v) the photograph on a school diploma registration form⁹⁷⁹ does not depict him.⁹⁸⁰
561. As regards his school attendance, V45-0001 further indicated that (i) he was not currently going to school; (ii) it had been several years since he had gone to school;⁹⁸¹ (iii) he completed his primary studies until CM2 at Kapou elementary school;⁹⁸² and (iv) he completed 'CM2' after the 2013/2014 events and before he met with the people from ESF.⁹⁸³

Prisca Mbongo.⁹⁸⁵ D29-6034 stated, inter alia, that it was she that furnished the information that appears in school certificate⁹⁸⁶ to the then-director of the school Dieudonné Repakamba, who signed it,⁹⁸⁷ and added that the date of birth mentioned therein was provided by his mother, as his birth certificate was not available in the school archives.⁹⁸⁸ Commenting on the school register, D29-6034 confirmed that the full and correct name of the entry corresponding to ‘[Moloubar]’ is ‘Dimi Socrate M[olouba]’.⁹⁸⁹

563. D29-6028, the principal of Lycée de Bimbo between 2016 and 2023,⁹⁹⁰ provided authenticating information concerning the school records shown to V45-0001 as outlined above, and attested to the father-son relationship between Wilfried Molouba and ‘Dim[m]y Socrate Molouba’. He discussed three documents, consisting of school records for an individual called ‘Dimmy Socrate M[olouba]’, including the procedure for their issuance.⁹⁹¹ In particular, he confirmed that the information contained in a school certificate, which he issued in his capacity as the principal of Lycée de Bimbo and which is signed and stamped by him, is based in his official records for the student named ‘M[olouba] Dimmy Socrate’.⁹⁹²
564. Having reviewed V45-0001’s baptism documents⁹⁹³ and health records⁹⁹⁴ submitted by the CLRV1 in support of his identity and age, the Chamber finds them inauthentic and unreliable.
565. For these reasons, the Chamber is convinced that V45-0001 was not who he claimed to be.

⁹⁹¹ The Chamber notes that the Yekatom Defence argues that ‘Dimi Socrate Mongo’ is the same individual as V45-0001 (see Yekatom Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2737-Conf-Corr, paras 68-69). 566. Furthermore, and in any event, as set out below, the Chamber found V45-0001's account inherently unreliable as it contained significant discrepancies insofar as it concerned his alleged experience as 'child soldier' and Mr Yekatom's alleged acts.
567. In his victim application form, V45-0001 mentioned being taken by force by Nganazoui and Sartana and being given bullets by Sartana to threaten him not to leave the Anti-Balaka.⁹⁹⁵ However, during his testimony, V45-0001 did not mention Nganazoui or Sartana and said that it was Mr Yekatom who gave him the two bullets.⁹⁹⁶
568. The Chamber finds that V45-0001 was unable to offer a reasonable explanation for this discrepancy. Asked about this difference, V45-0001 said that Kevin Mborolo did not read back to him his account when interviewing him for the victim application form.⁹⁹⁷ V45-0001 did agree that it was incorrect that Sartana handed him the bullets; according to V45-0001, if Mborolo had read out what he had written down, they would have realised this mistake, but unfortunately he did not.⁹⁹⁸ The Chamber considers it unlikely that the victim application form would omit mention of Mr Yekatom's actions had he mentioned them to whoever was taking down the notes, and instead would have recorded a completely different name.
569. Similarly, V45-0001's victim application form mentions two bullets which states that he kept until the date on which he filled out the form,⁹⁹⁹ while during his testimony, V45-0001 said that Mr Yekatom gave him the bullets once, one to him and one to another person, and that V45-0001 then gave those bullets to ESF.¹⁰⁰⁰ From a further answer, it is unclear whether a bullet was given just to V45-0001 or also to another person.¹⁰⁰¹ In addition, V45-0001 was unclear about when he gave the bullets to ESF: while agreeing that he gave the bullets to ESF in 2018 while signing his victim application form – which states that he still had the bullets – in 2021,¹⁰⁰² V45-0001 said the victim application form contained incorrect or false information, while his account given to CLRV1 – as read back to him, but not signed – was the correct one.¹⁰⁰³ According to V45-0001, when asked more generally about the differences between his victim application form and his testimony, he said that his counsel did ask questions to find out where the differences were, and that he told them that the statement made at ESF was different because ‘we didn’t read our statements in – it wasn’t in Sango so that we could provide the necessary corrections and recount the accurate situation of what happened’.¹⁰⁰⁴

570. Lastly, the evidence on the record raises doubts as regards the information contained in the declaration of identity attached to V45-0001’s victim application form. First, V45-0001 said himself regarding this ‘déclaration relative à l’identité’, signed by Ferdinand Nekamogou in capacity as village chief of Cité de la Paix,¹⁰⁰⁵ that the name of his neighbourhood chief was Mamadou, and that he did not know anyone called Ferdinand Nekamogou.¹⁰⁰⁶ Second, D29-6031, the mayor of Kapou,¹⁰⁰⁷ stated that ‘Ferdinand N[ekamougou]’ and ‘Komba M[amadou]’ are two different persons, that only the latter is ‘chef de quartier’,¹⁰⁰⁸ and that neither a ‘M[ongo]-D[imy]-S[ocrate]’ nor ‘son père M[ongo]-J[ohn]-Patrick’ appear in their ‘circonscription’.¹⁰⁰⁹ When V45-0001 was confronted with this statement, he said that where he lived, it was a man who managed the town hall and not a woman.¹⁰¹⁰

571. Overall, V45-0001 maintained that he was a member of the Anti-Balaka and close to Mr Yekatom until the very end of his testimony, when confronted with the differences in his testimony and suggested that he had changed his account so as to claim a greater role to be selected as a witness.¹⁰¹¹ Confronted with the suggestion that his identity had been fabricated by Wilfred Molouba, V45-0001 maintained that he did not know Wilfred Molouba and that he did not spend time in Kapou and moved around all the time because there were Anti-Balaka in Kapou.¹⁰¹²

572. Having assessed V45-0001's testimony in light of his victim application form and the other evidence received, in particular related to his identity, the Chamber finds V45-0001's account concerning his membership as an alleged 'child soldier' in Mr Yekatom's group not credible. Given the Chamber's conclusions about his identity, it is equally unable to believe V45-0001's account concerning his alleged membership in the Anti-Balaka. This is especially since this account is also fraught with discrepancies that he was unable to reasonably explain.
573. In arriving at this conclusion, the Chamber was not persuaded by the CLRV1's submissions concerning V45-0001's credibility.¹⁰¹³ The Chamber has also noted the CLRV2's submissions that inconsistencies between a witness statement and a victim application should be attributed less weight than to inconsistencies with a formal witness statement.¹⁰¹⁴ However, in this specific instance, for the reasons stated above concerning the challenges to his identity and in light of the evidence provided by him, the Chamber could not consider V45-0001's evidence to have any probative value whatsoever.
574. Accordingly, the Chamber finds V45-0001 wholly unreliable and has not relied on V45-0001's evidence for the purposes of assessing any factual allegations under Count 29, or in relation to other charges.
575. In light of this conclusion, the Chamber does not consider it necessary to also engage with the Yekatom Defence's arguments concerning the alleged collusion between V45-0001 and other individuals,¹⁰¹⁵ for two reasons. First, given that the Chamber will not rely on V45-0001's account, the fact that there may have been collusion would not prove or disprove the allegations before the Chamber in respect of Count 29. Second, the Chamber has no role in investigating and/or establishing such an alleged collusion at this stage, beyond finding that

iv. V45-0002

576. V45-0002, who claimed to have joined Mr Yekatom's group while he was still in school, testified fully live with in-court protective measures and special measures,¹⁰¹⁶ and received Rule 74 assurances.¹⁰¹⁷ He testified that his name was Debo Oscar, that he was born on 4 May 2001 in Pissa;¹⁰¹⁸ and that he joined Mr Yekatom's Anti-Balaka group before the 5 December 2013 attack on Bangui and after being enlisted by Cœur de Lion in Bangui-Bouchia.¹⁰¹⁹ V45-0002 applied to participate as a victim and, on the basis of his victim application form, was recognised as such by the Chamber.¹⁰²⁰

577. As regards his experience within the Anti-Balaka, V45-0002 testified, inter alia, that (i) after his enlistment in Bangui-Bouchia, he moved to another base in the Mogné forest near Pissa;¹⁰²¹ (ii) he received military training, being taught how to use weapons, ordered to kill a person and given drugs; (iii) after his training, he was subjected to 'vaccination' against bullets;¹⁰²² (iv) he participated in combats in Sakoulou and Boda, killed Seleka combatants and looted civilian properties;¹⁰²³ and (v) he was in charge of transporting Cœur de Lion who was injured in Boda.¹⁰²⁴ Lastly, V45-0002 described his participation in a ESF demobilisation program in Pissa.¹⁰²⁵

578. The Yekatom Defence argues that V45-0002 is in fact someone called Oscar Endjio and that falsified his account and related birth documents.¹⁰²⁶
579. As set out below, the Chamber finds that the challenges to his birth documents put into question V45-0002's real identity.
580. First, V45-0002's birth-related documents appear to be generally consistent when it comes to his date of birth and the names of parents: (i) the documents shown to him by the CLRV1 concern a '[Debo] Oscar' born on 4 May 2001 at Pissa to parents 'D[ebo] Evra' and 'N[doi] Nadine';¹⁰²⁷ (ii) V45-0002 said that he was 23 years old at the time of his testimony in September 2023;¹⁰²⁸ (iii) his victim application form mentions his name as 'D[ebo] Oscar' born on 4 May 2001 at Pissa;¹⁰²⁹ and (iv) V45-0002 recognised his reconstituted birth certificate,¹⁰³⁰ dated 25 June 2023 and pertaining to '[Debo] Oscar' born on 4 May 2001 at Pissa to parents '[Debo] Evra' and '[Ndoi] Nadine'.¹⁰³¹
581. However, when asked further details about the process of obtaining his birth-related documents, it appeared that V45-0002 received his reconstituted birth certificate through his lawyer and did not request or obtain it himself from the appropriate authorities. At the same time, it is unclear how this lawyer obtained the information recorded in that reconstituted birth certificate and related court ruling. V45-0002 recognised the transcription of the birth certificate that his lawyer obtained from the Pissa town hall and gave to him.¹⁰³² V45-0002, shown the court ruling to reconstitute his birth certificate, recognised this document and, when asked, said that it was provided by his lawyer after having spoken to him.¹⁰³³ This document, dated 15 June 2023, pertains to '[Debo] Oscar' born on 4 May 2001 at '20h 06 mn' in Pissa to parents '[Debo] Evra' and '[Ndoi] Nadine'.¹⁰³⁴ While V45-0002 indicated that he still had his original birth certificate, he did not know where it was;¹⁰³⁵ he also said that he had not shown it to his lawyer;¹⁰³⁶ and that he gave his birth date as 4 May 2001, but did not know at which time he was born.¹⁰³⁷ V45-0002 did not know how his lawyer obtained his re-issued birth certificate, but he did not give testimony before a court to get this court ruling.¹⁰³⁸

582. While these irregularities in V45-0002's birth-related documents were, in themselves, insufficient to doubt V45-0002's account generally speaking, further significant inconsistencies arose when it came to his testimony about his parents and family, also considering further evidence.

583. First, the Chamber notes that V45-0002's parentage in the documents attached to his victim application form do not match those in his birth-related documents. In his victim application form, the identity attestation signed by Célestin Voyemakoa as chief of Pissa commune states that his father's name is 'D[ebo] T[ouksom]' and mother's name is 'Y[assnganam] Flore'.¹⁰³⁹ Asked which parent names he gave to his lawyer who helped him fill out his victim application form, V45-0002 said he gave the names Debo Evra and Ndoï Nadine.¹⁰⁴⁰ V45-0002 also said that he did not know a person called 'Yassnganam Flore',¹⁰⁴¹ nor someone called 'Toukson Debo'.¹⁰⁴² According to V45-0002, it was not he who provided these names to his lawyer when she filled out his victim application form.¹⁰⁴³

584. Furthermore, D29-6024, Célestin Voyemakoa, chef de quartier of Mokotomba in Pissa, recognised having signed this victim application form, but stated that at the time Debo Oscar was not in front of him; he did not recognise V45-0002 in any of the photos shown to him.¹⁰⁴⁴ According to D29-6024, the document had already been filled in by ESF and he signed it at the end of a meeting; the handwriting on the form was not his.¹⁰⁴⁵ D29-6024 did not recognise the parents' names indicated in V45-0002's reconstituted birth certificate, but recognised the name of 'Edouard Tombolomako' signing this certificate as the first assistant at the municipality of Pissa commune and 'chef du quartier Bobangui'.¹⁰⁴⁶ Overall, this evidence raises such doubts as to the information contained in the identity document attached to V45-0002's victim application form that the Chamber does not rely on it.

585. Second, there is further evidence before the Chamber that contradicts V45-0002's claims about his identity and parentage. The Chamber found credible the prior recorded testimonies from his relatives, half-brother¹⁰⁴⁷ and paternal aunt,¹⁰⁴⁸ as well as from the director of his primary school¹⁰⁴⁹ and acquaintances from Pissa,¹⁰⁵⁰ which suggests that V45-0002 is in fact Oscar Endjio and not Oscar Debo.

586. D29-6027, V45-0002's half-brother, recognised him in a photograph and explained that they share the same father; and stated that he did not know anyone by the name of Oscar Debo.¹⁰⁵¹ D29-6039, purportedly V45-0002's paternal aunt, stated that none of her family members were elements in Mr Yekatom's group,¹⁰⁵² and identified V45-0002 and his half-brother D29-6027 in photographs.¹⁰⁵³ D29-6030 was the interim director of the 'École Fondamentale 1' in Pissa from February to October 2023, and recognised having signed 'E[ndjio] Oscar[us]' school attendance certificate; the witness confirmed that this certificate and the school register appear to show that this individual attended that school in 2011; he confirmed that the latter attended CM1 in 2011.¹⁰⁵⁴ D29-6036, a Pissa inhabitant who claimed to know ‘Oscar Endjio’ very well and lived in the ‘Endjio’ family compound, recognised V45-0002 in the same photograph as shown to D29-6027 and D29-6039.¹⁰⁵⁵ While he did not claim to know all details about V45-0002’s familial relationships, D29-6036 said that ‘Oscar’ bore the family name ‘Endjio’, was a part of this family, and was his deceased uncle’s son.¹⁰⁵⁶ The witness also said that at no point in time did Oscar Endjio join the Anti-Balaka,¹⁰⁵⁷ and that he did not know anything about Oscar taking part in any fights of the Anti-Balaka; further stating that the Anti-Balaka came to Pissa and Oscar left the bush and began selling water.¹⁰⁵⁸

587. The Chamber notes with concern V45-0002’s attempts during his oral testimony to distance himself from any reference to his last name being ‘Endjio’ and his efforts to maintain his version in the face of contrary evidence, as detailed below.

588. In this regard, the Chamber notes that when asked about his siblings, V45-0002 said that he had two from his biological father and five from his mother’s side,¹⁰⁵⁹ the first two being two boys,¹⁰⁶⁰ one of which is called Debo Écclesiaste¹⁰⁶¹ whom he recognised in a photograph,¹⁰⁶² which is the same as the one in which D29-6036 identified Endjio Ecclésiaste,¹⁰⁶³ who the Chamber notes is D29-6027.¹⁰⁶⁴ V45-0002 refuted the suggestion that his brother’s surname was Endjio because their father was called Elisée Toukson Endjio, and suggested that on Facebook sometimes people take on names which are not their actual surnames.¹⁰⁶⁵

589. In addition, V45-0002 agreed that he was attending school before joining the Anti-Balaka and that he was unable to return after leaving the Anti-Balaka.¹⁰⁶⁶ He first testified that he went to school up until ‘CE2’,¹⁰⁶⁷ while then agreeing that he was registered at ‘CM1’ at the Pissa primary school, only to later say that he never reached ‘CM1’.¹⁰⁶⁸ In relation to a Pissa primary school register for 2011 containing an entry pertaining to ‘Endjio Oscar’,¹⁰⁶⁹ V45-0002 said that that was not his name.¹⁰⁷⁰

590. Overall, the Chamber concludes that while V45-0002’s date of birth seems less contested, the above raises such doubts as to his real identity that the Chamber is not in a position to rely on V45-0002’s evidence. This is so also because aside from such doubts, and in any event, the Chamber finds that V45-0002’s account is replete with discrepancies that throw into question the remainder of his evidence, in particular his claim that he was an element of the Anti-Balaka. Some of these discrepancies are set out below.

591. First, as regards the timeline of events, V45-0002 provided contradictory accounts on when he joined the Anti-Balaka and when he left. During his testimony, V45-0002 agreed that he joined the Anti-Balaka before 5 December 2013 in Bangui-Bouchia, after which he went to Mogné forest before going to Kapou forest and then going to fight in Boda; following this, he agreed that he was deployed to the Mbaïki checkpoints.¹⁰⁷¹ However, V45-0002’s victim application form suggests that he joined the Anti-Balaka in March 2014 and that the events described in the form took place between March and August 2014.¹⁰⁷² When asked how long he remained within the Anti-Balaka, V45-0002 testified that he left the group in 2015, after the ‘last battle in Boda’.¹⁰⁷³

592. Second, V45-0002’s testimony on Cœur de Lion’s role and Boda is contradictory on key elements that emerge from evidence otherwise before the Chamber. When asked how many people died in Boda, V45-0002 first said that many people died, then that only one person died, which was their ComZone Cœur de Lion.¹⁰⁷⁴ Further, V45-0002's victim application form suggests that he joined the Anti-Balaka in March 2014 and that Cœur de Lion made him kill a prisoner in Boda,¹⁰⁷⁵ while other evidence on the record shows that the attack on Boda took place in early February 2014, and that Cœur de Lion was killed therein.¹⁰⁷⁶ When confronted with the contradictions concerning Boda, V45-0002 simply maintained that he was in the Anti-Balaka group led by Cœur de Lion.¹⁰⁷⁷

¹⁰⁷³ V45-0002: T-247, p. 28, lines 19-21. The Chamber also has regard to the purported reason why he left the Anti-Balaka. V45-0002, when asked why he left the Anti-Balaka, said that his parents had objected and were against his membership; he said that he could no longer talk with his mother and did not even greet each other anymore, so he took a personal decision to leave the movement because he no longer got along with his parents; he described requesting forgiveness from his mother, following which he decided to stop being an Anti-Balaka member (see V45-0002: T-247, p. 28, line 24 – p. 29, line 10).

593. Third, V45-0002's account that he participated in the ESF programme contains significant discrepancies. V45-0002 testified that he joined the ESF programme in 2016,¹⁰⁷⁸ and that he took part in the programme when Catherine Samba-Panza was still president of the CAR.¹⁰⁷⁹ At the same time, he agreed that he joined the programme in the same year as Cœur de Lion died, a few months after his death.¹⁰⁸⁰ V45-0002 also testified that Kevin Mborolo and Kevin Kakpayen took them to Mbaïki where they spent two months, during which time they learnt how to be a trader, farmer, how to raise and support a family.¹⁰⁸¹ V45-0002, when put that he was not part of the ESF training, maintained that he was indeed part of that training.¹⁰⁸² However, D29-6036 stated that 'Oscar' did not participate in the training in Mbaïki, but in the training in Pissa.¹⁰⁸³
594. Further, while V45-0002 claimed to have joined the ESF programme in Pissa in 2014,¹⁰⁸⁴ his name is not included in the ESF List.¹⁰⁸⁵ When confronted with another list, V45-0002 maintained that his name does appear.¹⁰⁸⁶ Given the issues with the contents of the ESF List as further outlined below,¹⁰⁸⁷ the Chamber also assessed whether V45-0002 might nonetheless have participated in a ESF programme.

595. In this regard, the Chamber notes that V45-0002 appeared to provide some general details about the ESF programme that do not comport with the other evidence concerning this programme. In particular, asked about the selection process, V45-0002 first testified that some ESF staff initially met with the mayor of Pissa, Okoua-Penguia, and asked to be shown the ‘child victims’ so they could be demobilised, re-educated and no longer be integrated into any armed groups.¹⁰⁸⁸ He then said that before being selected, he was asked questions by an ESF staff member, after which a date was fixed for a vehicle to take them to Mbaïki.¹⁰⁸⁹ According to V45-0002, there were many of them at the time of the discussions which took place at the town hall, and at which, he agreed, Didier Beninga was also present.¹⁰⁹⁰ He further said that once in Mbaïki, Kevin Kakpayen came from time to time providing them with food and telling them what to eat,¹⁰⁹¹ while he agreed that he also saw Kevin Mborolo in Mbaïki.¹⁰⁹²
596. At the same time, V45-0002 did not remember certain key details about his participation in the ESF programme. V45-0002 recalled that during his stay in Mbaïki, there was a ceremony with the mayor of Mbaïki and a representative from Bangui,¹⁰⁹³ and that after his stay in Mbaïki, he stayed there with a host family, whose name and neighbourhood he did not remember.¹⁰⁹⁴ Before going to the host family, the training, according to V45-0002, took place in a school and he agreed that they spent the night in the school in the same building; he did not remember the number of participants in the training.¹⁰⁹⁵
597. On this basis, the Chamber considers there to be doubts as to whether V45-0002 in fact participated in any programme of the ESF of relevance to the case at hand.
598. Bearing in mind the above, and having regard to the totality of his evidence, in particular, the inconsistencies in his account concerning his experience in the Anti-Balaka and the evidence received in relation to his identity, the Chamber finds V45-0002's account concerning his membership as an alleged 'child soldier' in the Anti-Balaka not credible.

599. In arriving at this conclusion, the Chamber was not persuaded by the CLRV1's submissions concerning V45-0002's credibility.¹⁰⁹⁶ Similar to the case of V45-0001, the Chamber also noted the CLRV2's submissions that inconsistencies between a witness statement and a victim application should be attributed less weight than to inconsistencies with a formal witness statement.¹⁰⁹⁷ However, in this specific instance, for the reasons stated above concerning the challenges to his identity and in light of the evidence provided by him, the Chamber could not consider V45-0002's evidence to have any probative value whatsoever.
600. Accordingly, the Chamber finds V45-0002 wholly unreliable and has not relied on V45-0002 for the purposes of assessing any factual allegations under Count 29, or in relation to other charges.
601. The Chamber notes the Yekatom Defence's allegations concerning the collusion that V45-0002 may have been a part of.¹⁰⁹⁸ Having regard to its approach concerning V45-0001 as stated above,¹⁰⁹⁹ the Chamber does not consider it necessary to engage with these allegations.

603. P-1974 explained the purpose and ambit of the ESF programme. P-1974 said that ESF was operating from Bangui and had field staff in other places, including in Mbaïki.¹¹⁰² According to P-1974, one of the main objectives of ESF was to ‘remove children from armed groups in the [CAR], including the Anti-Balaka and Seleka, as part of the ESF’s mandate to protect children’s rights’.¹¹⁰³ P-1974 described how P-2018, who worked as his focal point in Mbaïki, reported to him about the presence of children in the Anti-Balaka movement in the Ombella-M’Poko and Lobaye prefectures that were under Mr Yekatom’s control.¹¹⁰⁴
604. P-1974 further explained, inter alia, the collaboration between UNICEF and ESF on the demobilisation of children within Anti-Balaka groups.¹¹⁰⁵ P-1974 testified about the work involved in carrying out the ESF demobilisation ceremony in Pissa on 4 August 2014 and the ceremony in Mbaïki on 5 August 2014.¹¹⁰⁶ P-1974 stated that he himself interviewed some of the children that participated in the ESF programme.¹¹⁰⁷ The witness also explained that the ESF database in the Mbaïki office contained all information concerning the children retrieved from Mr Yekatom, and that the ESF’s office in Mbaïki was broken into and lost a large number of original documents concerning ESF’s missions to Mbaïki and Pissa.¹¹⁰⁸
605. In addition to this, P-1974 stated that he himself saw children within the Anti-Balaka at the Sekia and Pissa checkpoints.¹¹⁰⁹
606. The Chamber notes the Yekatom Defence’s submissions concerning the irregularities in the ESF programme and P-1974’s involvement in the same.¹¹¹⁰ The Yekatom Defence argues that P-1974 and P-2018 ‘concocted’ the ESF programme, involving ‘false child soldiers’, with the goal of benefiting from international aid funds for personal and professional purposes.¹¹¹¹ It submits that there was no methodology followed by ESF to select the participants and the resulting ESF documents are fraudulent.¹¹¹² In this respect, the Yekatom Defence also raised a number of arguments on the fabrication of evidence that concern, inter alia, persons that the Prosecution did not call as witnesses.¹¹¹³

607. As set out below, in assessing P-1974's credibility, the Chamber has regard to his evidence concerning the ESF programme, the documents he purportedly authored, and the other witnesses who testified.

608. The evidence suggests that there were indeed procedural irregularities in the manner in which the ESF programme was launched. Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo, the prefect of the Lobaye prefecture at the time, when asked about ESF, confirmed that he learned that ESF had received funding but did not know where it came from.¹¹¹⁴ Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo said that the terms of reference of the ESF programme were not filed with him and that ESF was not able to provide all the required documentation – 'no reference document and no report' – that the authorities would have needed to know the objective of the project.¹¹¹⁵ The witness also said that they 'did not insist' on these procedures because he personally wanted to satisfy the needs of the population and help the community.¹¹¹⁶

609. The Chamber now turns to the reports that were generated as part of the ESF programme and whether they have any bearing on P-1974's credibility, as a purported author and ESF head. The Yekatom Defence argues that ESF reports are not reliable and contain a number of inconsistencies and false information, and that neither P-1974 nor P-2018 were in a position to assert the accuracy of the information contained therein.¹¹¹⁷

610. Having regard to the content of the two ESF reports,¹¹¹⁸ the Chamber finds that none of them can be relied upon to establish the number of children that were retrieved from armed groups in the various locations, or to assert that these children would have been under the age of 15 years.¹¹¹⁹ While the reports concern the ESF programme in 2014, P-1974 as head of ESF at the time denied drafting them.¹¹²⁰

611. The Chamber further notes that the ESF programme involved family members of P-1974 and P-2018. For example, P-2018 agreed that P-1974's father Raymond Kakpayen worked with ESF, although not within the framework of the ESF programme but for an education project in another prefecture, not working with ESF Mbaïki.¹¹²¹ P-2018 agreed that P-1974's sister Amandine was one of the three cooks for ESF.¹¹²² P-2018 further agreed that his brother Olivier Mborolo was an activity leader in the ESF programme.¹¹²³ P-2476 himself is a relative of P-1974.¹¹²⁴
612. In this respect, the Chamber has considered the evidence by the prefect of the Lobaye prefecture at the time, Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo, who indicated that he received complaints that 'some NGO heads', including ESF, were named as being those who tried to play in favour of some people and to the detriment of the others.¹¹²⁵
613. Nonetheless, the Chamber finds that these irregularities do not discredit the entirety of P-1974's testimony. While certain individuals may have tried to benefit from the ESF programme through their proximity with P-1974, there is insufficient evidence to conclude that this was a deliberate scheme, rendering P-1974's testimony unreliable as a whole.

614. Having assessed P-1974's testimony overall, in light of the Yekatom Defence's allegations, the Chamber finds that P-1974 is, nonetheless, generally credible insofar as the general administration and purpose of ESF is concerned. However, noting his limited oversight role over the ESF programme, the Chamber notes that P-1974 was unable to provide any first-hand information on the specific children that participated in it, their ages, let alone their membership or role within Mr Yekatom's group. In light of this, the Chamber cannot rely on his account to establish the ages of the children that participated in the ESF programme. As regards his claims of seeing children at the Pissa and Sekia checkpoints, the Chamber has assessed them in light of other evidence received before it in its evidentiary analysis below.

615. P-2018, the head of ESF offices in Mbaïki, testified fully live¹¹²⁶ with in-court protective measures.¹¹²⁷ P-2018 carried out the ESF programme under P-1974's overall supervision.¹¹²⁸ P-2018 personally met with UNICEF in Bangui,¹¹²⁹ and undertook a mission in Pissa where he allegedly interacted with Anti-Balaka leaders, including Ephraim Ondimba and Mr Yekatom, in order to identify alleged 'child soldiers' for demobilisation.¹¹³⁰ He drew up the ESF List concerning the children that participated in the ESF programme at the CTO in Mbaïki,¹¹³¹ and provided the information on the basis of which the ESF reports were prepared.¹¹³²

¹¹³² P-2018 drafted First ESF Report, CAR-OTP-2071-0285, cited by the Prosecution to show that the ESF programme was pre-financed to retrieve children from the Anti-Balaka (see Prosecution Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2738-Conf, para. 777). P-2082, who appears to have signed the First ESF Report together with P-2018, suggested that she did not fully read the report at the time or verify the information contained in it (see P-2082: T-219, p. 11, line 22 – p. 12, line 3, p. 12, line 13 – p. 14, line 2. See also p. 14, line 10 – p. 15, line 7).

616. The Yekatom Defence argues that P-2018 was part of the ESF ‘fraudulent scheme’, raising a number of arguments in relation to P-2018’s actions and documents authored by him.¹¹³³
617. The Chamber first turns to P-2018’s testimony concerning how children were identified and how their ages were verified for the purposes of the ESF programme. According to P-2018, children under the ages of ‘18 years’ within Anti-Balaka groups were identified during ‘identification missions’ by P-2018 and Anti-Balaka chiefs purportedly acting on instructions by Mr Yekatom.¹¹³⁴ P-2018 testified that identification forms drafted by UNICEF were filled out by the Anti-Balaka chiefs.¹¹³⁵ He also testified that within their group, they had a secretary who would go from one locality to the next to help fill out these forms and was in charge of filling out the forms; Mr Yekatom had the secretary do this.¹¹³⁶ The Chamber did not have access to any of the purported filled out identification forms and therefore, no assessment can be carried out on how and whether they were duly filled out. According to P-2018, these forms were submitted to UNICEF where they remain to this day.¹¹³⁷
618. P-2018 further explained that the children thus identified were then ‘verified’ to assess age and membership within the Anti-Balaka.¹¹³⁸ P-2018 could not remember how many interviews were carried out each day by a verifier on average.¹¹³⁹ P-2018 testified that during the verification, it was just the child and the person doing the verification, the Anti-Balaka ‘commander’ was not present.¹¹⁴⁰

From the documents authored by P-2018, the Prosecution relies on the ESF List to show that 60 children participated in the ESF programme and were part of Mr Yekatom’s group; it relies on P-2018’s handwritten notes CAR-OTP-2071-0302-R01; CAR-OTP-2071-0309-R02; and CAR-OTP-2071-0282 to show meetings and contact between ESF officials and Mr Yekatom’s group (see Prosecution Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2738-Conf, paras 764, 768, 779-780, 790, 797, 812). 619. P-2018 provided other details of the verification process,¹¹⁴¹ and said that the verifiers would ask the ages of the children.¹¹⁴² According to the witness, they were unable to retrieve birth certificates of the children during the verification process; while some children would give them some papers and maybe a baptism certificate, birth certificate or other identity papers, the majority did not have any and it was not straightforward to get a birth certificate from a child.¹¹⁴³
620. P-2018, asked if the verifiers were in a position to check the information provided by the children, said that 2014 was a very chaotic period and that there was not enough time to carry out checks with the families and communities.¹¹⁴⁴ P-2018 said that, for the verification missions, the children would provide information to the verifiers, and these children would ‘make mistakes’.¹¹⁴⁵ In any event, copies of these verification forms are not available for scrutiny by the Chamber because they were stored at the ESF offices in Mbaïki that were looted.¹¹⁴⁶
621. On this basis, the Chamber finds that a mere participation in the ESF programme does not show that a person was necessarily under 15 years of age at the relevant time. The Chamber notes P-2018’s claims that the initial identification had been done by Mr Yekatom’s subordinates,¹¹⁴⁷ who themselves worked with these children and were familiar with them. However, this does not allay the Chamber’s concerns. The identification and verification process was not carried out in a way that the Chamber can rely on it, as such and by itself, for entering findings beyond reasonable doubt.

622. Having regard to this, the Chamber now addresses the reliability of the ESF List.¹¹⁴⁸ P-2018 recognised the ESF List and described it as the list of 60 children ‘for the Mbaiki centre’,¹¹⁴⁹ including only the children that were ‘identified first by the ComZones’ of the Anti-Balaka and then verified.¹¹⁵⁰ P-2018 said that the list was a draft drawn up by him on the basis of the information the children provided to him when these children arrived at the Mbaiki CTO.¹¹⁵¹ P-2018 said that all of the information for the ESF List came from the children themselves; he said that it was ‘teamwork’, he was ‘just supervising’ and next to him were people who had the information.¹¹⁵²
623. While P-2018 maintained that these children had been previously verified by UNICEF,¹¹⁵³ and said that these verification missions were also operating on the information provided by the children themselves; they could not review any birth documentation or verify information from the people in the community, as discussed above.
624. The Chamber has individually assessed the entries in the ESF List and finds that there are several examples where it cannot conclude as to whether the individual in question was under 15 years of age, as claimed in the list.¹¹⁵⁴ There are also several examples of individuals between 15 and 18 years of age where the evidence suggests the age to be higher than that ¹¹⁴⁸ ESF List, CAR-OTP-2071-0279. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not rely on List, CAR-OTP-2115-0369-R05. Having regard to P-2018’s testimony about how this list was created and provided to the Prosecution, the Chamber finds that the data contained therein is not reliable. P-2018 agreed that he provided the Prosecution with the electronic data concerning the children that were demobilised or with whom ESF dealt with in the form of an excel table. This table was populated by an unidentified ‘database manager’ who took the data from the identification sheets compiling the information received from the children. See P-2018: T-223, p. 18, line 22 – p. 19, line 25; T-225, p. 4, lines 8-24; T-226, p. 54, line 6 – p. 55, line 18. See also Report, CAR-OTP-2130-3274-R01.

D29-6013 stated that she suggested P-2511 to register with the ESF in Mbaiki; he stayed at her house for the duration of the ESF training – he would leave in the morning for the training and then come back in the evening; she did not know whether ‘Rono’ received money from ESF (see D29-6013 Statement, CAR-D29-0009-0324-R01, at 0327, paras 26-28; see also at 0326, para. 21, at 0328, para. 34 referring to Photograph, CAR-OTP-00000828).

written in the ESF List.¹¹⁵⁵ In the view of the majority, Judge Chung dissenting, the cumulative conditions of age and membership are not met concerning any of the names listed in the ESF List. Judge Chung noted that P-2476 is also mentioned in the ESF List but did not rely on it to enter conclusions on his age or membership in the Anti-Balaka.¹¹⁵⁶

625. On this basis, the Chamber finds that it cannot rely on the ESF List alone to reach any conclusions on the existence of children under the age of 15 within Mr Yekatom's group, nor can it be relied upon to establish Mr Yekatom's knowledge thereof. This reflected negatively on P-2018's reliability as regards the ages of the children that participated in the ESF programme.

626. The Chamber finds that the same concerns apply to P-2018's handwritten notes claiming to contain a list of children.¹¹⁵⁷

627. The Chamber further notes that P-2018, when confronted with the age-related documents of these individuals on the ESF List, maintained that everybody on this list was below 18 years, judging by their physical frame.¹¹⁵⁸ P-2018 said that perhaps the children lied to take advantage of the programme, but he was not sure because physically looking at the children, they seemed to all be under 18 years.¹¹⁵⁹

628. On this basis, the Chamber has serious doubts as to P-2018's own assessment of the ages of the children on the ESF List and cannot solely rely on P-2018 or the documents prepared by him to enter any conclusions as to their ages. In this respect, the Chamber further recalls with emphasis that the ESF programme was intended for children under the ages of 18 years. In the view of the Chamber, this age bracket was forensically irrelevant in the context of this case, and thus the Prosecution's reliance on P-2018's testimony and the ESF programme is largely irrelevant for purposes of discharging its burden of proof.

629. Turning now to the reliability of P-2018's handwritten notes of meetings,¹¹⁶⁰ the Chamber notes that P-2018 also claimed to have met Mr Yekatom on two occasions, first in Mbaïki and then afterwards in Pissa.¹¹⁶¹ As regards the first meeting, P-2018 said that he told Mr Yekatom 'everything regarding the presence of the children', including 'about the different age ranges',¹¹⁶² and discussed with him the definition of a child and what the UNICEF considers.¹¹⁶³ P-2018 mentioned that Mr Yekatom himself confirmed that indeed there were children within the group and that those children played different roles; Mr Yekatom also said that he would proceed with the liberation or release of those children.¹¹⁶⁴
630. P-2018 appears to be sole witness on Mr Yekatom's presence at these meeting, one of which he did not mention during his interview with the Prosecution,¹¹⁶⁵ namely the second meeting with Mr Yekatom on 19 May 2014 at the Pissa town hall,¹¹⁶⁶ where 'Ondimba' and 'Manoumana' were also present.¹¹⁶⁷
631. P-2018, when asked, agreed that among the children that appeared in this meeting, he saw children that corresponded to the age range indicated in his notes, i.e. between 12 and 18 years,¹¹⁶⁸ and that he saw children, though he could not say how many of those were estimated to be 12 years; according to his impression based on their size and seeing ‘small children’ when looking at them.¹¹⁶⁹

632. P-2018 agreed that he met ‘several times’ with Ondimba, with whom he worked out the details of the identification and verification forms.¹¹⁷⁰ P-2018 agreed that his recollection as regards his meetings with Mr Yekatom was not very precise and said that it was a long time ago.¹¹⁷¹
633. Assessing the limited contents of these meetings as relayed by P-2018, the Chamber is unable to ascertain whether P-2018 necessarily limited the discussions with Mr Yekatom to the existence of children under the age of 15 years.¹¹⁷²
634. Further, having regard to the doubts expressed on P-2018’s reliability thus far, the Chamber finds it unsafe to rely on P-2018 and only on his meeting notes to enter conclusions as to Mr Yekatom’s actions.
635. The Chamber has considered information showing that P-2018 was among those affiliated with ESF who assisted applicants in filling out application forms for participation/reparations in the present case on a pro bono basis for the VPRS.¹¹⁷³ P-2018’s testimony indicates that he also assisted the CLRV1 to help locate beneficiaries of the ESF programme.¹¹⁷⁴
636. The Chamber also notes that P-2018 testified that he had contact with certain individuals mentioned in the ESF List and, when asked, appeared evasive about them.¹¹⁷⁵

P-2018 said that he did not sign a document with someone from the Court (see P-2018: T-225, p. 51, lines 6-9). P-2018, when confronted with his Facebook message in which he claims to have had a contract with the ICC for six months, maintained that he did not have a contract with the Court with any section (see P-2018: T-226, p. 33, line 22 – p. 34, line 8 referring to Facebook messages, CAR-D29-0019-0075. ¹¹⁷⁵ P-2018 said that he had contact with a person who was on the ESF List number 39, in relation to that person’s communication with the Prosecution (see P-2018: T-226, p. 42, line 10 – p. 46, line 4 referring to Investigation Report,

637. In addition to this, the Chamber has also considered other minor inconsistencies that emerged in P-2018's account about the ESF programme. For example, P-2018 denied that the children received a sum of money after the ESF programme ended and then said that he did not know if there was any money that was given to each individual child.¹¹⁷⁶ While the Chamber has found P-2475 and P-2476 to be not reliable as further outlined above, with Judge Chung dissenting in respect of P-2476, it notes that both indicated that they were given money at the end of their training.¹¹⁷⁷ D29-6035 stated that at the end of the training, a vehicle came to his house in Bangui and brought the three children related to him with a sum of money for each of them.¹¹⁷⁸ In another example, P-2018 testified not being able to remember the details of the children when confronted with his prior statement in which he talked about them.¹¹⁷⁹
638. Having regard to this, the Chamber finds P-2018 not credible when it comes to assessing the asserted ages of the individuals on the ESF List, specifically when it concerns children under the age of 15 years, and has therefore not solely relied on his testimony in this aspect. The Chamber nonetheless considers P-2018 credible on certain limited aspects concerning the ESF programme and has relied on his testimony only when it was corroborated by other evidence on the record.

CAR-OTP-2135-4186-R01). P-2018 said that he had contact with P-2582 and first denied not remembering having interactions with her, including not having contacts with her as an intermediary, claimed that she appeared to be someone who was 17 years old and recognised her in a photograph (see P-2018: T-226, p. 49, line 18 – p. 51, line 24 referring to Identifying document, CAR-D29-0015-0001; Certificate, CAR-D29-0013-0100 (baptism certificate in which she would have been 22 years); the ESF List, CAR-OTP-2071-0279, at number 26 (stating that she was 17 years old); and Victim application form, CAR-OTP-2135-2405, at 2410 (the identity attestation in her victim application form that suggests that she would have been 13 years old). P-2018 then said that he had met P-2582 in relation to her involvement in the ESF programme as she was a beneficiary but it was a long time ago; he said that once he saw her on Facebook and they said hello and that until now, they never re-established contact; he recognised her in another photograph (see P-2018: T-226, p. 68, lines 8 – p. 69, line 2 referring to Screenshot, CAR-D29-0016-0077). vii. P-1813

639. Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo, who was the prefect of the Lobaye prefecture between May 2013 and September 2015, testified without in-court protective measures,¹¹⁸⁰ with his prior recorded testimony introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.¹¹⁸¹
640. Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo resided in Mbaïki when Mr Yekatom's group arrived there and also when the ESF programme took place. He provided evidence about, inter alia, events that occurred in Mbaïki at the relevant time, including the meeting held at the St Jeanne d'Arc Church with Mr Yekatom, the fleeing of Muslims from villages to Mbaïki and therefrom to other locations, Djido Saleh's death, and the ESF programme.
641. In relation to the latter, he was informed by ESF that they had a programme aimed at taking back 'child soldiers from the Anti-Balaka', and on 5 August 2014 attended in his capacity as prefect a ceremony in Mbaïki where the Anti-Balaka handed over 'child soldiers' to ESF, organised by ESF in collaboration with the Anti-Balaka.¹¹⁸² The witness said that he was not involved in the negotiations between the Anti-Balaka and ESF; however, he was informed on a regular basis about the project by ESF: he was informed at the initial stages that they had secured funding for the project; he would have been updated by the man that he knew to be the director of the NGO both by telephone and also in person when the director was in Mbaïki.¹¹⁸³ He said that he did not work with any other NGO regarding child soldiers apart from ESF.¹¹⁸⁴

642. The Prosecution and the Yekatom Defence rely on parts of Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo's evidence in support of their arguments concerning Count 29 and the events concerning the PK9-Mbaïki axis.¹¹⁸⁵
643. The Chamber found Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo's testimony generally credible. Due to his position at the time, the witness was knowledgeable about the duties and responsibilities of the civil status authorities in Pissa and was able to provide the contextual information needed to appreciate how these authorities were functioning during the relevant period. He personally interacted with Mr Yekatom during this time and had a lot of direct knowledge about the events in Pissa and Mbaïki in early 2014. The witness appeared forthcoming, and generally consistent; he was able to provide the sources of his knowledge, and clarified when he did not know.¹¹⁸⁶
644. As regards Count 29, in particular, Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo's testimony appeared measured and balanced when it concerned his responses to questioning concerning the ESF programme. He also provided informative comments on certain birth related documents, and explained the principles behind the application of certain stamps, seals and handwriting used on birth related documents.¹¹⁸⁷
645. At times, Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo claimed to have forgotten certain details of the ceremony organised by the ESF which were of interest to the Chamber, but this did not discredit the remainder of his testimony.¹¹⁸⁸ Given the passage of time and the requirements of his job needing him to interact with many NGOs and civil servants, these lapses of memory were understandable.
646. Having assessed Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo's evidence overall, the Chamber finds him generally credible. In relation to Count 29, the Chamber notes that the witness did not attend the ESF ceremony and received no documentation concerning the ESF programme.¹¹⁸⁹ Further, while the witness saw ‘children’ among the Anti-Balaka elements at the Anti-Balaka barriers, he did not have direct contact with any of these children,¹¹⁹⁰ and, in the view of the Chamber, did not assess their ages.

647. In relation to his testimony on events concerning the PK9-Mbaïki axis, the Chamber has assessed it holistically, in light of the other evidence received before it, in its evidentiary analysis below.

648. P-2082, the regional director of social affairs in region I (comprising Ombella M’Poko and Lobaye prefectures) at the Ministry of Social Affairs from 2013 to 2015, testified with in-court protective measures.¹¹⁹¹ Her prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.¹¹⁹²

649. In her position at the Ministry of Social Affairs, she took part in the demobilisation meeting of ‘child soldiers’ allegedly enrolled in Mr Yekatom’s group, taking place in Pissa in August 2014.¹¹⁹³ On this occasion, she met Mr Yekatom during a meeting where an agreement was signed to hand the children over.¹¹⁹⁴ She also participated in a ceremony taking place at the social centre in Mbaïki, and interacted with children in Mbaïki that were participating in the ESF program for demobilised children.¹¹⁹⁵

650. All parties rely on P-2082 in support of their arguments.¹¹⁹⁶ Both the Prosecution and the Yekatom Defence rely on her testimony concerning the estimates she provided as to the ages of the children that participated in the ESF programme and whom she personally interacted with during the ceremony in August 2014.¹¹⁹⁷ They also rely on her testimony to make arguments about Mr Yekatom's awareness of the presence of children among his group.¹¹⁹⁸
651. The Chamber notes that P-2082 was forthcoming in her responses and able to clearly identify the basis of her knowledge. For example, she was able to explain the foundation of her estimates of the ages of children that she saw participating in the ESF programme as well as those that she saw at checkpoints.¹¹⁹⁹ She interacted with Mr Yekatom directly on a limited occasion and seemed to have provided an unbiased account of this meeting.¹²⁰⁰ She seemed able to limit herself to what she knew and explained clearly what she did not know.¹²⁰¹
652. Having regard to the above, the Chamber concludes that P-2082's testimony is generally credible.

653. Roger Okoa-Penguia, the mayor of Pissa at the relevant time, testified live without in-court protective measures.¹²⁰² His prior recorded testimony was introduced pursuant to Rule 68(3) of the Rules.¹²⁰³ He frequently travelled between Bangui, Batalimo, Pissa and Mbaïki, including through the Anti-Balaka barriers.¹²⁰⁴ He also saw alleged ‘child soldiers’ in the towns of Pissa and Mbaïki, attended a ceremony with demobilised children in Pissa in 2014, and was in contact with ESF.¹²⁰⁵ He testified on the administrative procedures needed for obtaining birth certificates and the local authorities at the municipal level and commented on several birth certificates and provided detailed explanations about the civil status authorities in Pissa.¹²⁰⁶

654. The Prosecution relies on Roger Okoa-Penguia’s testimony, inter alia, in support of its allegations under Count 29.¹²⁰⁷ The Yekatom Defence does not reference it but alleges inconsistencies in relation to other evidence on the record.¹²⁰⁸ The Ngaïssona Defence references Roger Okoa-Penguia’s evidence once.¹²⁰⁹

655. Having regard to this, and as set out below, the Chamber has first addressed the aspects in Roger Okoa-Penguia’s testimony that concern Count 29 and then turned to the inconsistencies raised by the Yekatom Defence.

656. Roger Okoa-Penguia confirmed that when he signs a birth certificate, he would check the information which is manually written in the birth certificate before signing the certificate.¹²¹⁰ However, Roger Okoa-Penguia admitted to certain irregularities and falsification that could take place. In particular, Roger Okoa-Penguia said that he would not first check that the archives do not have another birth certificate for the same person when receiving a supplementary judgment; that in Bangui, there are people who make the mayors’ stamps and who, on occasion, buy registers and make transcriptions which are fraudulent; and that what is of interest to them (‘us’) is the stamp of the president of the court, the initials from the president of the court, which means it is genuine.¹²¹¹

657. The Chamber notes that there is indeed evidence from Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo suggesting that someone in Roger Okoa-Penguia's town hall may have been operating an 'ad hoc' birth register, despite Roger Okoa-Penguia's claims otherwise.¹²¹² Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo testified that Roger Okoa-Penguia was the president of the special delegation within the Pissa commune and that the signature on several birth certificates shown to him indeed looked like the signature of the mayor; further indicated that it could also be that the certificates that seemed dubious could have been part of an 'ad hoc' register, although Alexandre Kouroupe-Awo did not know whether it was the staff of the town hall or the mayor himself who would use this register in parallel; in several communes, one could find this type of things or it could be that third parties published some registers of their own accord and use them to issue certificates for their own benefit.¹²¹³ Roger Okoa-Penguia, asked whether he heard of such ad hoc registers, said that this did not happen in his town hall; their registers were numbered; once they finish the register books, they buy new ones and they send them to the tribunal.¹²¹⁴
658. Roger Okoa-Penguia confirmed that the material provided to the secretary of the civil registry section includes the registers, the official stamp of the town hall and the stamp with his name.¹²¹⁵ The witness confirmed that only the registrar from the town hall had access to these stamps and the stamp of the mayor was different; if the mayor was away, he would initial the document; once the transcription was done, it would go to the general secretary of the town hall and then on to the mayor for signature and stamping.¹²¹⁶

¹²¹² The Chamber considered that 'ad hoc' registers were defined by P-1813 as those registers that are sometimes held by some individuals or staff of the town hall who may use those registers in parallel to issue certificates for their own interests. See P-1813: T-181, p. 38, line 23 – p. 39, line 10.

660. Having assessed Roger Okoa-Penguia's testimony, the Chamber finds it generally credible. In relation to Count 29, the Chamber notes that Roger Okoa-Penguia did not provide any information about children who could be under 15 years of age within Mr Yekatom's group. Indeed, in his statement, Roger Okoa-Penguia indicated that when he attended the ESF ceremony in August 2014 at the Pissa town hall, he saw children that 'were all over 15 years old'.¹²¹⁹ As regards the inconsistencies raised by the Yekatom Defence on the location of Kalangoi and the Seleka base in Palmex,¹²²⁰ the Chamber notes that it has not relied on these aspects of Roger Okoa-Penguia's evidence for the purposes of determining any factual allegations.

IV. FACTUAL FINDINGS AND EVIDENTIARY ANALYSIS

661. The Chamber sets out below its assessment of the evidence submitted and discussed before it at trial with respect to each of the findings of fact identified above in Section II ('Findings of fact'). In particular, the Chamber details below the evidence which supports each of those findings of fact, and explains how any such finding was reached in light of the available evidence – and the arguments made at trial – both in support of and against that particular finding, as appropriate. This also includes instances when findings on the facts and circumstances described in the charges are reached by way of inference – thus, through facts which are of 'intermediate' or 'subsidiary' nature – on the basis of circumstantial evidence. At the same time, the Chamber clarifies that while it structures its discussion below delineating its analysis of evidence with respect to each individual finding of fact, evidence may be relevant to more than one factual finding even if not necessarily reiterated in each instance, and all evidence submitted and discussed before it at trial has been considered holistically.

A. The conflict in the Central African Republic between 2012 and 2014

1. The formation of the Seleka, its advance to and takeover of Bangui, and ensuing violence

i. The formation of the Seleka

Around August 2012, a coalition of armed groups opposing then-President François Bozizé emerged in the Central African Republic (CAR) under the name of the ‘Seleka’, led by CAR citizens and including elements from Chad and Sudan. Michel Djotodia became the leader of the Seleka.

662. At the outset, the Chamber considers it of import to briefly outline some of the evidence illustrating events and circumstances providing the background to the crisis in the CAR during the period relevant to the charges. While this is not to provide a fully exhaustive account of events, the Chamber is of the view that some understanding of the context leads to a better understanding of the events directly relevant to the charges.

663. As aptly put by Catherine Samba-Panza, the former president of transition of the CAR,¹²²¹ it is important ‘to realise that the [CAR] has been experiencing political instability for 30 years and [...] had a number of crises – a political crisis, social crisis, military/political crisis – [which] weakened the state considerably and have caused problems within the people in terms of social cohesion and national cohesion’.¹²²²

664. Several witnesses provided evidence on this background to the crisis in the CAR, with Tenebaye Massalbaye mentioning that the successive mutinies in the CAR eventually led to François Bozizé taking power in a coup in 2003 with the support of the Chadian army.¹²²³ This is echoed by Joachim Kokaté, appointed in February 2014 as special advisor for disarmament, demobilisation, and reintegration (hereinafter: ‘DDR’),¹²²⁴ who testified that they had information that François Bozizé had been accompanied by Chadian soldiers in his

2003 coup against Ange-Félix Patassé,¹²²⁵ leading later to violence by such Chadian elements and an uprising thereagainst.¹²²⁶ The individuals supporting François Bozizé in his coup were often referred to as ‘liberators’.¹²²⁷

665. Further points of contention concerned the fraud allegations surrounding the 2011 elections following which François Bozizé remained in power, as well as the suggestion that regions in the north and north-east of the country, predominantly inhabited by Muslims, were considered to be neglected by the Bozizé regime. Specifically, Nicolas Tiangaye, former prime minister of the CAR,¹²²⁸ testified that he and others in the opposition contested the 2011 election results and created a movement calling for an annulment and re-organisation of the elections.¹²²⁹ According to Nicolas Tiangaye, this seizure of power and management of the country’s assets created conditions for violence and the rebellion by the Seleka.¹²³⁰ The panel of experts on the CAR set up pursuant to a UN Security Council resolution¹²³¹ (the ‘CAR Panel’) similarly noted a deep fragmentation of the political landscape, combined with increased activities of a multitude of rebel groups that took control over large parts of the territory.¹²³² Adrien Poussou, a journalist who was also, inter alia, minister for communication, national reconciliation and civic and democratic culture between November 2013 and February 2014,¹²³³ opined that after the 2011 elections, the regime brought in close family members and others close to François Bozizé, while the opposition was sidelined.¹²³⁴

The Ngaïssona Defence argued that the Chamber should proceed with caution when determining the evidentiary weight to be given to NGO reports such as the latter, given that FIDH does not reveal the sources of its information (see Annex 1 to Defence Response to the Prosecution’s “Request for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table regarding the Prevalence of Sexual and Gender Based Violence”, 11 February 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1278-Conf-Anx1, pp. 46-47). 666. P-1193 testified that he initially supported François Bozizé who came like a ‘saviour’, but later individuals who were not of Gbaya ethnicity were ignored by François Bozizé¹²³⁵ and numerous people, such as Muslims from Ndélé, Birao and Bira, were excluded under François Bozizé’s regime.¹²³⁶ This is similarly reflected in P-0475’s evidence, who stated that François Bozizé as president did not have good relations with the Muslims and when the rebellion started in the areas of Ndélé and Bira, the Muslims there felt that these areas had been abandoned.¹²³⁷
667. The evidence provided by Kasper Agger, who worked for an NGO monitoring the situation in the CAR at the time, summarised the situation such that various sources indicated that a lack of leadership and exclusion of citizens from the decision-making process fuelled the violence, as did natural resources and regional interests of neighbouring countries.¹²³⁸ According to Kasper Agger, there was great disappointment with the rule of François Bozizé, the lack of jobs and opportunities, as well as general insecurity.¹²³⁹
668. In light of the evidence above, the Chamber does not rely on the evidence of witnesses who suggested that the neglect of certain areas in the north of the CAR was merely a pretext for the Seleka.¹²⁴⁰ The Chamber does not consider this interpretation of events to distract from the fact that, as outlined above, certain criticisms against François Bozizé’s governance – whether founded in facts or not – did exist and led to an increase in dissatisfaction and eventually the formation of opposition groups.¹²⁴¹

¹²⁴¹ The Chamber notes in this regard the Ngaïssona Defence’s submission that the alleged irregularities of the 2011 elections and the non-implementation of certain peace accords signed in 2008 were merely a pretext for the Seleka to forcefully remove François Bozizé from power (see Ngaïssona Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2736-AnxA-Corr-Red, para. 141). The Chamber considers the question of whether such criticisms were a pretext or based on facts to be inconsequential for its further determinations. To the extent this relates to François Bozizé’s and other individuals’ actions and underlying motivations following the take-over of power by the Seleka, this is further discussed below (see sections II.A.2, II.A.3 below).

669. The evidence before the Chamber indicates that the overall relations between Muslims and non-Muslims within the CAR before the crisis relevant to the charges were positive.¹²⁴² For example, P-1666 testified that they lived in ‘perfect harmony’ in Mbaïki until power was taken by the Seleka.¹²⁴³ As P-2232 put it, when the Seleka advanced towards Bangui, Muslims and Christians used to live in ‘symbiosis’.¹²⁴⁴ Similarly, P-2657 testified that before the arrival of the Seleka in Bossangoa, life was peaceful, harmonious, without problems, and they cohabited peacefully.¹²⁴⁵ Michel Ningando equally stated that before the events of the Seleka, Christians and Muslims in Bossangoa were ‘getting along’.¹²⁴⁶ P-0967 also testified that prior to the coup, there were no concerns and difficulties between the different religions, her mother – Christian, and her father – Muslim, lived in perfect harmony,¹²⁴⁷ as did Christian and Muslim communities, and there were no problems or tensions, which started only in 2013.¹²⁴⁸ P-2325 stated that before the conflict, there were around 70,000 Christians and around 20,000 Muslims living in Berbérati and both communities lived in peace.¹²⁴⁹
670. The evidence shows that in light of the grievances and challenges to the government of François Bozizé as outlined above, a coalition of opposition groups started forming in August 2012, known as ‘Seleka’. While the evidence shows that the Seleka was formed on the basis of a number of different movements, the Chamber refers to this group as the ‘Seleka’ for purposes of and throughout this judgment.
671. Specifically, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that the coup by the Seleka started in August 2012 in the north-east part of the CAR.¹²⁵⁰ According to her, some people thought they were not considered true citizens of the CAR because the areas they lived in had been neglected, and gradually the demands became very political in nature, with people mixing up these with demands from religious communities and ultimately a rebel group emerged, called the Seleka.¹²⁵¹ This group combined various individuals and, coming from the north-east of the CAR, decided to descend upon Bangui, becoming larger as it did, with people joining from some prefectures, as well as from Sudan and Chad.¹²⁵² Catherine Samba-Panza explained that the Seleka movement was run by CAR citizens of Muslim faith but became quite a mixture in their advance, being supported by troops originally from Chad or Sudan, bandits, ‘no-accounts’, people who had no work, young Peuhl, Muslims, Christians.¹²⁵³

672. Nicolas Tiangaye testified that the violence committed by the Seleka was a result of the political crisis.¹²⁵⁴ According to Nicolas Tiangaye, the Seleka ‘were always on the scene’, just not called Seleka at the time, with pre-existing groups organising and taking the name ‘Seleka’ – meaning ‘coalition’ in Sango – in 2012.¹²⁵⁵
673. Michel Djotodia, who was the leader of one of these pre-existing groups, became the head of the Seleka, which started its general attack on 10 December 2012.¹²⁵⁶ Nouredine Adam, another leader of one such group, was also among the Seleka leadership.¹²⁵⁷
674. Joachim Kokaté testified to having participated in one group opposing the Bozizé government after the 2011 elections,¹²⁵⁸ working with another opposition movement at the time because they believed that the country was not being managed properly, the state functioning was irregular, and there was a lot of social injustice.¹²⁵⁹ Joachim Kokaté met with leaders of other opposition groups, including Michel Djotodia and Abdoulaye Miskine, in Niamey in 2012 as they wanted to have a unified opposition; there was also a representative of a Chadian rebel group.¹²⁶⁰ Joachim Kokaté testified that there were demands from the north and north-east, put forward by Abdoulaye Hissène Miskine,¹²⁶¹ and the questions of neglect in social, economic and security areas were officially raised by the different leaders of the armed groups, which gave rise to a lot of dissatisfaction and might even have been the basis of events leading to the ousting of François Bozizé.¹²⁶² One segment of an opposition group signed a peace agreement with the government, but Joachim Kokaté could not answer with precision whether the Seleka was founded after this agreement.¹²⁶³

675. Jean-Jacques Demafouth, who was inter alia defence minister under Ange-Félix Patassé between 1999 and 2001, minister advisor for DDR, security sector reform (RSS) and relations with MISCA as of March 2013 and, from February 2014 on, minister advisor for security in charge of relations with MISCA and Sangaris,¹²⁶⁴ testified that the socio-economic circumstances in Ouham-Pendé, and the north-west generally, were a disaster, while the people in the north where one of the groups was located (Birao, Vagaka prefecture¹²⁶⁵) also felt that their region had been overlooked, with no infrastructure and the state having forgotten about them.¹²⁶⁶ The witness stated that the Seleka was made up of different ethnic groups, and included Goula, Runga from Ndela, Banda, Mandja, as well as a strong representation of Arabic people, represented by Al-Khatim,¹²⁶⁷ and said that the Seleka that arrived in Bangui were predominantly Muslim, up to maybe 75% to 85%, with Christians joining their ranks later.¹²⁶⁸

676. Similarly, P-0884 testified that most of the successive CAR governments neglected the resource-rich area in the north, mostly inhabited by Muslims, leading to various rebellion movements which eventually led to the creation of the Seleka in 2012.¹²⁶⁹ According to P-0884, the political opposition group, created in protest of the 2011 election, met with Seleka leaders in 2012 and convinced them of the need for an alliance to be able to overthrow François Bozizé.¹²⁷⁰ P-0884 stated that neither François Bozizé nor the rebel groups concerned respected the terms of certain peace agreements signed in 2008¹²⁷¹ which eventually led to the creation of the Seleka.¹²⁷²
677. Adrien Poussou equally referred to the criticisms surrounding the 2011 elections,¹²⁷³ in addition to the marginalisation by the central government of regions in the north, such as Vakaga and Bamingui-Bangoran, and the fact that the people there, primarily of Muslim faith, were deemed second-class citizens and excluded from the political process.¹²⁷⁴ According to Adrien Poussou, because the political avenues were blocked and there were no possibilities for action in the political arena or for peaceful protest, the only option was violent protest and this was why the Seleka was born.¹²⁷⁵
678. The report presented by P-2926, which dealt with the circumstances leading to the 2013 coup as well as the political and security situation in the CAR following the coup,¹²⁷⁶ found that the Seleka emerged in the context of the internal discontent following the 2011 elections, composed of various groups.¹²⁷⁷ The report concluded further that this emergence was a direct consequence of the (i) post-election crisis which weakened the regime; (ii) political, economic and social marginalisation of the north-east; (iii) non-regulation of the problem of armed groups in the north-east; and (iv) revenge of the former ‘liberators’ and diamond collectors following an operation in 2008 which hit the diamond community in Bria.¹²⁷⁸

679. According to one NGO report, the Seleka formed in 2012 when at least four different rebel groups came together to create a united front against François Bozizé.¹²⁷⁹

680. Other witnesses described the context in which the Seleka was formed, such as Tenebaye Massalbaye, who spoke of various security problems which could not be solved by François Bozizé, and a strong anti-Chadian sentiment taking shape in 2011, with the majority of the commercial circuits in the CAR held by Chadians.¹²⁸⁰ Roger de Martial Yagao also described how he received information about a rebel coalition forming in the north of the CAR through following the radio communications on the gendarmerie network, as well as international and national media.¹²⁸¹

ii. The Seleka advance towards Bangui

Starting in late 2012, the Seleka advanced towards Bangui. The Libreville agreement, concluded in January 2013, presented an attempt to end the crisis, leading to a government including representatives of various factions, with François Bozizé remaining president and Nicolas Tiangaye as prime minister, Michel Djotodia as deputy prime minister and minister of defence, and Mr Ngaïssona as minister of youth, sports, arts and culture.

At the same time, the widely reported advance of the Seleka, and violent acts and abuses committed in this context, including against civilians, sparked reactions within the civilian and political sphere: ‘Coalition citoyenne d’opposition aux rébellions armées’ (COCORA) and ‘Comité d’organisation des actions citoyennes’ (COAC) were two organisations which were active in mobilising support for François Bozizé in light of the Seleka advance. They erected checkpoints or roadblocks at which passers-by and vehicles were checked, with the objective of identifying Seleka infiltrators and people deemed to be associated with or in support of them, including Muslims. The individuals manning these checkpoints were armed with bladed weapons and, in some cases, with AK-47s.

a. Seleka advance and Libreville negotiations

681. As further outlined below, various witnesses described the circumstances of the advance of the Seleka towards Bangui, including the violence committed in this context. In an attempt to solve the crisis, negotiations were organised in Libreville and led to an agreement among the factions which is discussed below.

682. In relation to the advance of the Seleka, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that in December 2012, there was an unsuccessful attempt to overthrow the government of François Bozizé, which was followed by an attempt to bring about reconciliation through the Libreville accords, which foresaw a three-year transition period, with François Bozizé as president and Nicolas Tiangaye as prime minister.¹²⁸² However, problems re-emerged between January and March 2013, leading to Michel Djotodia taking power.¹²⁸³ While Catherine Samba-Panza did not hold any particular public office at the time, they heard that the Seleka, during its advance, committed ‘horrible’ acts of violence and abuse, torching houses, and murdering people.¹²⁸⁴
683. Nicolas Tiangaye provided additional details, testifying that the Seleka attacked Ndélé, 670 km from Bangui, and advanced to Bangui without resistance, reaching to about 70 km from Bangui by January 2013.¹²⁸⁵ The witness stated that a demarcation line was established in Damara, in the south-west of the CAR.¹²⁸⁶
684. The report provided by P-2926 summarised that the Seleka started its offensive on 10 December 2012 by taking Ndélé, followed by Bamingui on 15 December, Bria on 18 December, Kabo on 19 December, and later Kaga Bandoro and Bambari – within only ten days and given the lack of any resistance, the Seleka reached Sibut at the end of December 2012.¹²⁸⁷
685. Other witnesses provided evidence on the Seleka advance and ensuing events, from their various perspectives and positions at the time of the events.

686. Adrien Poussou, for example, testified that the Seleka issued a release in December 2012 when they launched their first attack upon Birao.¹²⁸⁸ When the first Seleka attacks began, Michel Djotodia, whom Adrien Poussou knew personally, sent him an email, saying that this time it was serious, and that the coalition would march upon Bangui.¹²⁸⁹
687. P-0884 testified that the Seleka, which had recruited mercenaries from Chad and Darfur and included former ‘liberators’ who had fought to bring François Bozizé to power, marched on Bangui, capturing inter alia Bossangoa, Bangassou and Bambari.¹²⁹⁰ He said that Sibut was established as ‘red line’ and the rebels took position there.¹²⁹¹
688. Alfred Legrand Ngaya also stated that the rebellion against François Bozizé was started by Michel Djotodia in Birao, with several rebel groups from Birao and Ndélé making demands, starting negotiations, and then marching to Bria and Bambari and eventually Bangui.¹²⁹² According to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, in early March 2013, the Seleka had already advanced to Damara and the youth in Bangui gathered in front of the political party offices of François Bozizé and requested that they be provided with firearms to defend the city, but this was not done.¹²⁹³ Alfred Legrand Ngaya further stated that while François Bozizé ordered the Forces Armées Centrafricaines (the ‘FACA’) to attack the rebels, the military command withdrew the soldiers from the battle.¹²⁹⁴ Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that the atmosphere in Bangui and the provinces at the end of 2012 and early 2013 as the Seleka advanced was one of fear.¹²⁹⁵
689. Roger de Martial Yagao learned from media and friends who were members of the security forces, such as the police and FACA, that there was essentially no resistance against the Seleka and while there was a ‘red line’ at Damara, the Seleka advanced to Bangui from Sibut, Ndélé, Birao, Bria, Bambari, Bossangoa, Kagabandoro and other places, eventually taking

Bangui without resistance.¹²⁹⁶ Roger de Martial Yagao stated that as the Seleka advanced towards Bangui, they cut off radio communications from the different gendarmerie posts.¹²⁹⁷ According to Roger de Martial Yagao, with the rebels committing crimes against civilians, eventually a solution was found with a power-sharing government of national unity, with Nicolas Tiangaye as prime minister and Michel Djotodia as minister of defence.¹²⁹⁸

690. Additional witnesses described their experience of the Seleka advance in their respective localities, including the abuses committed by them in particular against the non-Muslim civilian population.¹²⁹⁹ Other witnesses had more indirect impressions of this advance.¹³⁰⁰ More generally, P-2841 testified that the atmosphere at the end of 2012 and early 2013, was bleak and the population lived with the fear of the unknown because they did not know these people coming in and because of the speed with which they were moving, the havoc they were wreaking as they advanced.¹³⁰¹

691. Shortly following the attack of the Seleka in Ndélé and the start of its advance towards Bangui, in December 2012, François Bozizé gave a speech at a rally at the PK0 roundabout in Bangui. The Chamber refers in this regard to its discussion of this speech below.¹³⁰²
692. Not long after François Bozizé's speech at the PK0 rally, and in an attempt to solve the crisis, negotiations between the Bozizé government and opposing factions were held in Libreville in January 2013.
693. The Libreville agreement provided, inter alia, that (i) the president would remain in function until the end of his mandate in 2016 and could not run for another term; (ii) an inclusive government was to be set up for 12 months, tasked with restoring peace and security, organising legislative elections, re-organising defence and security forces, as well as territorial administration, reforming the justice system, setting up a process of DDR and a reform of the security sector, and undertaking economic and social reforms; (iii) the Seleka coalition forces would withdraw from occupied villages and abandon the armed struggle, with militias to be dissolved across the national territory and armed elements billeted in locations to be agreed upon; and (iv) the member states of the Communauté économique des États de l'Afrique centrale (CEEAC) would endeavour to progressively withdraw all foreign troops on the basis of the development of the security situation.¹³⁰³
694. Nicolas Tiangaye explained that a summit on 11 January 2013 in Libreville aimed to reach agreement on a transition government, with a Seleka member leading the ministry of defence, and a member of the democratic opposition becoming prime minister.¹³⁰⁴ Nicolas Tiangaye was chosen as prime minister and appointed by decree of 17 January 2013, Michel Djotodia became deputy prime minister and minister of defence, and Mr Ngaïssona was appointed as minister of youth, sports, art and culture.¹³⁰⁵ It was decided that François Bozizé would remain president until the next presidential elections, in which he would not be able to run again.¹³⁰⁶

695. Nicolas Tiangaye, who was Mr Ngaïssona’s lawyer at one point and knew him as such, also stated that Mr Ngaïssona was nominated as part of the presidential majority, with those appointed to government at the time being either presidential majority, meaning KNK or parties allied to it, or the democratic opposition.¹³⁰⁷ Other witnesses mentioned that François Bozizé and Mr Ngaïssona were from the same region and of the same ethnicity.¹³⁰⁸ P-2926’s report found that the post of minister for youth and sports – to which Mr Ngaïssona was appointed in line with the Libreville agreement – traditionally served to instrumentalise youth organisations for political ends.¹³⁰⁹
696. Joachim Kokaté also participated in the Libreville talks in January 2013¹³¹⁰ and made a statement on behalf of the non-combatant groups that had been agreed on by these groups.¹³¹¹ He said that the Seleka should not be allowed to take power because they included foreigners,

As regards the FIDH report, the Ngaïssona Defence argued, in reference to a duplicate version which is not recognised as submitted, that the Chamber should proceed with caution when determining the evidentiary weight to be given to NGO reports such as the latter, given that FIDH does not reveal the sources of its information, the allegations are untested and from anonymous sources (see Annex 1 to Defence Response to the Prosecution’s “Request for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table regarding the Prevalence of Sexual and Gender Based Violence”, 11 February 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1278-Conf-Anx1, pp. 52-53). The Chamber notes in this regard that it has assessed this report in conjunction with the other evidence before it and not relied on it to enter any findings of fact.

particularly mercenaries.¹³¹² The fighting groups at the talks were the Seleka,¹³¹³ while civilian political opposition also participated.¹³¹⁴ The agreement following these talks was supposed to bring together all parties and satisfy their grievances, with the president to continue in office until 2016, a prime minister to be appointed from the political opposition, all stakeholders of the various parties joining the government, and all combatants gathering in centres to calm everyone down and get their support for the DDR.¹³¹⁵ Joachim Kokaté said that he himself was appointed to the government as minister,¹³¹⁶ Christophe Gazambeti joined as representative of the Seleka coalition,¹³¹⁷ Abakar Sabone was appointed as member of the MLCJ, a non-combatant armed group, he was not Seleka,¹³¹⁸ and Mr Ngaïssona was appointed as minister of youth, sports, art and culture.¹³¹⁹

697. The evidence shows that despite the agreements reached at Libreville, the Seleka stood by their position to take over power, and eventually crossed the red line established by interposed international forces to continue their violent advance towards Bangui.¹³²⁰

698. At the same time, the evidence indicates that François Bozizé also failed to implement recommendations agreed upon in Libreville,¹³²¹ including by announcing on 15 March 2013 his intention to run in the following presidential elections.¹³²²

b. COCORA and COAC

699. Within the context of the Seleka advance and the Libreville negotiations, the Chamber assesses the evidence before it concerning the activities of two organisations, COCORA (‘Coalition citoyenne d’opposition aux rébellions armées’) and COAC (‘Comité d’organisation des actions citoyennes’) at that time. As outlined further below, the evidence shows that these organisations were set up to mobilise civilians in support of François Bozizé and to resist the Seleka advance. COCORA was involved in organising the rally in December 2012 at PK0 at which François Bozizé spoke.¹³²³ The evidence suggests that COCORA and COAC on the one hand, and the (re-) creation of self-defence groups in light of the violence committed by the Seleka regime on the other,¹³²⁴ were related.

700. The evidence establishes that COCORA was led by Levy Yakété, who held a position at the national civil aviation authorities.¹³²⁵ Levy Yakété had direct links to the KNK, as well as specifically to François Bozizé.¹³²⁶ The organisation was specifically active at the end of 2012 and until the take-over of power by the Seleka in March 2013.¹³²⁷

701. In light of the Seleka advance, in particular as of its attack in Ndélé in December 2012,¹³²⁸ the objective of COCORA was to support the Bozizé regime and, in that, it organised in neighbourhoods to erect roadblocks with a view to identifying individuals suspected of wanting to infiltrate the city or collaborating with the Seleka,¹³²⁹ which, at times, also related to Muslims and ethnic groups considered to be associated with the Seleka, as discussed below. The evidence suggests that COCORA also organised support marches and demonstrations.¹³³⁰ Jean-Jacques Demafouth stated that at the time, the ‘hunting down’ of Muslims had not yet begun in Bangui, and this was about those who were of the political or military opposition,¹³³¹ but the roadblocks and checkpoints were set up at a time when there were no military clashes in Bangui with the Seleka still being around Birao and Bria, so any actions were in relation to civilians, unarmed individuals.¹³³² He heard of abuses at these roadblocks, such as arbitrary detention of persons suspected of being close to the Seleka or the opposition.¹³³³ P-0884 stated that, at the roadblocks, they arrested all those suspected of belonging to the Seleka,¹³³⁴ and that some Muslims were accused or suspected of belonging to the Seleka, whereas at the time there were also Muslims in power, working with President Bozizé.¹³³⁵ P-1847 similarly indicated that the Muslims as well as Runga and Gula were more targeted as being accomplices.¹³³⁶ P-2232 explained it such that at the time, everybody was frightened of the advancing Seleka, frightened for their Muslim brothers ‘whom everybody was suspicious of’, so the youth increased their vigilance as regards Muslims because it was through them that Seleka elements were able to enter Bangui.¹³³⁷ Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that youths at the roadblocks were looking for Muslims and non-Sango speakers.¹³³⁸

The Chamber notes the evidence of Bi Bouba Waziri Housseni according to which 'KOKORA' was created on the basis of François Bozizé's speech on 15 March 2013 (see P-0520 Statement, CAR-OTP-2050-0788-R02, at 0801, paras 62-63). However, in light of the consistent evidence before the Chamber that COCORA existed already at the end of 2012, and bearing in mind that the source of the witness's assertions is unclear, the Chamber does not rely on this part of Bi Bouba Waziri Housseni's evidence.

The Ngaïssona Defence points to COCORA being created around 22 December 2012, and dissolved at the latest on 24 March 2013 (see Ngaïssona Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2736-Conf-AnxA-Corr, n. 1420). The Chamber notes in this regard that CAR-OTP-2042-2201 appears to be a news journal of 23 December 2012 and states that the creation of COCORA was announced the day before (see Audio, CAR-OTP-2042-2201; Transcript, CAR-OTP-2127-4006, at 4007, lines 15-16, at 4010, lines 142-144).

702. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that there is no credible evidence of François Bozizé’s involvement in COCORA and COAC or in the erection of barricades, and that Levy Yakété himself made clear that he did not create COCORA in concertation with François Bozizé nor to defend François Bozizé.¹³³⁹ The Chamber considers that Levy Yakété in his capacity as leader of COCORA had direct links to François Bozizé, as the evidence demonstrates. This is clear from the way in which Levy Yakété spoke at the rally at PK0 at the end of December 2012,¹³⁴⁰ as well as from the evidence outlined above.¹³⁴¹ This is not related to mere membership in the KNK, as suggested by the Ngaïssona Defence, but clearly shows direct personal links. Such evidence is not diminished by the evidence pointed to by the Ngaïssona Defence from P-0876, who merely denied the question of whether François Bozizé asked that roadblocks be erected.¹³⁴² This, in itself, does not negate links between François Bozizé and Levy Yakété in particular, or COCORA more generally.

703. Witnesses also indicated that individuals at such checkpoints or roadblocks were armed. Jean-Jacques Demafouth saw some COCORA members with weapons that looked like Kalashnikovs one evening in the 4th arrondissement in Bangui, and bladed weapons or machetes at the roadblocks manned by these people,¹³⁴³ and said the militia also had arms from the national army.¹³⁴⁴ P-0884 testified that while ‘weapons’ were held by FACA, COCORA did have some arrows, bows, knives and machetes.¹³⁴⁵ P-2232 similarly stated

that while COCORA was an ‘unarmed organisation’, members carried machetes, sticks, spears, but no firearms, while certain soldiers carried their service weapons and could reinforce at roadblocks.¹³⁴⁶ P-0876 also mentioned that youth at such checkpoints had machetes.¹³⁴⁷

704. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that COCORA’s aim was to protest and protect the population through peaceful means,¹³⁴⁸ and that there is no evidence that COCORA and COAC would have excluded Muslims or propagated anti-Muslim animus.¹³⁴⁹ The Chamber does not follow this argumentation. First, the Chamber notes that the evidence before it shows that individuals said to be manning COCORA checkpoints and roadblocks were armed, at least with bladed weapons,¹³⁵⁰ and that abuses were reported.¹³⁵¹ Second, the Chamber notes the evidence of Jean-Jacques Demafouth, who stated that in the context of the Libreville negotiations, Levy Yakété made a statement on behalf of COCORA, issuing public threats¹³⁵² that if the Seleka dared coming towards Bangui, he had put his militia on alert and COCORA was ready to defend Bozizé’s regime.¹³⁵³ Third, in the Chamber’s view,

¹³⁴⁷ P-0876 Interview Transcripts, CAR-OTP-2046-0370-R01, at 0378, lines 257-258; CAR-OTP-2046-0380-R01, at 0381-82, lines 26-43. The Chamber notes that P-0889 stated that the individuals at COCORA checkpoints were not armed (see P-0889 Interview Transcript, CAR-OTP-2122-7517-R02, at 7544, lines 1092-1098). However, the Chamber does not consider this to diminish its conclusion, in particular in light of the other evidence before it, and bearing in mind the way in which witnesses seemed to have understood being ‘armed’ in this context as referring to firearms. Similarly, the Chamber recalls that P-1847 denied during his in-court testimony that youth at COCORA checkpoints would have been armed with knives and machetes (see P-1847: T-023, p. 5, line 23 – p. 7, line 11), a statement unequivocally included in his prior recorded testimony introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules (P-1847 Second Statement, CAR-OTP-2122-8251-R01, at 8270-71, para. 182. See also at 8271, para. 184; P-1847: T-023, p. 7, line 17 – p. 8, line 8). Given this direct contradiction by the witness in the context at hand, and in light of the other evidence before it, the Chamber does not consider P-1847’s in-court denial as impacting its conclusion.

¹³⁵⁰ See paragraph 703 above. The Chamber notes that P-2232 also indicated that when the Seleka were about to take power, the young people contacted Levy Yakété and went also to the KNK and requested weapons, but François Bozizé refused on the ground that firearms were not meant for civilians, but for soldiers (see P-2232: T-075, p. 21, line 25 – p. 22, line 7). See also D30-4720: T-280, p. 33, line 8 – p. 37, line 24.

¹³⁵¹ See paragraph 701 above. The Chamber is mindful of the statements by Levy Yakété pointed to by the Ngaïssona Defence which suggest a peaceful approach of the COCORA (Ngaïssona Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2736-AnxA-Corr-Red, n. 1422 referring to Audio, CAR-OTP-2042-2201; Transcript, CAR-OTP-2127-4006, at 4010, lines 158-161; Mandate, CAR-OTP-2100-2667; Audio, CAR-OTP-2000-0683; Transcript, CAR-OTP-2087-9791; Translation, CAR-OTP-2087-9867, at 9869, lines 31-41). For the reasons stated, the Chamber does not consider such statements to negate its conclusions. This is further supported by other statements of Levy Yakété as discussed below (see paragraphs 1251, 1265 below).

the evidence as outlined above shows that while the COCORA roadblocks and checkpoints may have been looking for ‘Seleka infiltrators’ at the outset, this was clearly equated with ‘Muslims’ or ‘non-Sango’ speakers more generally.¹³⁵⁴

705. The Chamber received little information about how COCORA was funded. The material pointed to by the Prosecution to submit that Mr Ngaïssona funded COCORA¹³⁵⁵ is in the Chamber’s view insufficient to reach this conclusion. Two of the items do not mention Mr Ngaïssona being engaged in such funding at all,¹³⁵⁶ while the sources of the relevant information in the third item are not clear¹³⁵⁷ and insufficient for the Chamber to form such a view.

706. The Chamber notes that there were allegations according to which machetes donated by China for agricultural purposes were distributed to COCORA and COAC. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that this was a rumour unsupported by any credible evidence.¹³⁵⁸ The witnesses that testified about such distribution seemed to indeed have heard about this, through media or otherwise, rather than having more direct experiences thereon.¹³⁵⁹ While the above does not discredit the witnesses’ evidence as such, the Chamber is of the view that it cannot conclusively determine whether machetes, of whichever origin, were systematically distributed to individuals associated with COCORA or COAC.

¹³⁵⁴ See paragraph 701 above. The Chamber considers this not impacted by the evidence of D30-4720, who did not think that Levy Yakété was anti-Muslim, based on her personal observations (see D30-4720: T-280, p. 15, line 14 – p. 18, line 1), or by the suggestion of the Ngaïssona Defence that COCORA included both Christians and Muslims (see Ngaïssona Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2736-AnxA-Corr-Red, n. 1422), relying on what appears to be a letter from Levy Yakété with a request to be removed from a UN sanctions list (see Letter, CAR-OTP-2129-1677, at 1679).

See also Commission of Inquiry Report, CAR-OTP-2001-7017, at 7065-66, para. 161. While Adrien Poussou testified that he heard from a named source that COAC leaders distributed machetes in the 4th arrondissement, he also made clear that he did not ask further about who those leaders were and his reference to Steve Yambété and Mr Ngaïssona was based on his own assumptions (see P-2625: T-188, p. 39, line 14 – p. 40, line 8, p. 44, lines 2-18, p. 46, line 5 – p. 47, line 3; T-192, p. 17, line 23 – p. 20, line 15, p. 20, line 17 – p. 21, line 14; T-193, p. 67, line 14 – p. 68, line 13).

707. The second organisation active in mobilising support for François Bozizé and resistance against the Seleka advance at the end of 2012 and in early 2013 was, as mentioned above, COAC. The Chamber received less evidence regarding this organisation. The evidence before it indicates that COAC was led by Steve Yambété,¹³⁶⁰ appointed as chargé de mission to the ministry of youth in December 2012 and still in this function when Mr Ngaïssona was appointed as minister of youth.¹³⁶¹
708. From some media statements which seem to have been issued by Steve Yambété, it appears that COAC was also active at roadblocks and checkpoints with a view to checking passers-by and vehicles, in support of the Bozizé government.¹³⁶² According to P-2232, COAC was very similar to COCORA and started at the same time,¹³⁶³ and both movements dealt with vigilance and security.¹³⁶⁴ Alfred Legrand Ngaya similarly said that COAC's goal was to foster self-defence against the Seleka, they searched for Seleka infiltrators and once organised an action to burn the French flag.¹³⁶⁵ Adrien Poussou testified that COAC was the counterpart of COCORA and both groups were thought of as groups of militiamen close to the government who organised the rally at PK0.¹³⁶⁶ Other witnesses knew of Steve Yambété, but did not have any information in relation to COAC.¹³⁶⁷ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that Steve Yambété was close to François Bozizé and supported the activities of the latter's regime at the time.¹³⁶⁸ P-1847 similarly said that Steve Yambété was one of the youth who was in the close circles of François Bozizé’s power and well known and popular among the youth.¹³⁶⁹

709. The Chamber notes the evidence of Adrien Poussou according to which Steve Yambété led COAC along with Mr Ngaïssona,¹³⁷⁰ and that observers considered that their respective appointments to the ministry of youth took place so they could organise the Central African youth to defend the interests of the regime.¹³⁷¹ P-2232 testified that while Mr Ngaïssona was not the one who created the group, all activities relating to the youth were carried out under the aegis of the ministry of youth.¹³⁷² The Ngaïssona Defence argues more generally that Mr Ngaïssona played no role in COCORA or COAC, also considering his absence from the CAR for part of the relevant time, that he did not fund either, or any other movement, at the time, and that he did not arm COCORA activists.¹³⁷³
710. At the outset, the Chamber considers that mere physical absence from the CAR at the relevant time does not, in and of itself, negate any involvement in activities within the CAR. At the same time, the Chamber has not received evidence more concrete than the above that would suggest that Mr Ngaïssona was directly involved in the activities of either COCORA or COAC. The evidence available indicates that Steve Yambété was appointed as chargé de mission to the ministry of youth in December 2012.¹³⁷⁴ Thus, as of the time that ¹³⁷⁴ The Chamber notes that Adrien Poussou seemed to think that Steve Yambété was nominated as chargé de mission at the same time as Mr Ngaïssona became minister (see P-2625: T-188, p. 51, line 15 – p. 52, line 7; T-192, p. 23, line 21 – p. 24, line 3). In light of the decree available to the Chamber which indicates that Steve Yambété was appointed on 30 December 2012 (CAR-D30-0007-0728), the Chamber is of the view that the witness was mistaken on this point. However, the Chamber does not consider this to affect the witness’s overall credibility. In a similar vein, the Chamber disregards the press publication in CAR-OTP-2113-0664, which contains information different to the decree and which the Chamber considers to be unreliable (see also Annex A to Yekatom Defence Response to the “Prosecution’s Sixth Application for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table”, 15 May 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-1868-Conf, 19 June 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-1935-Conf-AnxA, p. 30; Annex 1 to Defence Response to the “Prosecution’s Sixth Application for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table” ICC-01/14-01/18-1868-Conf, 23 June 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-1942-Conf-Anx1, pp. 27-28). See also P-2232: T-075, p. 14, lines 16-23; T-078, p. 14, lines 6-10; P-0884: T-054, p. 37, line 23 – p. 38, line 11.

Mr Ngaïssona was appointed as minister for youth,¹³⁷⁵ both worked in the same ministry.¹³⁷⁶ The Chamber recalls in this context that the post of minister of youth was seen as traditionally being used to instrumentalise the CAR youth for political ends.¹³⁷⁷

711. Several witnesses drew a link between COCORA or COAC and the later (re-)emergence of self-defence groups which would eventually form the Anti-Balaka. P-2232 noticed that the youth in the neighbourhoods became gradually more mobilised before the Seleka arrived in Bangui¹³⁷⁸ and stated that while the Anti-Balaka did not exist when COCORA or COAC were operational, there were no longer leaders to organise the young people when the leaders of these movements fled upon the Seleka take-over, and this vacuum was filled by the emerging Anti-Balaka.¹³⁷⁹ P-0889 similarly confirmed that certain youth that had been with COCORA or COAC later joined the Anti-Balaka.¹³⁸⁰ P-1847 testified that some senior officials of COCORA, such as Papa Javon Zama and David Banga, and some other members of the KNK, were involved in the Anti-Balaka movement.¹³⁸¹
712. Nicolas Tiangaye testified that on 15 March 2013, Bozizé organised a big ceremony to celebrate his ten years in power, and he announced that he would present himself again at the next presidential elections, which was in violation of the constitution and of the Libreville agreement – it was at this moment that the problems started and the Seleka attacked

¹³⁷⁶ The Chamber also notes the evidence of Adrien Poussou, who did not know how COCORA or COAC found members, but said that there was a football club in the 4th arrondissement, Stade Centrafricain, of which Mr Ngaïssona was the president and many football fans were part of this group (see P-2625: T-188, p. 47, lines 5-11). The witness was one of the vice-presidents of the Mocaf club, one of the largest in the CAR, and supporters and fanatics of football in the country were well acquainted with each other – he explained that especially within COCORA there were supporters of Tempête Mocaf (see P-2625: T-192, p. 22, lines 8-24; T-192, p. 21, line 16 – p. 22, line 6). He also said that they were in vehicles belonging to people in power, BJ75, starting off with Steve Yambété, a SCAF supporter (see P-2625: T-192, p. 22, line 25 – p. 23, line 10). government forces.¹³⁸² Adrien Poussou similarly testified that on 15 March 2013, a large rally was held to celebrate François Bozizé's ten years in power.¹³⁸³ The Chamber refers to its discussion of the speeches made in the context of this rally below¹³⁸⁴ as well as of Steve Yambété's radio address on 22 March 2013.¹³⁸⁵

713. On the basis of the above, the Chamber concludes that COCORA, led by Levy Yakété, and COAC, led by Steve Yambété, were two youth organisations with direct links to François Bozizé, the KNK and Bozizé's government, including Mr Ngaïssona at least while he was minister therein, which were active specifically between the end of 2012 and the end of March 2013, when the Seleka took power. They erected checkpoints and/or roadblocks at which passers-by and vehicles were checked, with the objective of identifying Seleka infiltrators and people deemed to be associated with or supportive of them, including Muslims. The individuals manning these checkpoints were armed with bladed weapons and, in some cases, AK-47s.

iii. The take-over of power by the Seleka

On 24 March 2013, the Seleka took control of Bangui. Michel Djotodia proclaimed himself President of the CAR.

714. It is undisputed that Seleka elements advanced on Bangui in the period leading up to 24 March 2013 and took control of the city and power over the country on this day. Indeed, the Chamber has received consistent evidence in this regard, as further outlined below. It also appears from the evidence outlined below that this arrival was welcomed at least by parts of the population who thought the Seleka would bring about a desired change.
715. Nicolas Tiangaye testified that on 22 March 2013, Seleka elements crossed the demarcation line in Damara and advanced towards Bangui, passing the Bossembélé axis where they successfully procured a significant number of weapons.¹³⁸⁶ He stated that another 'army' came from Bossembélé and on 24 March 2013, these two groups united their forces at

PK12.¹³⁸⁷ According to the witness, when the Seleka arrived in Bangui, they already had weapons, combat attire, and uniforms.¹³⁸⁸ Nicolas Tiangaye called the army general chief of staff at the time, General Jules Bernard Ouande, who said that he was only a simple general without troops and that Bozizé in his quality as commander-in-chief was absent, and the general at the head of the army did not take any action.¹³⁸⁹ According to the witness, the then-FOMAC¹³⁹⁰ commander also told him that they could not fight the Seleka which had 7000-8000 fighters, and the CAR did not possess any operational combat planes to address the situation.¹³⁹¹

716. P-2232 testified that on 23 March 2013, he was in front of the Bangui university when he saw the convoy of François Bozizé going towards Marabena square and trying to enter the South African embassy grounds, where they were refused, then François Bozizé returned to the presidency.¹³⁹² P-2232 also said that when the Seleka took power the following morning, Mr Ngaïssona was on a mission abroad and the people in Bangui mobilising the youth were Levy Yakété and Steve Yambété.¹³⁹³ He stated that they saw soldiers getting rid of their uniforms and fleeing, and the next morning, François Bozizé left on a helicopter together with one of his children, Franklin, and Eric Danboy, his director of security, while the rest, including Mokom, Francis Bozizé, Dédi Bozizé, and others crossed to the DRC.¹³⁹⁴

717. On 24 March 2013, François Bozizé left the country eventually reaching Cameroon¹³⁹⁵ and the Seleka entered Bangui, Bozizé's government was toppled and Michel Djotodia took power, proclaiming himself president.¹³⁹⁶ According to one UN report, this led to the CAR

718. A number of other witnesses described their experiences of the Seleka entering Bangui on 24 March 2013.¹³⁹⁸
719. Jean Louis Yamodo stated that when the Seleka entered Bangui, people stood on the side of the road clapping and cheering since they thought that the Seleka would be a good change for the country.¹³⁹⁹ Similarly, P-0884 testified that people initially applauded the Seleka when taking power because François Bozizé, at a certain point, ‘lost it’ with his government: he surrounded himself with people from his own ethnic group, there was nepotism, he was accused of keeping everything to himself, his family and close relatives.¹⁴⁰⁰ He testified there was a certain marginalisation of some people, Vakaga and others, and for Muslims in Vakaga, Birao, and Ndélé, there were problems of a lack of government structure.¹⁴⁰¹ Similarly, P-2324 stated that before the conflict started, most people were already fed up with the Bozizé regime, and people were happy with the arrival of the Seleka because of the idea that high positions in the government were reserved for people of the Gbaya ethnic group, and many non-Muslims felt that way too because they were not Gbaya.¹⁴⁰²

720. In addition to the evidence regarding the actual take-over of Bangui on 24 March 2013, the Chamber also received evidence on aspects of what happened immediately following the coup.
721. Specifically, Jean-Jacques Demafouth was in Bangui around the time of the 24 March 2013 coup, at Camp M'Poko, the FOMAC military base, and, since Nicolas Tiangaye and Mboli-Goumba were also at the camp, could directly follow the developments of how a new government would be made and how François Bozizé was received by the Cameroonian authorities.¹⁴⁰³ According to the witness, the night when François Bozizé lost the battle and came back to Bangui, he held a meeting with the entourage, particularly officers from the military and those responsible for COCORA, and gave them instructions as regards armaments, weapons, and resources to create complete disorder in the country, and asked some of them to be ready so he could call upon them and they could join him.¹⁴⁰⁴ Jean-Jacques Demafouth said that when François Bozizé understood that his army had lost, he sent an instruction that all the arms from all the soldiers who came from the front be recuperated, but those weapons were never in the state armoury, they simply disappeared and were re-distributed to people who did not have an entitlement, for example, members of the militia such as COCORA, and supporters of the KNK to defend themselves.¹⁴⁰⁵ Jean-Jacques Demafouth said that he met various people at Camp M'Poko, including generals, the protocol man of Bozizé, the director of the training school, Mokom; and that, at that moment, no one regarded him as an enemy, so they talked.¹⁴⁰⁶ In the camp, the witness already had information that resistance was being organised, and contacts started to be made at that point.¹⁴⁰⁷
722. Adrien Poussou, who was not in Bangui when the Seleka entered, went there three days after the coup¹⁴⁰⁸ and spent seven days in the city, of which five were at the Hotel Ledger, the centre of power at the time where he exchanged with Crépin Mboli-Goumba, the minister of

iv. The Seleka violence

After the Seleka took control of Bangui on 24 March 2013, they committed violence and abuses in various localities across the CAR, in particular against individuals considered to be associated with François Bozizé, his Gbaya ethnic group, his government's security forces, and non-Muslims. Mr Ngaïssona's properties in Bangui were looted. However, the Muslim civilian population was not entirely spared from this violence.

The Seleka included fighters in particular from Chad and Sudan. It was led by Central African Muslims. Due to the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka and in light of its perceived composition, tensions in particular between Muslim and non-Muslim communities increased.

723. The Chamber has received a significant amount of evidence concerning the violence committed by members of the Seleka following the take-over of Bangui, in the city itself and other locations across the CAR territory. That the Seleka committed abuses following their take-over of Bangui is indeed not disputed between the parties.¹⁴¹⁰ It transpires from the evidence before the Chamber that, certainly at the outset, the violence targeted in particular supporters of the former regime or individuals perceived to be so, including members of the regular armed forces, including FACA, police and gendarmerie, members of the Gbaya ethnic group, or inhabitants of neighbourhoods and areas in which supporters of François Bozizé were generally thought to be living.

724. Catherine Samba-Panza testified that once the Seleka entered Bangui, they committed many acts of violence and abuse, theft, as well as destroyed public and private property, and religious buildings.¹⁴¹¹ The witness agreed with the suggestion that the Seleka targeted non-Muslims, particularly Gbaya and people suspected of being close to François Bozizé, and that many people deemed close to François Bozizé were in Boy-Rabe, which was regularly attacked by the Seleka.¹⁴¹² Catherine Samba-Panza stated that the Seleka thought that the people in Boy-Rabe were pro-Bozizé and resisting its attacks to disarm elements, so she had to intervene to provide assistance.¹⁴¹³ The witness agreed with the suggestion that crimes by the Seleka did not come to an end when she became president in January 2014, at which time the armed forces had practically disappeared and internal forces were trying to ensure the defence, security and protection of the people, and the international forces, given their numbers, could not be everywhere and could not protect the civilian population everywhere.¹⁴¹⁴

725. P-2050 testified that on 27 April 2013, she visited Mr Ngaïssona's house in Boy-Rabe,¹⁴¹⁵ an area which she was told the Seleka had punished for being close to François Bozizé, coming three or four times to pillage.¹⁴¹⁶ P-2050 could see that Boy-Rabe had been heavily looted: houses were empty, doors were destroyed, loose elements were wandering around looking for food, including some men in Seleka uniforms.¹⁴¹⁷ P-2050 was told by one of her sources that there were militiamen of Bozizé in Boy-Rabe at the time and that Mr Ngaïssona, before he fled Bangui, had ordered a militia be set up.¹⁴¹⁸ P-2050 testified that Mr Ngaïssona's residence was the biggest in the area and she knew it was his because the 'askari' (guard) at the gate confirmed it to her.¹⁴¹⁹ It had the biggest gate with a lot of bullet holes visible on it and P-2050 was told that the Seleka targeted the house before looting it.¹⁴²⁰ P-2050 described the inside of the house as totally chaotic, finding Mr Ngaïssona's personal files and private pictures between the mess, everything gone, even the mattresses, just the couch was still there.¹⁴²¹ P-2050 noticed quite a number of bullets in the compound and five or six young boys, probably aged between 12 and 18, in flip-flops, were living between the remains.¹⁴²² The 'askari' told P-2050 that Mr Ngaïssona was in Douala or Yaoundé and paid him to protect the property¹⁴²³ and afterwards took her just around the corner from Mr Ngaïssona's compound to show her a warehouse belonging to Mr Ngaïssona that had also been looted.¹⁴²⁴

726. Other witnesses also testified to the looting of Mr Ngaïssona's properties in Boy-Rabe.¹⁴²⁵

727. As discussed below, the evidence before the Chamber shows that the Seleka, at least at the outset, targeted in particular individuals of Gbaya ethnicity – the ethnicity of François Bozizé – and neighbourhoods in which perceived Bozizé supporters were considered to be living, in addition to security forces such as FACA, gendarmerie and police, as well as generally non-Muslims.¹⁴²⁶

728. For example, Nicolas Tiangaye in his speech to the UN General Assembly deplored killings in Boy-Rabe and Boeing.¹⁴²⁷ Other witnesses testified that Boy-Rabe, in the 4th arrondissement, and Boeing were particularly targeted.¹⁴²⁸ According to some, the Seleka

729. Further evidence suggests that the Seleka attacked individuals specifically identified as supporters of François Bozizé or the KNK,¹⁴³¹ as well as Gbaya¹⁴³² and non-Muslim individuals or institutions.¹⁴³³ The evidence before the Chamber also indicates that the Seleka singled out individuals identified as members of the security forces, especially FACA.¹⁴³⁴

The Chamber notes that Nicolas Tiangaye did not think that the Seleka systematically attacked FACA elements and was of the view that some FACA elements who felt threatened or in danger went into exile, while those who were close to François Bozizé also left (see P-0291: T-051, p. 73, line 23 – p. 74, line 11). In light of the evidence before it to the contrary as referenced, the Chamber does not rely on this aspect of P-0291's evidence.

The Chamber notes the evidence provided by P-2200, according to which the Seleka did not cause any harm in Bossangoa, did not destroy houses or kill anyone, but fought against the Anti-Balaka and destroyed their houses in response to attacks (see P-2200 Statement, CAR-OTP-2088-2146-R04, at 2150, para. 23, at 2151, para. 26). In light of the evidence mentioned above, the Chamber does not rely on this part of P-2200's evidence. However, it does not consider this to affect P-2200's credibility as a whole.

described Seleka abuses in their respective localities.¹⁴⁴³ The evidence suggests moreover that Muslims and ethnic groups other than Gbaya were also not always spared from the violence.¹⁴⁴⁴

731. The Chamber notes all this evidence, but is of the view that no further detailed discussion thereof is apposite for purposes of adjudicating the allegations before it. Overall, it is clear from this evidence and the evidence outlined below¹⁴⁴⁵ that at the latest by October 2013, the situation in the CAR had reached such a state that the UN Security Council expressed concerns about violations of international humanitarian law and human rights in particular by Seleka elements and also other armed groups, demanding that all Seleka and other armed groups immediately lay down their arms.¹⁴⁴⁶
732. In the context of the Seleka violence, it is of import for the determinations of the Chamber to analyse the impact of such abuses on the CAR communities. In this regard, the Chamber turns to the composition of the Seleka and proportion of foreign elements within it, which is discussed by numerous witnesses.¹⁴⁴⁷

733. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that Sudanese and Chadian mercenaries formed the backbone of the Seleka forces and that mercenaries were the ‘overwhelming majority’ within the Seleka.¹⁴⁴⁸
734. Numerous witnesses testified about the Seleka including individuals from Chad or Sudan, as well as some considered to be Janjaweed, often in reference to Seleka elements not speaking Sango or French, but only Arabic.¹⁴⁴⁹
735. The report presented by P-2926 concluded that the Seleka included fighters from ethnicities of the north of the CAR, including Gula, Runga, Sara, Kara, Peul, and others, as well as park rangers of Bamingui-Bangoran, diamond collectors such as Abdoulaye Hissène and Abakar Zakaria, to which were added Chadian and Sudanese combatants, such as Moussa Assimeh, leader of the Janjaweed.¹⁴⁵⁰ An NGO report found that the extended force of the Seleka included local people from the CAR, as well as foreign mercenaries and poachers.¹⁴⁵¹ Kasper Agger testified in this regard that while there were senior members and commanders of the Seleka who were from Sudan, for example Assimeh, a well-known former member of the Janjaweed,¹⁴⁵² it was still his impression that the majority of the Seleka were Central Africans.¹⁴⁵³ The CAR Panel similarly concluded that the Seleka included Chadian and Sudanese combatants, but that this was not unique, in that the rebellion led by François

Bozizé in 2003 was also comprised of substantial amounts of foreign fighters, mostly from Chad.¹⁴⁵⁴ Yet any reference to a ‘foreign invasion’ in the panel’s report simply conveyed the statements brought to their attention in which that term may have occurred.¹⁴⁵⁵ Indeed, the Seleka was often perceived as being in the majority ‘foreign’, without however there being concrete information on the Seleka’s actual composition, let alone how many actually foreign fighters it may have included.¹⁴⁵⁶ Catherine Samba-Panza testified that the Seleka was led by Central African Muslims.¹⁴⁵⁷ P-1577 was also aware of the names of significant high-level Seleka commanders who were from the CAR.¹⁴⁵⁸

736. The Chamber notes that some evidence suggests that foreign fighters were in the majority within the Seleka.¹⁴⁵⁹ However, of the reports mentioned, neither provides any sources for this claim.

737. Overall, the Chamber considers that the evidence before it does not allow it to reach a firm conclusion on the exact percentage which combatants from outside of the CAR may have formed within the Seleka.¹⁴⁶⁰ The evidence shows that the Seleka clearly included foreign fighters, in particular from Chad and Sudan including some referred to as Janjaweed. The evidence equally shows that the Seleka was led by CAR nationals of Muslim faith¹⁴⁶¹ and in its origins formed through a coalition of groups opposing the Bozizé regime within the CAR.¹⁴⁶²

738. The Chamber further notes in this context that some witnesses suggested that Seleka members passed themselves off as FOMAC elements,¹⁴⁶³ while others thought there to be a collaboration with or support of the Seleka by Chadian FOMAC/MISCA¹⁴⁶⁴ elements.¹⁴⁶⁵ The Chamber emphasises in this regard the evidence of Catherine Samba-Panza who testified that saying that the Seleka were aided by FOMAC ‘would be pushing it too much’.¹⁴⁶⁶

¹⁴⁶⁴ The Chamber notes that witnesses often seemed to refer to the acronyms of international forces operating in the CAR across the relevant period interchangeably and irrespective of which force may in fact have been active at any particular time. It appears that the ‘Mission de consolidation de la paix de la Communauté économique des États de l’Afrique centrale en République centrafricaine’ (MICOPAX) with its military component FOMAC, set up in 2008, was replaced by the ‘Mission internationale de soutien à la Centrafrique sous conduite africaine’ (MISCA) starting in July 2013 (see AU Press release, CAR-D29-0002-0668; Press article, CAR-D29-0002-0690, at 0692-93; Press article, CAR-D29-0002-0656; UNHCHR Report, CAR-OTP-2001-0172, at 0176, para. 12; HRW Report, CAR-OTP-2001-1870, at 1885). Given the deployment of various international or internationalised forces in the CAR over prolonged periods, the Chamber considers this confusion of terms to be understandable and will refer to the acronyms as they were used in witness testimony, with the understanding that this may not necessarily accurately refer to the force in fact operating at the respective time.

The impression of these witnesses is not negated by the evidence of P-2453, who pointed out that there was no particular relation between the Seleka and Muslims in Bossangoa, except for the usual that exists between the Seleka as authorities at the time and local traders about their business and tax payments, and as the majority of the Seleka were Muslims, they would also sometimes see them at the mosques for prayers (see P-2453 Statement, CAR-OTP-2111-0415-R04, at 0419, para. 22; P-2453: T-137, p. 19, lines 3-9; T-138, p. 17, line 4 – p. 18, line 6, p. 23, line 23 – p. 24, line 4, p. 24, line 15 – p. 27, line 8).

in particular in Kilomètre 5, also called KM5 or PK5,¹⁴⁷² in Bangui, were considered to be supportive of or in collaboration with the Seleka.¹⁴⁷³

741. In addition, some opined that Muslims in the CAR did not, or not sufficiently, denounce the abuses committed by the Seleka.¹⁴⁷⁴ Furthermore, it appears that some considered the Seleka to be a Muslim force, although it also included non-Muslims.¹⁴⁷⁵ This was the case even though witnesses were clear that not all Muslims joined or supported the Seleka, and that Muslims also suffered from the Seleka violence.¹⁴⁷⁶
742. All of the above impressions and perceptions led to increasing tensions, in particular between Muslim and non-Muslim communities. Nicolas Tiangaye explained that some individuals who had previously been on good terms with their neighbours suddenly became violent and arrogant, exacerbating tension within the communities and explaining why, when the Seleka lost power, the victims went into vengeance mode.¹⁴⁷⁷ Catherine Samba-Panza agreed with the suggestion that following the Seleka's arrival, certain Muslim civilians took advantage and became more arrogant, abusive, and violent towards their non-Muslim neighbours, and the non-Muslims sometimes expressed a feeling of betrayal, and the longer the Seleka governance lasted, the more the atmosphere degraded and the anger increased.¹⁴⁷⁸

¹⁴⁷² The Chamber notes that this area of Bangui is referred to by the mentioned terms differently across the evidence before it. In its evidentiary analysis, the Chamber has used the term as mentioned by witnesses or in other evidence, and in the understanding from the overall context that this refers to the same location.

743. The CAR Panel similarly concluded that the high number of human rights violations during the Seleka rule ‘mainstreamed an anti-foreign discourse into the political arena’,¹⁴⁷⁹ and that due to the presence of Chadian and Sudanese soldiers within the Seleka, most Central Africans perceived the rebel coalition as a foreign group that subjugated the majority of the population: ‘harassment of the mostly non-Muslim communities by the Seleka exacerbated dormant resentments that were opportunistically channelled, for political purposes, through the anti-balaka’.¹⁴⁸⁰

The number of Seleka elements varied greatly in the course of 2013. While counting several thousand elements at the time of the take-over in March 2013, their numbers grew significantly until the end of that year.

744. Catherine Samba-Panza testified that when the Seleka started marching towards Bangui, they were about 5,000 and as the group advanced towards Bangui, it gained strength, growing even further when they arrived there, with youth, traders, civilians, Muslims joining as they advanced and in Bangui.¹⁴⁸¹

745. Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that the number of Seleka elements changed a lot, but when they arrived at Sibut and Damara, FOMAC estimated they had between 2,000 and 2,500 elements, while their number swelled to 6,000 a month after they took power.¹⁴⁸² When the witness was asked to be the DDR and RSS coordinator in April 2013, they estimated the number at over 10,000 – Jean-Jacques Demafouth explained the background: some time prior to the Seleka’s arrival in Bangui, François Bozizé had launched a recruitment in the armed forces and over 3,000 people had come forward to be recruited, but only about 500 of these individuals were taken, and so there were a lot of unhappy young people in Bangui at the time; and subsequently, when the Seleka arrived, these people all joined.¹⁴⁸³

746. Similarly, Nicolas Tiangaye confirmed the suggestion that the figure of 7,000 to 8,000 Seleka troops would have tripled by November 2013 and explained that, as the Seleka came closer to Bangui, their numbers significantly increased, and many more joined when they effectively took power.¹⁴⁸⁴ According to the witness, some Central African civilians joined their ranks, as did mercenaries from Chad and Sudan.¹⁴⁸⁵
747. One NGO report concluded that the total number of fighters in the Seleka was unclear, but people in Bangui estimated that the group started with 5,000 fighters and gradually grew to 20,000 when they captured Bangui.¹⁴⁸⁶ Another report outlined that reliable estimates on the numbers are difficult to find, mentioning an AU report that spoke of 10-20,000 combatants before the Seleka arrived in Bangui, a UN estimate of 1,600 fighters at the beginning of the December 2012 offensive and 3,500 when reaching Bangui,¹⁴⁸⁷ as well as other sources referring to 5,000 Central African combatants and about 10,000 foreign mercenaries.¹⁴⁸⁸
748. P-1847 recalled that, in 2012, the Seleka spokesperson Narkoyo said on RFI that there were about 20,000 elements.¹⁴⁸⁹
749. P-2841 confirmed that once the Seleka arrived in Bangui in March 2013, their numbers grew significantly since with this type of movement, young unemployed people would join, and a lot of damage was caused in Bangui due to these young people who knew the city well.¹⁴⁹⁰ Adrien Poussou similarly testified that when he was a member of government, Michel

The Chamber notes that both Defence teams argue that the probative value of this report, if any, is outweighed by the prejudice reliance on it would cause (see Annex A to Response to "Prosecution's Ninth Application for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table and request for reconsideration of the Decision on the submission of CAR-OTP-2053-0576", 14 July 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-1978-Conf-AnxA (the 'Annex A to the Response'), pp. 8-10; Annex 1 to Defence Response to the "Prosecution's Ninth Application for Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table and request for reconsideration of the Decision on the submission of CAR-OTP-2053-0576" ICC-01/14-01/18-1947-Conf, 18 August 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-2036-Conf-Anx1, pp. 9-10). The Chamber finds that, in the specific context at hand, it is not relying on this report to reach any conclusion on the Seleka numbers. It therefore does not consider it necessary to further discuss these arguments.

Djotodia said that the elements which continued to commit violations in Bangui were made up of youth who had joined the Seleka on their way to Bangui and in Bangui, not only Muslims, but also Christians.¹⁴⁹¹ The witness did not know the relative number of people that joined the Seleka in Bangui or on the way down from Birao; they ('we') had no idea of the number of people who officially belonged to the Seleka and those who joined later.¹⁴⁹²

750. In contrast, Joachim Kokaté could not answer the question if, after the March 2013 coup, many civilians joined the Seleka as he was not in Bangui, and just heard about it.¹⁴⁹³ He said that while he was in the prime minister's office under André Nzapayéké in 2014,¹⁴⁹⁴ Seleka members were billeted at M'Poko camp, Béal and RDOT, but he could not confirm that 20,000 individuals could live in those camps – he only knew that the Seleka authorities had handed over a list of the members of their group to the prime minister and president, and these people were in the camps.¹⁴⁹⁵

751. The Chamber is of the view that the numbers in the evidence before it diverge to such an extent that it cannot reach a conclusive finding as to how many elements the Seleka may have counted at specific times in 2013. However, the Chamber can conclude, on the basis of the evidence before it, that the Seleka counted several thousand elements at the time of the take-over of power in March 2013, growing significantly over time and until the end of the year.

2. Individuals and their activities in Cameroon and the Democratic Republic of the Congo

Following the Seleka taking over Bangui and control in the CAR, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and others fled to Cameroon. Maxime Mokom, Mr Yekatom and others fled to Zongo, Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). Through meetings in Cameroon and communications with individuals in Zongo, in particular Maxime Mokom, who in turn liaised with persons and groups in Bangui and in the provinces, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and others planned steps to respond to the Seleka violence in the CAR as well as to ensure François Bozizé's return to power, by all means possible, including through armed violence.

During his time outside of the CAR in 2013, Mr Ngaïssona was actively involved in planning steps to respond to the Seleka violence in the CAR and to ensure François Bozizé's return to power by meeting and liaising with François Bozizé, Bernard Mokom and others to discuss strategies and plans, reaching out to individuals within and outside of the CAR with a view to gathering support for their cause, and providing financial assistance to those willing to assist in their activities. In this context, Mr Ngaïssona travelled to the border between Cameroon and the CAR with a view to liaising with groups meant to assist their efforts. Mr Ngaïssona continued providing financial assistance also after the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013.

At the same time, Mr Yekatom briefly went to Zongo in 2013 and then started forming a group, over which he assumed control, with Freddy Ouandjio, also known as Cœur de Lion, and Habib Beina, with a view to planning a response to the Seleka violence and removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power.

Maxime Mokom liaised with individuals and groups in Cameroon, Zongo and within the CAR, including his father Bernard Mokom, Mr Yekatom, and groups forming in the provinces, with a view to coordinating the activities and eventual advance onto Bangui.

Mr Ngaïssona provided financial contributions and engaged in activities pertaining to the organisation and coordination of groups for the purpose of facilitating the commission of criminal acts targeting the Muslim population, including the crimes found below.

i. Cameroon

752. The evidence before the Chamber, as further outlined below, shows that following the take-over of power by the Seleka forces, numerous individuals sought refuge in a number of different locations in Cameroon, most importantly Yaoundé, Douala, Bertoua and Garam-Boulai. The Chamber has heard from witnesses who were present in Cameroon for varying periods, and thus in a position to describe which other individuals were there and which contacts were established with persons both within Cameroon and in the CAR or other localities, including inter alia P-0884, Joachim Kokaté, P-2673, Adrien Poussou, P-1847 and P-0974. As further outlined below, some witnesses testified about meetings taking place in Cameroon involving François Bozizé, various of his sons, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and others.

a. Individuals in Cameroon

753. The evidence as outlined below shows that François Bozizé and several of his sons, as well as Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and many other individuals fled the CAR following the Seleka takeover of power to Cameroon.
754. The Chamber notes in this regard that a passport of Mr Ngaïssona shows a visa for single entry to South Africa on or before 27 March 2013, issued in Yaoundé on 19 March 2013.¹⁴⁹⁶
755. P-1847 fled together with François Bozizé to Yaoundé and remained with Bozizé until the latter went to Uganda.¹⁴⁹⁷ A number of Central Africans who had fled the coup were in Cameroon, a lot of the same ethnicity, Gbaya, but also KNK supporters.¹⁴⁹⁸ Many ‘deserters’ from the armed forces were at the Cameroon-CAR border, they retrieved all the weapons they got and took them to a military base in Bertoua.¹⁴⁹⁹ The Cameroonian state took the weapons and returned them after 2014.¹⁵⁰⁰ The soldiers in Cameroon included Colonel Ngoya, Captain Koudemon, whose elements were numerous, came with many weapons to the Cameroonian borders and were all billeted at Bertoua.¹⁵⁰¹
756. Joachim Kokaté went to Yaoundé at a time at which Mr Ngaïssona had already arrived in Cameroon, having been in phone contact with each other.¹⁵⁰² Mr Ngaïssona told Joachim Kokaté that he had fled to Congo Brazzaville and then Cameroon.¹⁵⁰³ According to Joachim Kokaté, many Central Africans, including civilians, soldiers, members of François Bozizé’s family, fled to Cameroon, DRC, Congo Brazzaville.¹⁵⁰⁴ Many soldiers also fled to Cameroon and Joachim Kokaté received information that they were gathered in a camp or centre in Bertoua.¹⁵⁰⁵ Soldiers in Yaoundé included those living with François Bozizé and Mr

757. P-0884 was another of the individuals who went to Cameroon.¹⁵⁰⁸ When he reached Cameroon, Mr Ngaïssona and others were already there.¹⁵⁰⁹ According to P-0884, Mr Ngaïssona was initially in Yaoundé, but when he arrived in Douala, Kevin Kpefio,¹⁵¹⁰ with whom P-0884 had been in contact since Bangui and who had come with a few soldiers to pick P-0884 up at the airport,¹⁵¹¹ took P-0884 to the Lumière hotel where they were told that Mr Ngaïssona had been there, but had just left.¹⁵¹² P-0884 testified that in Yaoundé, he stayed at Mr Ngaïssona’s residence, but the latter was always travelling.¹⁵¹³ P-0884 spent quite some time in Mr Ngaïssona’s house in Yaoundé, until he returned to Bangui after three weeks or one month.¹⁵¹⁴ Mr Ngaïssona was frequently not there, travelling for football matters, so they lived in the residence with ‘his soldiers’.¹⁵¹⁵ The two soldiers at Mr Ngaïssona’s residence¹⁵¹⁶ were Captain Lamkague and Koudemon Olivier,¹⁵¹⁷ also known as Bangouma,¹⁵¹⁸ both of them known to P-0884 and former ‘liberators’.¹⁵¹⁹ Koudemon was in Cameroon even before the Seleka took power, fleeing from Bossangoa.¹⁵²⁰ He regularly travelled between Yaoundé and Douala and was very well known to the Central Africans in Douala.¹⁵²¹

758. François Bozizé was also in Yaoundé while P-0884 was there, but he was living in a residence allocated to him by the Cameroonian government.¹⁵²² P-0884 further saw David Gbanga, general director of ‘CAR television’,¹⁵²³ on the street in Yaoundé.¹⁵²⁴ Similarly, P-0884 met Bernard Mokom, whom he knew from the latter’s time as sub-prefect in Gamboula, on the road in Yaoundé and they greeted each other.¹⁵²⁵ Further, while in Cameroon, P-0884 got to know Rod Larry Gallaut, who was living in the same house as Kevin Kpefio, which was rented by Levy Yakété – they were all in the KNK and had fled the country.¹⁵²⁶ P-0884 also met Jean Alesco Bouragoro, a police commissioner whom he knew well, in Douala in some bars, but P-0884 did not know what he did precisely.¹⁵²⁷
759. P-0884 heard that Joachim Kokaté was in Yaoundé, but did not meet him, just as he did not meet Levy Yakété, who lived with Kevin Kpefio.¹⁵²⁸ P-0884 did not meet former CAR ambassador to Cameroon, Louis Oguere Ngaikoumon,¹⁵²⁹ in Yaoundé.¹⁵³⁰ Christian Guenebem was in charge of mobilisation in the KNK and all those mentioned were from the same village as P-0884, so they knew each other very well.¹⁵³¹ They were all from the same ethnic group, Gbaya Bossangoa, and from the same village close to Bozizé.¹⁵³² Guenebem was the son of Bozizé’s brother; his father is also a general or colonel in the army; he was very close to Bozizé and also knew Mr Ngaïssona very well.¹⁵³³
760. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli, who was indirectly in contact with Mr Ngaïssona through Alfred Legrand Ngaya during this time,¹⁵³⁴ testified that before the arrival of the Seleka, Mr Ngaïssona was in France, while François Bozizé fled to Cameroon and remained there with his team.¹⁵³⁵ When the Seleka took power, Mr Ngaïssona went to Cameroon where he met with François Bozizé, one of his sons, Franklin, an advisor and many other people, and they started organising themselves in Cameroon.¹⁵³⁶ They began to talk about the situation in the country; Mr Ngaïssona is from the same ethnic group as François Bozizé and they met under those conditions and wanted to talk and were trying to find a solution.¹⁵³⁷ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli was not there and did not know exactly what they were doing, but heard information from Cameroon from all kinds of sources.¹⁵³⁸ The witness also knew that Captain Olivier Koudemon known as ‘Gbangouma’ (gendarme, previously FACA), Landry Touabou (aide-de-camp of François Bozizé), Colonel Bozizé (son of François Bozizé), and Gbadora went to Cameroon to be safe.¹⁵³⁹ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli further stated that Bernard Mokom – father of Maxime Mokom and first cousin of François Bozizé – was in Cameroon and also returned when Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui; they lived in the same area in Cameroon and often saw each other, and when Bernard Mokom returned to Bangui, he attended the national coordination meetings, being a member of the national coordination.¹⁵⁴⁰

763. P-2232 testified that Bernard Mokom, father of Maxime Mokom, was a sub-prefect in a locality bordering Cameroon and after the Seleka came to power, he found refuge in Cameroon along with Levy Yakété, François Bozizé, and many other officers.¹⁵⁴⁵ According to P-2232, Mr Ngaïssona was on mission and joined them later.¹⁵⁴⁶
764. D30-4848 fled through Zongo, Gemena – where he saw François Bozizé’s daughter, Eugène Ngaïkosset, Claude Ngaïkosset – and Kinshasa, Brazzaville to eventually reach Douala in Cameroon.¹⁵⁴⁷ He fled because he was one of the officers who had brought François Bozizé to power and was no longer protected within the system.¹⁵⁴⁸ D30-4848 stayed in Douala until one month after Djotodia resigned.¹⁵⁴⁹ He did not know when Mr Ngaïssona arrived to Douala, but thought it was well before himself.¹⁵⁵⁰
765. P-0974, a soldier stationed in Bouar at the time of the Seleka coup, fled to Cameroon in August 2013 when he was warned that the Seleka knew where he was and would come to Bouar to get him.¹⁵⁵¹ P-0974 said that FACA who were close to Bozizé’s regime fled to Cameroon, including PG member ‘Gbangouma’ Koudeman.¹⁵⁵² P-0974 remained for a month in Bertoua at a hotel, while many FACA stayed at the barracks and were restricted in their movements.¹⁵⁵³ After about a month, P-0974 went to Bangui, arriving there in September or October 2013.¹⁵⁵⁴
766. D30-4914, member of the gendarmerie at the time, was posted at the border, in Beloko, in October 2013.¹⁵⁵⁵ According to D30-4914, Michel Djotodia and his supporters created a ‘watertight system’ to prohibit any exits in the Garam-Boulaï, Berbérati, Gamboula, Beloko area.¹⁵⁵⁶ D30-4914 said that they went to Bouar and then to ‘Garoua-Boulai’,¹⁵⁵⁷ and then moved on to Yaoundé, at the Bertoua refugee camp.¹⁵⁵⁸ Many CAR security forces were in exile in Cameroon; those who had worked with François Bozizé were forced into exile, they had no choice if they wanted to stay alive.¹⁵⁵⁹ D30-4914 said that Gbangouma and Ganazoui also crossed,¹⁵⁶⁰ and recalled that Guerson Nganadekoe was in Yaoundé in 2013; he came to the border maybe two or three times to see what was happening, but did not give D30-4914 any advice or instructions.¹⁵⁶¹ Martial Wango spent about one and a half months in ‘Garoua-Boulai’ before going to Bangui.¹⁵⁶²

767. P-2841 stated that Gbangouma – Olivier ‘Koudemo’ Gbangouma – was part of the Bozizé rebellion in 2003 and close to Bozizé; when Bozizé lost power, he went to the border in Cameroon where he led a team of Presidential Guards (the ‘PG’); he later ended up in Yaoundé.¹⁵⁶³

768. According to P-2926’s report, the individuals identified as close to François Bozizé in Cameroon at the beginning of 2014 included Achille Berfoe, Eric Danboy, Koudemon Olivier, Ngaikossé Eugène, Sendiko, Steve Yambete, Célestin Namkpeta, Dazoumi, Lengbe Thierry, Feimonazoui, Damas Namgana, David Gbanga, Doctor Nombet, Francis Bozizé, Landry Touaboy, Jules Feikouman, Mbathes Olivier Jean Constatin, and Sani Yalo.¹⁵⁶⁴

b. Communication and coordination within and across borders

i. Meetings in Yaoundé

769. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that CAR nationals in Cameroon engaged in various activities, including meetings at the Hilton hotel in Yaoundé, gathering inter alia François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom, and others. These initial discussions centred around criticising the Seleka's coup, as well as thinking of first steps to ensure the return to 'the constitutional order', which meant François Bozizé's return to power – by all means possible.

770. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that (i) Mr Ngaïssona did not follow François Bozizé to Cameroon, regularly visit him or live at his residence; (ii) Mr Ngaïssona's alleged proximity to François Bozizé cannot be inferred from shared ethnicity; (iii) Mr Ngaïssona did not participate in youth mobilisation; (iv) Mr Ngaïssona never expressed anti-Muslim sentiment or sowed division within the CAR population; and (v) Mr Ngaïssona did not participate in meetings with François Bozizé in Cameroon.¹⁵⁶⁵
771. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the Prosecution failed to establish that François Bozizé's intent was to reclaim power at all costs and that the evidence regarding meetings held in Cameroon or France does not support the inference that they had a criminal purpose.¹⁵⁶⁶ It further submits that the Prosecution failed to establish that François Bozizé was involved in the Anti-Balaka movement, whether by creating, organising or financing it.¹⁵⁶⁷ The Ngaïssona Defence also argues that due to the lack of specificity in identifying the 'inner circle' around François Bozizé, a minimal level of coordination cannot be established.¹⁵⁶⁸
772. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the evidence does not establish that any 'anti-Muslim' rhetoric was expressed and endorsed during alleged meetings in Cameroon, stating that (i) the testimony of Adrien Poussou on the alleged meetings at the Hilton hotel is contradicted by Joachim Kokaté and P-1847; (ii) there is no credible evidence for the allegations that specific roles were assigned to attendees; (iii) there is no evidence of a criminal policy stemming out of an alleged subsequent meeting at the CAR embassy; and (iv) the alleged meetings at the Golf residence are based solely on the indirect evidence of P-1847, whose credibility is minimal.¹⁵⁶⁹

773. On the basis of the evidence, as further outlined below, the Chamber considers the Ngaïssona Defence's arguments in this regard without merit, including in relation to the expression of an 'anti-Muslim' animus.¹⁵⁷⁰
774. The Chamber first turns to the meetings at the Hilton hotel that Joachim Kokaté and Adrien Poussou attended themselves, and those that P-1847 heard about.
775. Joachim Kokaté described being called by François Bozizé about one or one and a half months after the Seleka took power, saying he was at the Hilton hotel in Yaoundé and wanted to meet him.¹⁵⁷¹ The witness was contacted by Francis Bozizé and as soon as he arrived in Yaoundé, he was received by François Bozizé.¹⁵⁷² Once Joachim Kokaté got to Yaoundé, he went to greet François Bozizé at the Hilton.¹⁵⁷³ The witness was in phone contact with Mr Ngaïssona at that time, who was also aware that Joachim Kokaté was coming to see Bozizé.¹⁵⁷⁴ Many people were in the lobby of the Hilton, but as soon as Joachim Kokaté arrived, he was received by Bozizé who had given instructions to his guards.¹⁵⁷⁵ Coming back down from this encounter, Joachim Kokaté saw Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom, Socrate Bozizé, Adrien Poussou, Bozizé supporters, Levy Yakété, Louis Oguere, David Banga.¹⁵⁷⁶ Mr Ngaïssona was part of François Bozizé's family, a member of the KNK, he was close to him.¹⁵⁷⁷ Levy Yakété was an influential member, he was very close to Bozizé and he had influence on the political party of Bozizé.¹⁵⁷⁸
776. Joachim Kokaté testified that the meeting in François Bozizé's hotel suite lasted for about 45 minutes to one hour; Oguere was there, Mr Ngaïssona, Adrien Poussou, but the witness did not remember everyone.¹⁵⁷⁹ Bozizé – who was in a state of confusion and shock as he had just lost power – told them that he had not understood why the Libreville agreement had not been complied with by the Seleka coalition, that he was going to contact the CEAC heads of state to implement the agreement and bring him back to power to complete his term of office, and he talked about a complicity of certain neighbouring countries, and he could not accept that he had lost power.¹⁵⁸⁰ All those present were not in agreement with the Seleka seizing power, everyone was in support of François Bozizé and in favour of him contacting the ECCAS president to come back to power.¹⁵⁸¹ Bozizé tried to call the Chadian and Congolese authorities, but nobody picked up.¹⁵⁸² Bozizé did not talk, on that day, about other options to engage the heads of states.¹⁵⁸³ Joachim Kokaté did not have any particular role that day, Bozizé only talked about returning the constitutional order and there was a feeling of unhappiness, dissatisfaction because someone had lost power and so did the people in his entourage, and because the Libreville agreement had not been respected, in addition to receiving information from the country about atrocities.¹⁵⁸⁴

777. Adrien Poussou also travelled from France to Cameroon in April 2013.¹⁵⁸⁵ He had had exchanges with many of his fellow countrymen at the time, including François Bozizé's son Socrate who was in Yaoundé with his father, whom Adrien Poussou wanted to interview.¹⁵⁸⁶ In Yaoundé, Adrien Poussou went directly to the Hilton hotel where François Bozizé was staying, and where he was welcomed by Socrate Bozizé.¹⁵⁸⁷ A number of people belonging to François Bozizé's inner circle were present at the entrance of the Hilton hotel, including Levy Yakété, David Banga, Mr Ngaïssona, Joachim Kokaté, one of Bozizé's aides-de-camp, Vincent Wapounaba.¹⁵⁸⁸
778. Socrate Bozizé took Adrien Poussou to see his father, with whom the witness had a frank exchange about the situation in the country and about what would come next, with François Bozizé telling Adrien Poussou that he needed him and all those who did not want the country to fall into the hands of foreigners, that 'everything' needed to be done ('il fallait tout faire') to go back to the constitutional order, and the constitutional order was himself, so everything had to be done for him to be able to regain power.¹⁵⁸⁹ Adrien Poussou did not talk to François Bozizé about what the other people mentioned were doing at the hotel, but he supposed they were there to take part in his plan to regain power; the witness was surprised to see them at the hotel.¹⁵⁹⁰ François Bozizé wanted Adrien Poussou to write a thank you letter to Paul Biya and to help organise his communication – he was determined to raise awareness among the general public, leaders in the sub-region and heads of state, and to convey to them the need for him to return to power to finish his term in office.¹⁵⁹¹ Following this encounter, Adrien Poussou met François Bozizé with the people mentioned earlier, and before returning to Paris, the witness had a third, individual, meeting with François Bozizé.¹⁵⁹²

779. Following the drafting of the mentioned letter, possibly the day after, Adrien Poussou attended a meeting with François Bozizé and the people he saw at the entrance hall of the Hilton hotel, as well as Louis Oguere.¹⁵⁹³ Adrien Poussou did not see Thierry Bongolo in Yaoundé, but in Paris during the meeting at which FROCCA was set up.¹⁵⁹⁴ A CEEAC summit convening the heads of state of the CEMAC was supposed to take place in N'Djamena and François Bozizé absolutely wanted to take part to plead his case; the subject matter of the meeting had essentially a bearing on his return to power.¹⁵⁹⁵ Bozizé had taken stock of the situation, as he had done in 2012, that the country was in the hands of foreigners, invaders, who had taken their ('our') country away from them; and were they ('we') to do nothing, they would find themselves without their land, countryless.¹⁵⁹⁶

780. The idea expressed by some of the participants, including Levy Yakété and Joachim Kokaté, was to do everything possible, including fighting, using violence, to bring François Bozizé back to power, which would mean taking back control over their country.¹⁵⁹⁷ According to Adrien Poussou, Levy Yakété was the most vindictive at the meeting, to the extent he had a bone to pick with Michel Djotodia, and said everything had to be done, one had to fight, to bring François Bozizé back to power, referring to the men he had out in the field, implying he was in constant contact with his men in the field who had remained in Bangui.¹⁵⁹⁸ Kokaté shared the viewpoint of the other participants, the idea of using armed violence in order to return to power; he was saying that he was ready to go out into the field and fight.¹⁵⁹⁹ No objection was raised to the possibility of using armed violence in order to bring him back to power; nobody voiced an opinion to the contrary.¹⁶⁰⁰ All the participants of this meeting wished and wanted to work for the return of Bozizé to power; the supporters and participants at the meeting agreed on this objective.¹⁶⁰¹ Adrien Poussou stated that at the first meeting in Yaoundé, Gbanga David and Mr Ngaïssona said that one had to return to the Libreville agreements, but when they got to Paris, the positions had changed – the Anti-Balaka were already fighting the Seleka and there were casualties in the field.¹⁶⁰² The meeting lasted approximately half an hour, and François Bozizé asked them to continue the meeting, or on the same line of reflection, and subsequent to this meeting they (‘we’) went to the Hôtel des Députés, where Adrien Poussou was staying, and held a further meeting there.¹⁶⁰³

781. The same or the following day, they met at Hôtel des Députés without François Bozizé, but with David Gbanga, an eminent member of the KNK, Mr Ngaïssona, Joachim Kokaté, Levy Yakété.¹⁶⁰⁴ The meeting was somewhat lively in that those close to François Bozizé reproached Adrien Poussou, saying they (‘we’) had contributed to the regime’s fall, while Adrien Poussou said they were accountable for the situation in the country as their behaviour and acts in power had created the frustration and given rise to the rebellion.¹⁶⁰⁵ Once this was out of the way, they broached the drafting of a memorandum outlining the situation in the country, violence, and possible solutions, to be sent to the heads of state meeting in N’Djamena, which David Gbanga, Levy Yakété and Adrien Poussou drafted together.¹⁶⁰⁶

782. According to Adrien Poussou, the supporters of François Bozizé had espoused the idea that the foreigners had taken their country away from them, it was their leitmotif, and the consequence for them to take back control of the country essentially came down to using armed violence to such ends.¹⁶⁰⁷ The witness did not share this point of view and expressed his own, also stating that a solution to the crisis could not be solely military, there was a political one as the crisis was political.¹⁶⁰⁸
783. The witness stated that Mr Ngaïssona, on the other hand, not only shared the view of taking back the country through force and distinguishing between foreigners and Central Africans and clearly expressed this, but also let it be understood that he coordinated and organised elements in the field in this context.¹⁶⁰⁹ During the discussions, Mr Ngaïssona received a phone call, and what Adrien Poussou understood from this was that he was speaking to people in Douala, asking them to wait for his return – at the time, many members of the former PG had taken refuge in Douala.¹⁶¹⁰ Adrien Poussou could not precisely say whom he was in contact with, but he was constantly on the phone with different individuals, and in the witness's interpretation of the circumstances, he assumed Mr Ngaïssona was speaking to former FACA, PG, and militiamen from COAC.¹⁶¹¹ The Chamber notes in this regard that Adrien Poussou clarified that specifically Mr Ngaïssona referred to being in contact with 'the children' in the field, which he considered to be coded language referring to militiamen or former PG soldiers, in the context of their later exchanges in Paris.¹⁶¹² The Chamber considers of note in this context that other witnesses used the term 'children' when referring to individuals within the Anti-Balaka.¹⁶¹³ Indeed, Mr Ngaïssona himself repeated this expression in another context, when speaking of the Anti-Balaka during an interview in 2014.¹⁶¹⁴

784. Once the mentioned memorandum was drafted, they had another meeting with François Bozizé to approve it.¹⁶¹⁵ The contents were read, and it was decided to transform the memorandum into an official letter to the foreign minister of France which Adrien Poussou then gave to the advisor of a cabinet member in the ministry of foreign affairs on his return to France.¹⁶¹⁶ The former ambassador to Cameroon, Oguere, was present at this meeting.¹⁶¹⁷ The tone of the meeting was practically the same as the first, with the main idea being to bring François Bozizé back to power using military means, and implying diplomatic endeavours of lobbying with the heads of state in the sub-region and of France.¹⁶¹⁸ Adrien Poussou left the meeting after about half an hour and did not enquire about the further discussion after he left.¹⁶¹⁹ Adrien Poussou surmised after these two meetings that François Bozizé and his supporters were determined to use armed violence, through former members of FACA and PG, many of whom were in Cameroon, and by means of a rebellion or an armed attack to bring François Bozizé back to power.¹⁶²⁰ The witness did not recall if anyone raised the prospect of potential consequences in the context of an armed rebellion.¹⁶²¹ François Bozizé and the people close to him wanted to regain power whatever the cost – and when one considers using means other than democratic ones, one must expect there to be damage, death, to have civilian and other victims; Adrien Poussou did not hear anyone voice the possibility of there being civilian victims.¹⁶²²
785. After the two meetings with François Bozizé, Adrien Poussou also interviewed him for publication in 'Afrique Nouvelle'.¹⁶²³ Two days before this interview, on 13 and 14 April 2013, the Seleka had attacked Boy-Rabe, looted and killed civilians, so François Bozizé's answer when Adrien Poussou asked him about the degeneration of the crisis into a religious confrontation did not surprise the witness, it was a logical consequence of everything else he had already said, of his reasoning on their country being taken over by foreigners, meaning Muslims.¹⁶²⁴ François Bozizé's indication of restoring constitutional order being the first of his conditions was the founding idea during the meetings that Adrien Poussou attended, because François Bozizé saw himself as the constitutional order and so this restoration meant his return to power.¹⁶²⁵ Adrien Poussou was certain that François Bozizé and his supporters were going to use armed violence with a view to returning to power, and when he said that as a matter of principle, he preferred dialogue over armed conflict, this buttressed what Adrien Poussou was already thinking: in principle he preferred dialogue, but if there was no dialogue, he would resort to armed confrontation.¹⁶²⁶ François Bozizé also wanted Adrien Poussou to work on public relations or communications for him in Paris, which the witness did by setting up interviews and establishing contacts.¹⁶²⁷

786. The Chamber notes that the published interview, which mentions meeting François Bozizé at the Hilton hotel in Yaoundé on 15 April 2013, reports François Bozizé as stating, inter alia, that FACA members could not do anything against the Seleka takeover in light of the lack of resources and training, that they were the only ones respecting the Libreville agreements, that mineral and other resources were one of the main reasons for the 'external aggression', that the Seleka had clearly lost control over their mercenaries, and that 'all that is outside the democratic framework distances from peace' ('tout ce qui se fait en dehors du cadre démocratique éloigne la paix'), while the return to the constitutional order remained the first condition.¹⁶²⁸ According to Adrien Poussou, François Bozizé's answer on 'everything done outside the context of democracy distancing itself from peace' was contradictory, but did not come as a surprise to the witness – it was not his first renouncement, and he was a politician after all, with politics in the CAR being ‘the art of saying the contrary to what one really thinks’.¹⁶²⁹

787. P-1847 also talked of meetings at the Hilton hotel. The Chamber notes in this regard the observations of the Ngäïssona Defence on P-1847’s evidence,¹⁶³⁰ as well as its discussion below.¹⁶³¹

788. P-1847 stated that when they were at the Hilton hotel, the people of François Bozizé’s party tried to regroup and maybe ten days after people arrived, he organised the meeting at the Hilton hotel to see who would be his spokesperson and to fight against the accusation of the Seleka on Bozizé at that time.¹⁶³² P-1847 also met Levy Yakété, Joachim Kokaté, Bernard Mokom in Yaoundé, and Mr Ngäïssona once at the residence at the ‘Cité du Golf’.¹⁶³³ At the Hilton hotel, François Bozizé was staying with his wife, the two bodyguards, including Vincent Wapounaba, and two pilots; his sons came a little later, Franklin, Giscard, Rodrigue; Francis was there and then went to Congo, passing via Zongo to go to Kinshasa, and Socrate was there and went to Senegal.¹⁶³⁴ P-1847 stayed almost three months at the Hilton, where the Cameroon government put security and anyone who wanted to see François Bozizé went through that security.¹⁶³⁵ François Bozizé met all compatriots like the ambassador Oguere, the ambassador of South Africa, two Chadian opponents, Iman Ertiny, Levy Yakété, Joachim Kokaté, Yvon Songuet, Marius Faimonazoui; Ginza Sanzé was a member of the KNK, elected in the Sibut area.¹⁶³⁶

789. P-1847 stated that François Bozizé had a meeting at the Hilton hotel around April 2013 attended by Yakété, David Banga, Sanzé, the ambassador, Bernard Mokom, Joachim

Kokaté, but P-1847, who was at the Hilton at the time, did not participate.¹⁶³⁷ He saw who was there before going up and down, they had to go via him.¹⁶³⁸ When the people left, P-1847 spoke to Yakété who said that they wanted to organise something to defend the cause of François Bozizé when they started accusing him, and he wanted Yakété to be his spokesman to defend him against those allegations; there was also talk about the KNK structure and the position of Gina Sanzé.¹⁶³⁹ The objective of the meeting was clear: organise responses to the Seleka exactions and see how to return the constitutional order in the CAR, meaning François Bozizé's return to power.¹⁶⁴⁰ P-1847 heard this from Levy Yakété and David Banga on the same day, when they left the meeting.¹⁶⁴¹ The former said that the president said Yakété would be the spokesperson, and that he would start contacting journalists, David Banga was responsible for 'all the administrative stuff', Gina Sanzé should be interim head of the KNK, and Oguere was appointed as the diplomatic advisor responsible for establishing contacts outside and inside the country.¹⁶⁴² Oguere was responsible for discussing with the diplomats he had contact with, while P-1847 did not know exactly on that day the role Joachim Kokaté was supposed to play – later, they created FROCCA and the latter became its spokesperson.¹⁶⁴³

790. P-1847 said that Kokaté left for Douala immediately after the meeting, but one week later he came back to Yaoundé to meet Levy Yakété with P-1847 to see how to organise everything and how to resume contact with people; Yakété said that he would still stay in Cameroon for a while; afterwards he told P-1847 that he had to contact all the former military, also the military who left the country, he wanted to gather them together to get a more 'dynamic arrangement'.¹⁶⁴⁴ The aim was to mobilise individuals to chase out ('chasser') the Seleka and get power again – that was the objective of the people at the meeting,¹⁶⁴⁵ including François Bozizé, Bernard Mokom, Levy Yakété, Louis Oguere, David

Banga, Joachim Kokaté, but there were other people who went directly to the meeting, not via P-1847, also an ambassador.¹⁶⁴⁶

791. According to P-1847, there were at least two meetings at the Hilton, with the one described being the second, and the first when Levy Yakété arrived.¹⁶⁴⁷ P-1847 thought Bernard Mokom and Joachim Kokaté were at the second, but not at the first meeting.¹⁶⁴⁸ P-1847 confirmed that there were concerns about the Cameroonian authorities finding out what was going on in respect of the meetings at the Hilton hotel, they controlled everything, and François Bozizé was told to refrain from organising politically on Cameroonian territory.¹⁶⁴⁹ Journalists wondered what François Bozizé's intentions were, they wanted to know what he was going to do, whether they would have a return to constitutional order.¹⁶⁵⁰ When François Bozizé talked about restoring constitutional order he wanted to establish it as president, he relied on everyone to help him regain his position.¹⁶⁵¹ There were military who fled from the Seleka, and also some in Garam-Boulaï, and the aim of the second meeting was to pick up contact with those military to reorganise themselves, meaning to fight the Seleka and take back power in the CAR.¹⁶⁵² P-1847 agreed with the suggestion that Michel Djotodia had suspended the CAR constitution and dissolved the government and national assembly, and it was this that François Bozizé referred to when talked of reinstating the constitutional order.¹⁶⁵³ After Levy Yakété and Joachim Kokaté passed through Douala after the meeting, they contacted some people in Douala; at the time of the second meeting, one colonel whose name P-1847 did not recall came by.¹⁶⁵⁴

792. The Chamber does not consider the information provided by Joachim Kokaté, Adrien Poussou and P-1847 to be contradictory or mutually exclusive. P-1847 did not participate in any meetings himself, but heard about their content from others. In this, his evidence supports that of Adrien Poussou, in that he also heard of discussions to return François

Bozizé to power by all means possible, which is evidenced by his mentioning the idea of establishing contact with military to reorganise, and to fight the Seleka to regain power. Moreover, that Adrien Poussou recalled more details of such meetings than Joachim Kokaté and P-1847 does not, by itself, render such details unreliable. The Chamber notes in this context that some of those details mentioned by Adrien Poussou but not Joachim Kokaté implicated the latter in wanting to use all means possible to return François Bozizé to power.

793. Similarly, the information on the meeting provided by these three witnesses is not impacted by the evidence of Didier Ouebio, whose room at the Hilton hotel was one floor down from François Bozizé, where Didier Ouebio mostly stayed playing cards, or played cards in Wapounaba's room.¹⁶⁵⁵ Indeed, while stating that he did 'not recall' if he saw Mr Ngaïssona or Levy Yakété at the hotel,¹⁶⁵⁶ and not knowing about meetings with several people at the hotel,¹⁶⁵⁷ the witness also conceded that he would not necessarily have been aware of François Bozizé's meetings at the Hilton or the Golf, or his activities outside thereof.¹⁶⁵⁸
794. In addition to meetings at the Hilton hotel, Joachim Kokaté also mentioned two meetings at the CAR embassy in Yaoundé, leading to ambassador Oguere's dismissal.¹⁶⁵⁹ One meeting took place about one week after the meeting at the Hilton hotel¹⁶⁶⁰ and was attended by Bozizé, Oguere, Bozizé's sons including Socrate, Franklin, Rodrigue, Levy Yakété, David Banga, Mr Ngaïssona, Poussou, Bernard Mokom, Eric Danboy who lived in the same residence as Bozizé and was part of his protection, and many people, there were also women, Joachim Kokaté did not know everyone.¹⁶⁶¹ They talked about the Seleka violence in Bangui, François Bozizé talked about his return to power, and he said that he was still attempting to get into contact with his former colleagues so as to organise his return.¹⁶⁶² They received alarming information from the country, including about the body of Bozizé's mother being profaned, which Bozizé said was unacceptable, that he would assume his responsibilities and that they needed to defend and organise themselves.¹⁶⁶³ The two meetings in the embassy in Yaoundé dealt practically with the same subjects.¹⁶⁶⁴ All participants in the meetings at the Hilton and the embassy were not at all in agreement with the Seleka, there was a feeling of discontent, everyone was nervous, no one accepted what was happening in Bangui, but the person directing the discussions was Bozizé, and whatever was happening was according to how he was organising it.¹⁶⁶⁵

795. The Chamber does not consider this evidence to be impacted by the information provided by D30-4720. Indeed, this witness appears to have arrived in Yaoundé after the mentioned meetings, in particular bearing in mind that she was to transmit a document appointing an acting general secretary of the party¹⁶⁶⁶ – and that it appears that Louis Oguere was secretary-general of the KNK.¹⁶⁶⁷ That D30-4720 did not see any FACA,¹⁶⁶⁸ or Levy Yakété, David Banga or Mr Ngaïssona in Cameroon,¹⁶⁶⁹ did not hear talk about regaining power using weapons,¹⁶⁷⁰ or did not hear about any meetings at the Hilton hotel¹⁶⁷¹ is immaterial to assessing the reliability of the evidence provided by other witnesses on these aspects. Similarly, that Didier Ouebio stated going to the embassy with François Bozizé once and waited outside for Bozizé who was inside for 'perhaps 15 or 20 minutes'¹⁶⁷² does not negate the possibility of François Bozizé attending meetings at the embassy on other occasions.
796. In addition to the meetings at the Hilton hotel and the CAR embassy, Joachim Kokaté also participated in a meeting at one of the residences of Mr Ngaïssona to which Bozizé came whilst Joachim Kokaté was there during the meeting.¹⁶⁷³ This was shortly after the meeting at the embassy, the ambassador had already been dismissed from his functions,¹⁶⁷⁴ though the witness could not say when exactly it took place.¹⁶⁷⁵ Mr Ngaïssona told Joachim Kokaté that they would see each other in one of his residences in Yaoundé, a map was given to Joachim Kokaté, though he did not know where exactly in Yaoundé the residence was.¹⁶⁷⁶ Mr Ngaïssona himself said it was one of his homes.¹⁶⁷⁷ People present included Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Wapounaba, Levy Yakété, David Banga, Bernard Mokom, and others.¹⁶⁷⁸ Bozizé continued speaking about the main subjects they had dealt with at the embassy, said that so far he had not had any contacts with the heads of states, but he would not stand idly and watch what the Seleka were doing.¹⁶⁷⁹ No tasks were assigned during that meeting.¹⁶⁸⁰ After the meeting, Commander Bangouma was outside and told Bozizé that he needed money, Bozizé gave him 30,000 CFA and he was not pleased with the amount.¹⁶⁸¹

797. Joachim Kokaté stated that at some point he returned to France, but the meetings continued.¹⁶⁸² According to the witness, François Bozizé had a certain way of operating which meant there were meetings where everybody was invited, and meetings in a very restricted circle with members of his family who were in Yaoundé included, as he had more trust and confidence in people of his family and of his ethnic group.¹⁶⁸³ Joachim Kokaté met many people in Yaoundé¹⁶⁸⁴ and travelled to Cameroon several times during 2013, including each month from August to December.¹⁶⁸⁵

798. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that in 2013, he went twice to Yaoundé for professional activities.¹⁶⁸⁶ Alfred Legrand Ngaya and Mr Ngaïssona discussed some actions that they could take from Bangui, for instance, twice between May and July 2013, they decided to ask people in the neighbourhoods to play a ‘concert of pots’ at a specific time.¹⁶⁸⁷ They discussed actions to create pressure which led, together with international community pressure, to Djotodia’s resignation.¹⁶⁸⁸ In October 2013 in Yaoundé, Alfred Legrand Ngaya had dinner with Bernard Mokom, Bozizé’s cook Sosthène, Freddy Ngaïssona and Mr Ngaïssona at Mr Ngaïssona’s house, in the residential area of Yaoundé.¹⁶⁸⁹ The witness did not have any suspicions with regard to them and did not imagine that they might be involved in military operations.¹⁶⁹⁰ Alfred Legrand Ngaya had called Mr Ngaïssona to arrange dinner, but it was Bernard Mokom who picked him up from the hotel; the witness was surprised to see Bernard Mokom, not knowing that the latter was in Cameroon.¹⁶⁹¹

799. In addition to the evidence of witnesses who participated in meetings, witnesses who were not present also heard about such meetings.
800. For instance, P-1719 heard about several meetings in Yaoundé attendees of which included Mr Ngaïssona, Levy Yakété, Kevin Kpefio, Kombo Hubert, Bernard Mokom and many others.¹⁶⁹² The most important meetings took place in Yaoundé, which P-1719 heard while in Douala, and he heard there was a leadership struggle between Levy Yakété and Mr Ngaïssona and that there were problems with ethnic origins.¹⁶⁹³ Levi Yakété was of Mandja ethnicity, whereas Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom were Gbaya.¹⁶⁹⁴ The purpose was to struggle to return to the country, and they struggled for power and positions, but did not understand each other and there were ethnic problems, so Levy Yakété distanced himself and travelled to France.¹⁶⁹⁵ P-1719 assumed that one of the people in direct contact with Mr Ngaïssona was Kevin Kpefio, president of the KNK youth and in contact with the young people of the CAR; from time to time, they received information from various places and some of that information was partially disclosed.¹⁶⁹⁶ P-1719 did not see Kevin Kpefio in Douala, only at the border.¹⁶⁹⁷ Kombo Hubert, sometimes called Juvenal or ‘General’,¹⁶⁹⁸ seeing that he was part of the network related to the defeated president, he and Mr Ngaïssona collaborated closely, just like P-1719 worked with Kpefio, Rodrigue Bozizé.¹⁶⁹⁹

801. Later, Bernard Mokom said to P-1719 that he was part of the brains of the movement, the ‘éminences grises’, but P-1719 did not know what role he was playing in practical terms.¹⁷⁰⁰ The people who had influence and who had begun the movement whom P-1719 knew personally were Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom, Maxime Mokom.¹⁷⁰¹ Bernard Mokom is the father of Maxime Mokom, Mr Ngaïssona was related to both of them because they all come from the same prefecture, Bossangoa and Ouham, they are all from the same ethnic group.¹⁷⁰² At the time, Maxime Mokom was not in Yaoundé, he was in Zongo, while Bernard Mokom was in Yaoundé together with Mr Ngaïssona, as P-1719 concluded.¹⁷⁰³ Before P-1719’s meeting with Mr Ngaïssona, those based in Yaoundé did not share the information that they had just in any manner, they were not yet talking about the Anti-Balaka, and when it was created, it was only Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom who were at the head.¹⁷⁰⁴ To P-1719’s knowledge, Francis Bozizé was in Yaoundé since March 2013 after the coup, the authorities of the country were in Yaoundé.¹⁷⁰⁵
802. Both P-2841 and P-2673 heard from Rod Larry Martial, and P-2673 also from Kevin Kpefio, about meetings held with Levy Yakété, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and David Gbanga, former director of Radio Centrafrique, at which the military and the Anti-Balaka movement were discussed, as well as Michel Djotodia’s removal from power.¹⁷⁰⁶

803. While P-2841 mentioned diplomatic solutions to meet the latter goal, P-2673 specified that he heard that it was said during the meeting, ‘We are going back to B[angui], we are going to organise ourselves with the Anti-Balaka to form an armed group to fight D[jotodia]’.¹⁷⁰⁷
804. According to P-2673, the orders came from Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father.¹⁷⁰⁸ Sometimes Mokom father and David Gbanga came to Rod Larry Martial’s and Kpefio’s house and P-2673 was on occasion there when they came, but when he was present, they did not speak or left the house and returned later.¹⁷⁰⁹ According to P-2673, in the meetings all were Gbaya; Achille was in Bertoua but attended when they called, they sent money for his transport; Achille and Kpefio were very close.¹⁷¹⁰ P-2673 heard from Achille, Kevin Kpefio, Rod Larry Martial and Fono David, little brother of Bozizé’s aide-de-camp Vincent Wapounaba, that Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father led the meetings, and they were always together at these meetings.¹⁷¹¹ P-2673 knew military people attended, Mokom father, and François Bozizé’s aide-de-camp Colonel Wapounaba was at the Golf, Bozizé’s residence; P-2673 did not see Wapounaba in Yaoundé.¹⁷¹² Alfred Legrand Ngaya was not at these meetings, he was not of their ethnicity and lived on his own in Douala in a district called Village.¹⁷¹³ Guerson took part in the meetings, but P-2673 did not know his role.¹⁷¹⁴ Yambété told P-2673 that he had been in some of the meetings with Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father in Yaoundé, but did not tell him anything precise.¹⁷¹⁵ Yambété said to the MISCA, in front of P-2673 and everyone, that he was the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka at the border, who went to Beloko.¹⁷¹⁶ P-2673 heard from Fono and Grimari that Kokaté went to the Golf residence to meet Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father, but did not know what they talked about; P-2673 did not meet Kokaté while he was in Cameroon.¹⁷¹⁷ Alesco did not participate in meetings with Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father, he was in Douala and heard about the meetings and told P-2673, who checked the information with Achille.¹⁷¹⁸ Reboas Apollinaire also told P-2673 what happened at the meetings, and P-2673 checked it with Alesco; he also got information from Bama.¹⁷¹⁹ Alesco was in contact with Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom and everyone, they were very close; they were all Gbaya.¹⁷²⁰

805. P-0884 testified that he did not participate in any meetings with Guenebem, Bouragoro, Rod Larry Gallaut,¹⁷²¹ and never heard of a meeting amongst them.¹⁷²² He only knew that Bernard Mokom regularly went to François Bozizé's residence.¹⁷²³ It was in Bangui that he heard of meetings, but not when he was himself in Cameroon.¹⁷²⁴ When P-0884 returned to Bangui, before July, August 2013,¹⁷²⁵ he was questioned by a gendarme called Ouandji about his stay in Cameroon,¹⁷²⁶ to see whether in Cameroon they had had meetings with the purpose of organising a coup and P-0884 said that he was not aware and that he did not have enough to eat so decided to come home.¹⁷²⁷ P-0884 stated, asked what his understanding was how three people – Bernard Mokom, Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona – were organising to be able to attack the Seleka, that he had this information because they set up a group in Cameroon; everybody knew they were in Cameroon and that they were resetting up a resistance structure; when he organised the demonstration at the airport, he rang P-0884 frequently; even Maxime Mokom one day called him to congratulate him, promising that one day he would come and meet him; they had their organisation, but P-0884 did not really know exactly what was going on with this organisation; it is once 'he' came back to Bangui that he became 'the general political coordinator of the Anti-Balaka'.¹⁷²⁸ Everybody was fighting the Seleka, not only Mr Ngaïssona, but 'everybody', Maxime Mokom, the others – P-0884 for example organised demonstrations, and they on their side organised military operations in the field; the content of the conversations P-0884 had with Maxime Mokom and others concerned the Anti-Balaka being due to attack the capital on 5 December.¹⁷²⁹ ‘Their side’ was primarily Maxime Mokom, Bernard Mokom, including Mr Ngaïssona and Kokaté – they were in Cameroon, organised the Anti-Balaka who were advancing on Bangui, some from Bossangoa, Bouca, Batangafo.¹⁷³⁰

806. Aurélien Llorca, member of the CAR Panel, testified that a confidential source had told him that Bernard Mokom took part in the initial planning meetings in Yaoundé in 2013 and that Mr Ngaïssona was also in Cameroon and supposed to take command and control of the movement.¹⁷³¹ A confidential source told the witness that planning meetings took place in Yaoundé, Cameroon, in a private house before the attack of 5 December 2013 on Bangui, and that Bernard Mokom attended at least one meeting.¹⁷³² During his interview on 3 May 2014, Mr Ngaïssona told Aurélien Llorca that ‘he himself and the Anti-Balaka have no link with Bozizé in the sense that Bozizé was not – at that point in time – backing his group’.¹⁷³³ The CAR Panel’s 2014 interim report indicated that according to a diplomatic source in Yaoundé, the Cameroonian territory had been used by François Bozizé and his supporters to prepare the offensive on Bangui.¹⁷³⁴ It continued that before being asked to leave Cameroon, François Bozizé ‘was actively pursuing his objective of “restoring the constitutional order” using various channels including propaganda by some organisations led by his supporters’.¹⁷³⁵
807. D30-4914 heard of meetings of military leaders in Yaoundé, Kevin Kpefio told him he took part in one of these meetings without saying who else was there.¹⁷³⁶ D30-4914 heard of the ‘Cité du Golfe’ but never went there.¹⁷³⁷ D30-4914 never heard of money being distributed from Yaoundé; Yaoundé is a big city where the Cameroonian head of state lives and people did not risk such matters for fear of being arrested by the Cameroonian authorities.¹⁷³⁸

808. P-2673 explained that Bernard Mokom joined Mr Ngaïssona in October 2013 at the Golf residence in Yaoundé, where they shared the same house until Mokom father, Fono Davy, an aide-de-camp of Mr Ngaïssona, and the younger brother of Colonel Wapounaba went to Bangui, with Mr Ngaïssona.¹⁷³⁹ P-2673 did not see Mr Ngaïssona at the Golf residence.¹⁷⁴⁰ P-2673 heard about Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom living together from Fono Davy who guaranteed the security of Mr Ngaïssona at the Golf residence, and also from Kevin Kpefio, Achille, and Martial.¹⁷⁴¹ P-2673 was told that Mr Ngaïssona was at his home in Douala and when in Yaoundé, lived in the residence in which the former president had resided.¹⁷⁴² When François Bozizé left Yaoundé, his former aide-de-camp Vincent Wapounaba looked after the residence and Mr Ngaïssona went to live there, as did Mokom father.¹⁷⁴³ According to P-2673, when Mr Ngaïssona left for Douala or elsewhere for a few days for business, Mokom returned to where he lived in his Yaoundé neighbourhood, but towards the end of 2013 Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father lived together at the residence and neither left without the other.¹⁷⁴⁴ Wapounaba stayed at the residence with the cook Sosthène.¹⁷⁴⁵ P-2673 did not know if Mr Ngaïssona visited the residence while François Bozizé was still living there.¹⁷⁴⁶
809. The Chamber notes in this regard that it has been suggested that Mr Ngaïssona lived in Douala with his family, rather than in Yaoundé. In the Chamber's view, the evidence of P-2673 already provides the more nuanced perspective to this suggestion which is also borne out by the evidence: while Mr Ngaïssona's family lived in Douala, Mr Ngaïssona himself clearly stayed in different places at different times, including both Yaoundé and Douala, while also travelling for various purposes, including to the border area and to Paris, as further discussed below. Further, the Chamber notes in this regard that the evidence of P-2673 on

Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom and also Wapounaba and Sosthène staying in one residence is supported by the information given by Alfred Legrand Ngaya outlined above, who testified to visiting Mr Ngaïssona, being picked up by Bernard Mokom for this purpose, and in the end having dinner with Mr Ngaïssona, Sosthène and also others.

810. Further in this context, the Chamber considers to be unreliable P-1847's denial of Mr Ngaïssona ever having stayed at the Golf residence, or Mr Ngaïssona meeting François Bozizé there while the latter still lived at this residence. The witness's answers in court on these matters were directly contradictory to the information in his prior recorded testimony,¹⁷⁴⁷ with the witness providing deflective and evasive answers when asked about such contradictions.¹⁷⁴⁸
811. At the same time, what the witness did maintain in court was telling: P-1847 stated that Levy Yakété participated in meetings at the Golf residence and told P-1847, who was in the same building, about them afterwards, having been twice to meetings with Kokaté, Wapounaba, Bernard Mokom and later David Banga.¹⁷⁴⁹ P-1847 confirmed the purpose was the same, namely François Bozizé's return to power; they were asked to take up contact with people at Bossangoa, Bernard Mokom was responsible for contacting the Anti-Balaka in Bossangoa and at the frontier with Cameroon, and others in the CAR.¹⁷⁵⁰
812. In a similar vein, the Chamber considers that Didier Ouebio, who stated to have been living at the Golf residence for several months,¹⁷⁵¹ was clearly trying to avoid providing fully truthful information. While he testified that Bozizé mainly stayed at this residence and received visitors there, but never organised meeting,¹⁷⁵² he also stated that 'during meetings', he would always play cards,¹⁷⁵³ and that he would do so in the back and thus not know who would enter the residence into the lounge.¹⁷⁵⁴ In the Chamber's view, Didier Ouebio's evidence as to which visitors would have come to the residence, and how often, thus bears little value.¹⁷⁵⁵ Similarly, and on the basis of the above, the Chamber attaches little value to the witness's suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona never lived at the Golf for any period of time,¹⁷⁵⁶ or that he would have never seen Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom together,¹⁷⁵⁷ especially since he also claimed 'not remembering' if Bernard Mokom lived at the Golf,¹⁷⁵⁸ and then seemed to suggest that he visited more than once.¹⁷⁵⁹ In the same vein, the witness's generalised claims of 'never seeing' Juvenal Ngouakossi/Kombo, Steve Yambété, Aime Vincent Bozizé, Lamkague, Olivier Koudemon, Colonel Mboya, Semdiro or Didier Danboy at the Golf had no impact on the Chamber's determinations.¹⁷⁶⁰ Neither did his statements that he did not hear of soldiers receiving money from Mr Ngaïssona or not know how Mr Ngaïssona and/or Bernard Mokom would have given money to soldiers he never saw there.¹⁷⁶¹ Given the situation at the time and the overwhelming evidence on record according to which CAR nationals in exile in particular in Cameroon and Zongo were particular concerned about receiving news from their home country, D30-4769's claim that all they would do was playing cards and never discussed the situation in the CAR is equally not credible.¹⁷⁶² The Chamber further does not consider credible the witness's explanations as regards his exchanges with various individuals on Facebook, such as that an unambiguous exchange with Claude Behoundez in February 2014 would have related to their card games,¹⁷⁶³ or that his exchanges with Pedro Barroso, that clearly concerned securing military and material support to assist François Bozizé's efforts to return to power, would not have been based on the witness's discussion with François Bozizé and knowledge of his efforts but merely voicing his opinion.¹⁷⁶⁴ In this context, the Chamber also considers not credible the witness's explanations on exchanges he had with other individuals.¹⁷⁶⁵

ii. Activities in Douala

813. While activities took place in Yaoundé, individuals of interest to the case, who were in Douala at the time, did not remain passive. The evidence suggests that Mr Ngaïssona also rented living spaces in Douala that were used by his family in particular, and by him on occasion when present in Douala.

814. P-1719, who joined the Anti-Balaka in Garam-Boulai later, was in Douala himself and stayed there for two or three months.¹⁷⁶⁶ P-1719 recalled meeting senior officers of the army there and noting that they knew each other and shared information about what happened in the country.¹⁷⁶⁷ P-1719 said that, at that period, engaging in an armed struggle was not an option for them; there was an officer called Sylvain, who rented a house in Douala and if there were problems with money, he would intervene and provide assistance to others; P-1719 visited another officer who had been a member of the presidential security because his wife prepared food for them.¹⁷⁶⁸ P-1719 recalled that Sylvain Orofei was lieutenant at the time and there was also commander Ngaya Anatole; and there were other subordinate officers, soldiers, civilians who came to know each other in Cameroon.¹⁷⁶⁹ P-1719 heard – but he did not see, did not attend – that there were meetings in the area of Akwa and in Yaoundé.¹⁷⁷⁰ In the evenings, some of those from the CAR would meet at a station to exchange information, and P-1719 heard that a meeting was held in Douala, but he did not know what happened; at one point P-1719 called Bienvenu Paradis Gbadora¹⁷⁷¹ because he was in Douala, and asked for details, but he told him ‘there’s nothing else to do’ and they needed to wait and see what would happen, asking P-1719 to be patient because at that time, they did not share extremely sensitive information.¹⁷⁷²
815. P-1719 testified that many people from the CAR were in Douala and shared information, and Mohi, one of the football players on the CAR national team, had the telephone number of Mr Ngaïssona who was the president of the CAR football league, and they were like his children.¹⁷⁷³ He said that there were several transactions, ‘the leader’ sent him money regularly, which meant that there was regular communication between them; so they shared the information amongst them as people from the CAR who were in Douala.¹⁷⁷⁴ P-1719 did not know how Mohi managed to earn a living, but he was in contact with his ‘president of the federation’ and according to his own words had received money from Mr Ngaïssona to make ends meet.¹⁷⁷⁵ P-1719 did not know where Mohi was living, but they regularly met at the Total station.¹⁷⁷⁶ One morning in Douala, while meeting with nine others, P-1719 was called by Mohi, member of the CAR national football team, who said that Mr Ngaïssona was calling upon all people of the CAR in Cameroon to go back home because they had to rise up in resolve.¹⁷⁷⁷ Tensions were running high, serious things were happening, and P-1719 was worried for his family in the CAR, so he told Mohi to give him the phone number of the authority and P-1719 called him using his telephone, saying he wanted to meet with him, the superior, and he said that he was waiting for them.¹⁷⁷⁸

816. P-1719 was in regular contact with Olivier Gbangouma or Olivier Koudemon; he had his number when they met in Bertoua.¹⁷⁷⁹ P-1719 further exchanged with user name ‘Levi Yakété’ on Facebook, not necessarily with the firm intention of leading an armed action, but making him understand that there were many compatriots with P-1719 ‘ready to join the movement’, prepared to participate.¹⁷⁸⁰ P-1719 stated they did not yet have any intentions of military operations before he went to Yaoundé at the end of November 2013.¹⁷⁸¹ According to P-1719, he spoke to Levy Yakété because he was the youth president and there was a way to peacefully carry out the fight.¹⁷⁸² P-1719 did ask for money for transport, but because they had a few problems while still in Cameroon, not for the purpose of going to fight in the country, and when they were exchanging, they did not have a plan to go to the border.¹⁷⁸³

817. P-2673 went to Cameroon in April 2013 and was put up in Douala.¹⁷⁸⁴ Initially while in Douala, P-2673 received information from a former soldier called Bienvenu Gbadora, also spelled Gbodora, who received calls and passed on information.¹⁷⁸⁵ P-2673 also went to Yaoundé but then returned to Douala, where he stayed for three months.¹⁷⁸⁶ Guerson, who used to be the head of security for François Bozizé's second wife, was another individual in Yaoundé whom P-2673 got to know through Kevin Kpefio and Rod Larry Martial, and who helped P-2673 out with money for food.¹⁷⁸⁷ Jean Alesco Bouragoro, a police commissioner of the same ethnicity as Mr Ngaïssona and François Bozizé, was also in Douala at the time.¹⁷⁸⁸

The Chamber recalls in this regard that the witness spoke of meeting Mohi in person, as well as its general position that the absence of CDR does not, by itself, refute a witness’s testimony as to the existence of contacts (see paragraph 190 above).

818. P-2673 explained that in October 2013, he was in Yaoundé when Dazoumi Yalo, who was in Douala with his brother Sani Yalo, called him and told him about someone who could contact him about the transfer of money the next day.¹⁷⁸⁹ On Dazoumi's question about how many they were, P-2673 lied, saying 26 FACA were willing to go to the border, and Dazoumi said P-2673 would get his share.¹⁷⁹⁰ Meckassoua (former president of the assembly) was in France at the time and was supposed to be transferring the money so they would go to Garam Boulai at the border.¹⁷⁹¹ P-2673 called a military man called Larme who told him that he and several others had received money from Dazoumi Yalo, and P-2673 told him they should not go to fight, but Larme told Dazoumi that P-2673 had said the soldiers should not to go Garam Boulai, and because of this, Dazoumi never rang P-2673 back and did not pick up when P-2673 tried to call.¹⁷⁹² According to P-2673, he met Dazoumi Yalo, who was a liberator, for the first time in Douala.¹⁷⁹³ Sometimes Dazoumi was with Aaron Ouilibona.¹⁷⁹⁴ P-2673 did not see Sani Yalo while in Douala.¹⁷⁹⁵

819. P-2673 testified that Achille told him that Gbangouma, Fleury Pabandji, Lamkague, Jean Alesco had meetings with Dazoumi and Sani Yalo in Douala, and they called Achille and Ndale to come from Bertoua for the meetings.¹⁷⁹⁶ P-2673 thought the meetings began in June or July 2013, when P-2673 was still in Douala; they also went to Yaoundé to meet Abdoulaye Miskine.¹⁷⁹⁷ Fleury Pabandji remained in Cameroon until Djotodia stepped down, he was initially in Douala and then went to Garam-Boulai.¹⁷⁹⁸ Fleury Pabandji and Dazoumi told P-2673 that Meckassoua was their chief, he financed their work.¹⁷⁹⁹ Ndale had elements in Bouar, and Sani and Dazoumi Yalo wanted to convince him to allow them to finance his group, to ‘defeat D[jotodia]’.¹⁸⁰⁰ The little brother of Dazoumi and Sani Yalo told P-2673 that he was going to France, and Fleury Pabandji and Achille told P-2673 that he was to collect money from Meckassoua, but he never came back.¹⁸⁰¹ According to P-2673, Dazoumi and Sani Yalo sent Gbangouma, Fleury Pabandji and Lamkague to Garam-Boulai to look after the Anti-Balaka, meaning they were sent to establish contact and see if Meckassoua could finance them, after the Bouar attack – Gbangouma and Lamkague were arrested, so they did not finish their ‘mission’.¹⁸⁰² According to P-2673, Gbangouma and Mr Ngaïssona did not get on because Gbangouma was on the side of Dazoumi, Sani Yalo and Meckassoua, and Mr Ngaïssona on the side of François Bozizé – in 2013, Meckassoua was no longer on Bozizé’s side.¹⁸⁰³ P-2673 also heard that Dazoumi and Sani Yalo also did not get on with Mr Ngaïssona.¹⁸⁰⁴ According to P-2673, the goal of Dazoumi and Sani Yalo, Meckassoua and their group was to get power and install Meckassoua as president, they promised Gbangouma he would become general.¹⁸⁰⁵

820. P-1847 went to Douala from time to time, but was based in Yaoundé.¹⁸⁰⁶ According to the witness, Koyagbéle was in South Africa when the events occurred and then went to Douala with Kité, he was gathering compatriots and speaking to them in his hotel in Douala.¹⁸⁰⁷ Koyagbéle also tried to organise the revolution against the Seleka at the time.¹⁸⁰⁸ Danzoumi Yalo also called them so that they could talk about how they could organise themselves to oppose the Seleka; P-1847 was in Yaoundé, but they passed on to Douala.¹⁸⁰⁹
821. The Chamber considers not credible the evidence of D30-4756 who stated that she lived at Mr Ngaïssona's residence in Deido, Douala, from September through October 2013, time during which Mr Ngaïssona would have been there daily, not travelling.¹⁸¹⁰ It is clear from the evidence on record that Mr Ngaïssona travelled extensively during this period, including for official FIFA business,¹⁸¹¹ and did not stay in Douala for prolonged periods of time. Similarly, and bearing in mind the credibility assessment of Brice Stanislas Mohi,¹⁸¹² the Chamber considers the information provided by this witness inapt to put into doubt the evidence of other witnesses as outlined above.
822. D30-4848 testified that Mr Ngaïssona did not live at his family's residence in Deido when D30-4848 went there after Mr Ngaïssona's sister died.¹⁸¹³ D30-4848 confirmed that Mr Ngaïssona was responsible for 'a large group of people'.¹⁸¹⁴ D30-4848 saw Mr Ngaïssona when CAR was playing against South Africa in Yaoundé; there was a strong presence of Central African people living in Douala, Yaoundé and everywhere else in Cameroon.¹⁸¹⁵ According to D30-4848, he did not see Mr Ngaïssona again until later in Bangui, was not in phone contact with him while in Cameroon, did not receive any request of Mr Ngaïssona to take part in the armed resistance of the Anti-Balaka, and never heard or experienced Mr Ngaïssona giving orders to organise the 5 December 2013 attack, or orders to FACA to organise to destabilise the Seleka.¹⁸¹⁶ D30-4848 also did not see François Bozizé while in Cameroon; he heard talk about him being in Yaoundé, like any other person from the CAR living there; D30-4848 also did not see Francis Bozizé.¹⁸¹⁷ According to D30-4848, the Seleka tried to have the CAR soldiers in Cameroon repatriated, they travelled to Yaoundé, Bertoua, Douala; the witness spoke to say that the authorities should not agree to release them because back in the country they would be in constant danger, they refused to return.¹⁸¹⁸ The Chamber considers the witness's generalised and blanket denials to be not credible overall and, in any event, besides the point. D30-4848 denying that he would have seen Mr Ngaïssona or François Bozizé while he was in Cameroon is irrelevant insofar as the Chamber has not relied on the press article in question which would have mentioned the witness's own presence at a meeting at the embassy in Yaoundé. Further, and in light of other evidence as discussed, further blanket denials do not negate, by themselves, that such events took place.

iii. Mr Ngaïssona's financing and coordination activities

823. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that there is no credible evidence that Mr Ngaïssona travelled to the border area to meet, support and encourage elements from Bertoua, 'Garoua-Boulai' and Bouar.¹⁸¹⁹ It also argues that Mr Ngaïssona did not assist youth in Bangui or Anti-Balaka and FACA in Zongo.¹⁸²⁰
824. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the Prosecution failed to prove that Mr Ngaïssona financed the Anti-Balaka for the commission of the charged crimes since (i) Mr Ngaïssona struggled financially while in Cameroon; (ii) Mr Ngaïssona did not provide equipment and transportation prior to 5 December 2013; and (iii) Mr Ngaïssona did not provide money, weapons, ammunitions or any other material.¹⁸²¹

825. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that the Prosecution failed to prove that Mr Ngaïssona issued military instructions to Anti-Balaka members since there is insufficient evidence to show that (i) Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom summoned Ngaikosset so he could return to the CAR to carry out attacks; (ii) Mr Ngaïssona instructed the Anti-Balaka to attack Bouar and Beloko in October 2013; (iii) Mr Ngaïssona provided military instructions in November 2013; (iv) Mr Ngaïssona provided instructions to the Anti-Balaka in the CAR regarding attacks, including the Bangui Attack.¹⁸²²

826. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that Mr Ngaïssona did not liaise or coordinate with François Bozizé, Maxime Mokom, Mr Yekatom or Anti-Balaka leaders in Bossangoa before 5 December 2013.¹⁸²³

827. On the basis of the evidence as further discussed below, the Chamber concludes that (i) Mr Ngaïssona provided financial assistance to some individuals that were to assist the efforts to bring François Bozizé back to power; (ii) Mr Ngaïssona liaised with various individuals with a view to organising and coordinating their steps to be taken; and, in this context, (iii) Mr Ngaïssona did travel to the border area between Cameroon and the CAR to liaise with groups which were to assist the efforts to bring François Bozizé back to power. The Chamber will address further below the question of whether Mr Ngaïssona was involved in issuing instructions in the context of attacks carried out by Anti-Balaka groups.¹⁸²⁴

Financial contributions

828. The Chamber has received overwhelming evidence, as further outlined below, on Mr Ngaïssona providing financial assistance to individuals willing or meant to assist the efforts in bringing François Bozizé back to power already while still in Cameroon, both before and after the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013. The evidence concerning

Mr Ngaïssona providing financial means following his return to Bangui in January 2014 is discussed further below.¹⁸²⁵

829. P-1719 described how, once contact was established through Mohi in Douala, they took a vehicle from a fellow citizen to get to Yaoundé.¹⁸²⁶ When P-1719 told Mr Ngaïssona that they were on their way, he told them to get there early because he was intending to travel; 17 of them went to Yaoundé, they drove to the place where Mr Ngaïssona was living at the Cité Golf; they called and he asked them to come back the next morning.¹⁸²⁷ They met with Bernard Mokom who said that there was a group which had come before them and gave them some instructions; then Mr Ngaïssona came out, greeted them from the balcony and went back inside; a bit later, Bernard Mokom came out with money in his hands, saying, ‘My children, each one of you is to get [...] 15,000 CFA, just to pay for the transportation from Yaoundé to Garam Boulaye’.¹⁸²⁸ Bernard Mokom told them that the materiel was already at the border, and gave them telephone numbers, including the number of Sabe, a gendarme and commander of the Kounde brigade at the time, at the border between the CAR and Cameroon, of Azou Mandi called ‘Azou’, a scout, who would ensure liaison between the group.¹⁸²⁹ Bernard Mokom made them understand that some of their brothers had preceded them and would arrive a little later at the border; at the border, P-1719 noticed that other people joined from Yaoundé.¹⁸³⁰ Bernard Mokom did not talk about any compensation at the time, no promise was made, their sole motivation was to return to their country and after his briefing, they wanted to ‘chase the armed mercenaries in their country’ so they could return, he encouraged them to mobilise themselves, to mobilise all their forces to return to their country.¹⁸³¹

830. P-1719 said that he only saw Mr Ngaïssona this once in Yaoundé and not again until in Bangui; they did not speak, Mr Ngaïssona just made a sign with his hand.¹⁸³² He did not see

Mr Ngaïssona give money to Bernard Mokom.¹⁸³³ The day they arrived in Yaoundé, after their meeting with Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom, when they arrived at the border, there were some messages and direct instructions to the men who were trusted, but P-1719 did not receive instructions directly.¹⁸³⁴ The men who were in the close circles of these individuals were Rocca Mokom, ‘younger brother’ of Bernard Mokom, Sabe Elysé, Yambété Steve, Ouilibona Aron.¹⁸³⁵ P-1719 did not return to Yaoundé from there.¹⁸³⁶ P-1719 confirmed that he was received by the ‘authority’, Mr Ngaïssona at the end of November 2013.¹⁸³⁷ As regards Bangui, P-1719 said that they had not received the information about the attack on Bangui and stayed at the border; according to P-1719, the Beloko area was supposed to be the ‘objective’ of the team that was in Garam-Boulai; it was shortly thereafter, through Steve Yambété, that they received the programme for Bangui, scheduled for 5 in the afternoon to allow the Anti-Balaka who had come from other localities to ‘attack the various Seleka positions in the capital’.¹⁸³⁸ Kombo Juvenal and Steve Yambété shared this information.¹⁸³⁹ P-1719 confirmed that the financial contributions of Mr Ngaïssona concerned the end of November, beginning of December 2013, and that the funding did not stop at Yaoundé, it also extended to Bangui.¹⁸⁴⁰ Bearing in mind this witness’s evidence, as well as the evidence of P-2673 as outlined below, the Chamber concludes that the money given to P-1719 and his group by Bernard Mokom did, in fact, come from Mr Ngaïssona.

831. P-2673 testified that if one went to the Golf residence, one could get money from Mokom father, Mr Ngaïssona gave money to Mokom father who was in charge of giving it out, and reported back to Mr Ngaïssona afterwards.¹⁸⁴¹ P-2673 learned this from military colleagues who were amongst those going to the residence.¹⁸⁴² P-2673 was given money by Mokom father in the Hôtel Paris, where there was some relative of Bozizé.¹⁸⁴³ According to P-2673, Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom gave 50,000 CFA to each military man to go to Garam-Boulai, saying, ‘Go to G[aram-Boulai], and then cross the border and continue on to B[ouar], there are Anti-Balaka at B[ouar], join them there to fight the Seleka’.¹⁸⁴⁴ P-2673 stated further that it was not easy to live and find food, and their hope was that Kokaté would give money to Mr Ngaïssona who would then give it to Mokom father to distribute.¹⁸⁴⁵ In the end, P-2673 did not receive any money from Kokaté.¹⁸⁴⁶ Soldiers in Yaoundé told P-2673 about Mr Ngaïssona holding meetings in Yaoundé and distributing money, Grimari and Fono Davy told P-2673 that he encouraged them to keep faith and to be determined, that they should not be discouraged, they should be mobilised.¹⁸⁴⁷ P-2673 said that many wealthy Gbaya such as Marius Feiganazoui provided Mr Ngaïssona with the money to provide to the military men, Rod Larry Martial and Kevin Kpefio told him that Mokom father had told them that Feiganazoui had provided his share of the money.¹⁸⁴⁸ Mr Ngaïssona got money from other wealthy Gbaya, but P-2673 did not know their names.¹⁸⁴⁹ Fono Davy told him that important people like Nbyon, Baronte, Feiganazoui contributed financially to aid Mr Ngaïssona.¹⁸⁵⁰ Mr Ngaïssona was the ‘patron’, the boss as he was financing.¹⁸⁵¹

‘some white people’ who had sourced them in France or Belgium.¹⁸⁵³ Grimari was always with Mokom father and told him about the meetings with these white people, and Grimari also told P-2673 that Mokom father let Mr Ngaïssona know.¹⁸⁵⁴ P-2673 provided details on sourcing five Thurayas and 2,250,000 CFA from Armel Sayo, with Grimari informing Mokom father in P-2673’s presence about four Thurayas, and giving P-2673 one to keep.¹⁸⁵⁵ Grimari then took four Thurayas and all of the money to Mokom father who – as Grimari told P-2673 – gave all to Mr Ngaïssona, with Mr Ngaïssona in turn giving the order to Mokom father to distribute the Thurayas and the money.¹⁸⁵⁶ Grimari gave P-2673 his share of the money, 250,000 CFA.¹⁸⁵⁷ Mokom father distributed the rest of the money to FACA elements, 10,000 or 20,000 CFA each, saying it came from Mr Ngaïssona although it came from Sayo.¹⁸⁵⁸ Later, Grimari asked P-2673 for the Thuraya back, which P-2673 returned to him; P-2673 heard he sold it.¹⁸⁵⁹ According to P-2673, the four Thurayas were sent to the field, one to Bouar, to Didier Danboy.¹⁸⁶⁰ One of the other Thurayas was sent to Andjilo, one to Bossangoa, one to Gobere.¹⁸⁶¹ Fono, Grimari and Achille told P-2673 that these four Thurayas were sent.¹⁸⁶² A civilian Gbaya helped to transport the Thurayas to the field, as did the taxi-moto driver who took soldiers to Bouar.¹⁸⁶³ According to P-2673, the Thurayas were sent after the attack on Bouar.¹⁸⁶⁴

834. P-2673 testified that ‘Kambasseo’ told him that he, Hector Emtenu, Didier Danboy and Pessere had received money to go from Yaoundé to Garam Boulai from Mr Ngaïssona through Mokom father.¹⁸⁶⁵ Everybody in Bouar had their own phones; the chiefs let everyone know what Mokom father and Mr Ngaïssona said; when the FACA arrived in Bouar, P-

P-2673 also heard, he did not recall from who, that Mr Ngaïssona sent ammunition and a Thuraya to Andjilo in Bouca;¹⁸⁶⁸ it was indeed around the time of the attack.¹⁸⁶⁹ A soldier colleague named Clément Bama said that Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona promised to send him some Thurayas.¹⁸⁷⁰ P-2673 did not know if the ammunition problem was solved at the time.¹⁸⁷¹ Achille, a Gbaya from Bossangoa who fled to Bertoua and was 'part of Mr Ngaïssona's team',¹⁸⁷² told P-2673 that he had ammunition and arms hidden in the bush on their side.¹⁸⁷³

Mr Ngaïssona sent the money once every month; they would know that money was coming because Ladja would tell them after asking and Mr Ngaïssona would tell him when he sent out the money to pick it up.¹⁸⁷⁹ Mr Ngaïssona helped them only with money while they were in the bush; nobody from the group in Zongo helped them.¹⁸⁸⁰

837. Alfred Legrand Ngaya tried to dissuade the Anti-Balaka from behaving like the Seleka and towards the end of December 2013 or beginning of January 2014, began collecting money to stop them, as did other notables such as Feikere Seraphin Persone.¹⁸⁸¹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya once called Mr Ngaïssona to ask for a donation and he sent about 80,000 or 100,000 CFA, the witness told Mr Ngaïssona that he was giving the money to the Anti-Balaka and then gave it to Andjilo because he was a chief and could influence the other Anti-Balaka and hoped he would stop them from terrorising people, Alfred Legrand Ngaya did this about three times.¹⁸⁸² The witness explained to Andjilo that the money came from Mr Ngaïssona; Mr Ngaïssona was sufficiently well known in the country, just about everyone knew him; this was before Mr Ngaïssona's return to Bangui, but after the Anti-Balaka had entered Bangui, so around the end of December, early January.¹⁸⁸³
838. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli testified similarly that from time to time to help the young people form the provinces, Mr Ngaïssona sent money to Ngaya from Cameroon, Ngaya told the witness that he had received money from Mr Ngaïssona.¹⁸⁸⁴ Sometimes it was 200,000 or 300,000 CFA, the money was sent by Western Union or Express Union.¹⁸⁸⁵ The group in Cameroon decided that these people from the provinces should not be left alone; Ngaya distributed the money and called Andjilo, who had come from the provinces, giving him the money and telling him that it was from Mr Ngaïssona to assist them.¹⁸⁸⁶ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli was not aware of Mr Ngaïssona sending money to anyone else than Ngaya.¹⁸⁸⁷ To the witness's knowledge, this happened after 5 December 2013:¹⁸⁸⁸ Andjilo's Anti-Balaka elements were very aggressive and needed to be managed and taken care of, helped to be fed for them not to commit aggressions against the population,¹⁸⁸⁹ it was not designed to buy arms, but for food.¹⁸⁹⁰ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli put this provision of money to Andjilo, similarly to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, after the attack of 5 December 2013.¹⁸⁹¹

839. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli further stated that Mr Ngaïssona spent enormous amounts of money to manage the Anti-Balaka youth.¹⁸⁹² There was unqualifiable disorder within the Anti-Balaka and they (meaning Ngaya, Emotion, Dieudonné Ndomate and the witness) met to call on Mr Ngaïssona because he had financial assets and could help manage the youth; this was long before Mr Ngaïssona's return.¹⁸⁹³ Mr Ngaïssona sent money before the offensive of 5 December 2013.¹⁸⁹⁴ Emotion and quite a few others had crossed when the Seleka arrived and crossed back into the CAR, and when they were behind the hill they said there were problems, not much to eat, they had to have support, and the person in the best position to do that was Mr Ngaïssona, who was in Cameroon – he sent money to get food for the children, and they were kept from committing many stupid things.¹⁸⁹⁵ This was before the offensive on Bangui, and Jacob Mokpem-Bionli mentioned his visit to the Anti-Balaka behind the hill with the two French journalists.¹⁸⁹⁶ Mr Ngaïssona accepted to be the leader of the Anti-Balaka, therefore he accepted to put financial means at their disposal to manage them, meaning organising them to face the mercenaries.¹⁸⁹⁷ The Anti-Balaka had come in passes from the provinces in direction of Bangui, they were about 4000, and Jacob Mokpem-

Bionli told them that they had a saviour in the person of Mr Ngaïssona who would organise them.¹⁸⁹⁸

840. P-2232 testified that Maxime Mokom received money from Cameroon, in the name of ‘Mr Camerounais’, so P-2232 did not know who was sending the money; it was used to buy hunting ammunitions and medication as supplies for the men who were on the ground.¹⁸⁹⁹ P-2232 stated that the money received from Cameroon would enter Maxime Mokom’s hands and he was responsible for distributing it; he also used some of that money to procure ammunition and medicines to send to the front; he also bought food for the combatants.¹⁹⁰⁰ Maxime Mokom told P-2232 that he had mortgaged his house and the individual who was in charge of the armoury was the one who provided the supplies.¹⁹⁰¹ It is with the money that was received from Cameroon that the attack of 5 December was prepared.¹⁹⁰² The money was transferred via Western Union.¹⁹⁰³ P-2232 explained that it was not possible to send large amounts of money; sometimes it was one million CFA, sometimes 1.5 million; sometimes the money came through Western Union and sometimes it was individuals who brought the money; they used all possible means to send money.¹⁹⁰⁴ The greatest amount they received was 2 million, later they received 500,000 or 1 million; when a huge amount was sent, even the Western Union office would not be able to have up to 5 million to pay out.¹⁹⁰⁵ Maxime Mokom collected the money, it was sent in his name, and sometimes in Claude’s name.¹⁹⁰⁶ Sometimes Maxime Mokom sent his wife who went to Bangui, collected money and brought it back.¹⁹⁰⁷ To P-2232’s knowledge, she collected the money from Ecobank, but he did not know the source of the money.¹⁹⁰⁸

841. P-2841 stated that Prince was in contact with Maxime Mokom before this contact with ‘Vieux M[okom]’; he once received 300,000-400,000 CFA via Maxime Mokom in DRC, some time between April and June 2013, for purposes of mobilising the youth and organising a demonstration of attack in Bangui on the day Michel Djotodia was sworn in; it was sent via Maxime Mokom to a young man working at Ecobank.¹⁹⁰⁹ P-2841 did not know who gave the money to Maxime Mokom.¹⁹¹⁰ P-2841 went with Prince to get the money from the Ecobank youth.¹⁹¹¹ P-2841 did not know what Prince did with this money, but he was supposed to mobilise people, provide transport, motorbikes, water, organise a demonstration at the airport and assembly.¹⁹¹² Once these people were mobilised, the civilians were supposed to stage a sit-in and the military, organised by Ngremangou, were meant to meet at the 100 Logements at PK15, towards the northern exit of Bangui, with their weapons, with the plan that they would be given ammunition by Ngremangou to disrupt the ceremony and shoot near the National Assembly; in the end, this did not take place as the Seleka got wind of the plan and organised a large-scale looting in Boy-Rabe at the same time.¹⁹¹³ After this, Prince dealt directly with Joel Yangongo more than with Maxime Mokom; Joel Yangongo was in contact with Maxime Mokom, Claude Ngaikosset and others in DRC, maybe even Kokaté; Yangongo bought a printer and was in charge, with Prince, of designing and distributing leaflets in Bangui; P-2841 helped with this; previously, such leaflets had been coming from the DRC.¹⁹¹⁴ P-2841 did not know if Prince received money directly from Mr Ngaïssona; he was more in direct contact with Maxime Mokom.¹⁹¹⁵

842. P-1847 testified that Mokom was transferring funds, ‘Mokom son’ on the other side bought hunting ammunition which he would send to a woman who would take it to Bossangoa for preparations to take place.¹⁹¹⁶ P-1847 heard from Dedane, ComZone of the Anti-Balaka in Bossangoa, that Maxime Mokom bought artisanal cartridges to supply the Anti-Balaka that came from Bossangoa and went towards the outskirts of Bangui.¹⁹¹⁷ P-1847 did not see Mr Ngaïssona ‘do any actions’ in Yaoundé, he saw him once or twice with Achille.¹⁹¹⁸ P-

1847's cousin said Mr Ngaïssona had gone to Bertoua while he was in Douala; he talked about Bernard Mokom who provided money and ammunition in Garam-Boulai so actions could be taken on the ground.¹⁹¹⁹

843. The Chamber notes in this regard that the question of financial assistance to armed groups by Mr Ngaïssona was one of the topics regarding which P-1847 reverted from his prior recorded testimony during his live testimony. The Chamber recalls its decision to introduce this witness's evidence pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules in this regard, finding that the witness failed to give evidence with respect to material aspects included in his prior recorded testimony, this topic being one, and in this was materially influenced by improper interference.¹⁹²⁰ The Chamber also specifically recalls its observation of an obvious change in the attitude of the witness when comparing his appearance on the first and second day of testimony, with the second day being the day on which he was asked more detailed questions in particular about Mr Ngaïssona.¹⁹²¹

844. P-1847 stated, in his prior recorded testimony, that Achille Godonam was in charge of taking money from Mr Ngaïssona for the preparation of attacks, with P-1847 seeing him three or four times getting money from Mr Ngaïssona at the residence of François Bozizé at the Cité Golf.¹⁹²² Further in his prior recorded testimony, P-1847 stated that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom sometimes executed money transfers to the Anti-Balaka in the CAR through Express Unions and intermediaries,¹⁹²³ and that it was in the context of these money transfers that Olivier Koudemon and Lieutenant Lamkague were arrested at the border towards Bertoua.¹⁹²⁴

845. P-1847 further explained that Bernard Mokom used a woman, while Mr Ngaïssona used his younger brother Frédéric Ngaïssona a lot to make transfers to Garam-Boulai and also Bangui, received by the Anti-Balaka and FACA.¹⁹²⁵ In addition, P-1847 heard from Dedane that he received fund transfers from Maxime Mokom in DRC or Bernard Mokom in

Cameroon¹⁹²⁶ and that he also talked about money received from Mr Ngaïssona when the latter travelled from Douala through Bertoua, before Mr Ngaïssona went to the Golf residence.¹⁹²⁷ P-1847 stated that Pacom Azounou also told him that he received money from Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom for purposes of perpetrating attacks through different means, either intermediaries who physically transported the money or Express Union.¹⁹²⁸

846. Bearing in mind the above, the Chamber does not consider credible, and therefore discards, the witness's insistence in court that he would have corrected parts of his statement in relation to Mr Ngaïssona or that any mention of him in relation to the transfer of money would have been a 'mistake' as he would not have seen Mr Ngaïssona giving money to Achille Godonom or making transfers, and that only Bernard Mokom and Fred Serefio would have done transfers, with Maxime Mokom sourcing ammunition.¹⁹²⁹ The Chamber considers of further note in this context that the witness did not deny that Mr Ngaïssona travelled between Douala and Bertoua, also going to the base in the latter location.¹⁹³⁰ Therefore, the Chamber has relied on P-1847's prior recorded testimony as outlined above, and in the context of other evidence before it.

847. Joachim Kokaté testified that Mr Ngaïssona told him during some telephone conversations that he was financing the movement, giving a concrete example of what various Anti-Balaka leaders were saying to the transitional head of state when they met at the presidency.¹⁹³¹ Joachim Kokaté and Mr Ngaïssona did not talk about finance; Mr Ngaïssona organised Anti-Balaka in the field, met them and they reported to him; in the statements in Bangui, Mr Ngaïssona said himself that he had spent a lot for the Anti-Balaka, which he had helped finance.¹⁹³² During a meeting in Bangui at the residence of the president, the Anti-Balaka who were present said that they were funded by Mr Ngaïssona, that he gave them funds to organise for the events which took place on 5 December 2013.¹⁹³³ The participants unanimously all said that their leader was Mr Ngaïssona, that he was the one who took care of them, who gave them food, who financed, organised them – asked by the president whether she should deal with him exclusively, they unanimously said yes.¹⁹³⁴ According to Joachim Kokaté, the participants also said that Kokaté was not an Anti-Balaka leader, but a member like everyone else.¹⁹³⁵ The meeting was attended by Mr Yekatom, Yakouzou, Konaté, Ngremangou, Léopold Bara.¹⁹³⁶ Joachim Kokaté thought Caroline Deboulet was also there,¹⁹³⁷ but he did not remember clearly if Gilbert Kamezolari was at that particular meeting.¹⁹³⁸

848. In addition to the above, and as further outlined below, other witnesses received more indirect information on the financial contributions made by Mr Ngaïssona and others.
849. Nicolas Tiangaye received information according to which Bozizé sent money to Mr Ngaïssona to distribute to the Anti-Balaka.¹⁹³⁹ According to Nicolas Tiangaye, going by the Anti-Balaka offensive of 5 December 2013 and from the information he received, they did not have modern weapons, they had a few traditional weapons which they manufactured themselves, hunting guns, bows and arrows; they did not have the military logistic support in the face of the Seleka war machine.¹⁹⁴⁰
850. P-0876 stated that ‘the sun’ was François Bozizé and his sons as well as the entire Bozizé family were only intermediaries, that intervened financially, sending money through Western Union to Zongo, to Maxime Mokom who supported the elements on the ground, as he explained himself to P-0876.¹⁹⁴¹ P-0876 heard through intermediaries that they received money to buy weapons, and that the money came from Zongo, and P-0876 knew this was

Maxime Mokom.¹⁹⁴² P-0876 stated Mr Ngaïssona was one of the ‘financiers’ of the Anti-Balaka because throughout his efforts up to N’Djamena, P-0876 had not heard of him, but once Djotodia left and P-0876 returned and wanted to report to the people at ‘Gnawara’, he saw Mr Ngaïssona holding a meeting at Bozizé’s church and from his arrival, things changed radically.¹⁹⁴³ P-0876 could not say through whom Mr Ngaïssona financed.¹⁹⁴⁴ P-0876 stated that the Anti-Balaka told him weapons were supposed to come from somewhere, Dazoumi Yalo gave money to Jean-Marie Kengoa for them to buy ammunition and weapons, but there were problems because Kengoa was accused of not having given all the money, so there were problems between Kamezolaï, Rombho and Kengoa and Rombho said he would kill him if he returned to the base.¹⁹⁴⁵ P-0876 was twice approached for, and provided, financial assistance for the burial of one or two elements and medical care of another.¹⁹⁴⁶

851. Kasper Agger testified that from speaking to diamond traders for example in Boda, he heard that it was not Anti-Balaka as such that were digging for the diamonds, but they would be in control of the diamond area; another important revenue stream for both Anti-Balaka and Seleka was also road taxation, roadblocks.¹⁹⁴⁷ Mr Ngaïssona mentioned several times during his interview with Kasper Agger¹⁹⁴⁸ that he was not receiving any support from Bozizé.¹⁹⁴⁹ In 2015, Maxime Mokom told the witness that Bozizé was sending money to ComZones, ‘so to the FACA cluster’.¹⁹⁵⁰ A local journalist whom the witness interviewed in 2015¹⁹⁵¹ said that Anti-Balaka were afraid of registering their names with Mr Ngaïssona for badges and formal membership in the Anti-Balaka because they feared being accused of crimes by the ICC, that Bozizé used to send money to Mr Ngaïssona through Gaya Alfred and that he was in possession of recordings of the French giving money to Wenezoui; he also mentioned Basil Dika and Rambo, but Kasper Agger did not recall further details.¹⁹⁵² Financing by Bozizé was then also only mentioned as ‘alleged’ funding source in the witness’s report.¹⁹⁵³ As for the other points, he had multiple sources.¹⁹⁵⁴

852. The Chamber now turns to the provision of weapons.

853. P-2269 stated that they got some weapons from the fights with the Seleka.¹⁹⁵⁵ P-2269 confirmed he transported weapons from Bangui to Dedane in Bossangoa, Mokom asked them to do so.¹⁹⁵⁶ P-2269 was in Gobere at the time and had to go to Bangui to get the weapons, nine AK-47s, one DKM and two boxes of AK-47 ammunition.¹⁹⁵⁷ Some men hid their weapons when the Seleka took power; they were hidden at the farm of Hasan, who P-2269 met at lycée Boganda and took the weapons.¹⁹⁵⁸ P-2269 took the weapons back to Dedane and they divided the weapons and ammunition.¹⁹⁵⁹ After dropping the weapons in Bossangoa, P-2269 went back to Gobere.¹⁹⁶⁰ This was before the attack in Bangui.¹⁹⁶¹

854. P-0306 testified that they recuperated weapons from Seleka elements, they did not have any ammunition except for what they recovered from the Seleka they killed, only once they got to Bangui, they received ammunitions and weapons from soldiers, and their ‘authority’ provided help by way of ammunitions for the work.¹⁹⁶² They did not have funding or provision of weapons at PK110.¹⁹⁶³ The authority promised that once they arrived in Bangui a plane would provide them with ammunition, but once there, they did not see the cargo with

855. Alfred Legrand Ngaya was not aware that anyone provided weapons or money to the Anti-Balaka.¹⁹⁶⁵ The witness did not know if any weapons were issued to new recruits joining the Anti-Balaka.¹⁹⁶⁶ The FACA elements in the Anti-Balaka had their own firearms.¹⁹⁶⁷ According to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, Mr Ngaïssona supported the Anti-Balaka on his return with his own money to dissuade them, in the context of working towards creating conditions for peace, that was how he became their representative.¹⁹⁶⁸ Asked whether he knew of Mr Ngaïssona provided money for fighting, weapons or ammunition, for the purpose of attacking the Muslim population, Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated ‘this does not resemble Mr Ngaïssona’.¹⁹⁶⁹
856. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli further stated that about 80% of the weapons the Anti-Balaka had were handmade, they took hunting ammunition and formed them into new bullets, while modern weapons were taken from the Seleka during attacks.¹⁹⁷⁰ The ‘resistance’ had a strategy to acquire weapons, by attacking and neutralising the Seleka, for example in Boy-Rabe, there was an ambush by the youth against the Seleka, and the same strategy was applied in other areas.¹⁹⁷¹ The Anti-Balaka from the provinces set up checkpoints in all villages which they used to attack the Seleka and take their weapons.¹⁹⁷² Andjilo was the pioneer of this strategy and it started in Bouca; Andjilo went as far as acquiring weapons which had been brought by the Seleka from Chad, he got a heavy weapon which was transported on a 4x4 vehicle.¹⁹⁷³ These weapons were in the hands of the fighters, they were not kept in a specific location; Lt Herve was a specialist in heavy weapons and had some weapons.¹⁹⁷⁴ The more than 4,000 fighters that Jacob Mokpem-Bionli saw on the hill behind

Boy-Rabe were armed with sticks, machetes and guns, but not all of them had weapons.¹⁹⁷⁵ Part of the ammunition, calibre 12 rifle ammunition, came from Zongo where it was easy to buy.¹⁹⁷⁶ Everyone at their level organised with their means to acquire ammunition.¹⁹⁷⁷ The witness himself bought some ammunition; all one needed to do was go to the banks of the river and people would come over with the ammunition.¹⁹⁷⁸ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that when Mr Ngaïssona sent money through Ngaya, it was to provide food for ‘the children’ who did not have anything to eat and because of hunger ‘made these types of mistakes’.¹⁹⁷⁹ Mr Ngaïssona never asked Jacob Mokpem-Bionli to buy ammunition on behalf of the national coordination.¹⁹⁸⁰

857. P-2232 testified about the period before 5 December 2013 that they did not have any real military equipment in the beginning, only hunting weapons, while Maxime Mokom provided ammunition, and they recovered war weapons when winning¹⁹⁸¹ or from searches in Seleka-owned houses.¹⁹⁸² In Bangui, people could purchase ammunition, there was a woman who provided ammunition, and they sent an emissary who then took it to the front.¹⁹⁸³ P-2232 also gave the example of sending ammunition to someone in Bozoum who would send the ammunition to Yaloké in a parcel, which would be taken to Bossangoa, and the person in Yaloké could deliver the parcel by motorbike.¹⁹⁸⁴ ComZones on the ground also used the proceeds from cows and other war benefits to buy ammunition, which they later in Bangui claimed to be reimbursed for.¹⁹⁸⁵

858. P-2841 stated that he knew that Bernard Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona were starting to organise the Anti-Balaka and also the military but at that point, it was a matter of wait and see.¹⁹⁸⁶

Prince told P-2841 that ‘Vieux M[okom]’ had been in contact with him regarding provision of supplies; P-2841 was doubtful this would happen since Mr Ngaïssona had previously promised to supply items to Maxime Mokom and in the end it did not happen.¹⁹⁸⁷ P-2841 did not know what happened in the end.¹⁹⁸⁸ He did not know if these supplies were what were talked about in the email sent from Dongombe to Mr Ngaïssona.¹⁹⁸⁹

859. The CAR Panel concluded, from meetings with militiamen and inspections of arms and ammunition seized from Anti-Balaka groups, that Anti-Balaka combatants used mainly small arms already in circulation in the CAR.¹⁹⁹⁰ According to the panel’s 2014 final report, official vendors of arms and ammunition ceased to operate in Bangui and other towns visited by the panel; hunting ammunition was smuggled into the CAR from Cameroon, DRC and Congo, in particular through Gamboula and Cantonnier (near Garoua Boulai).¹⁹⁹¹ Aurélien Llorca agreed with the suggestion that there was no centralised distribution of ammunition; however, as is also in the report, an effort was made to enable ammunition to be supplied locally.¹⁹⁹² The witness reiterated that the panel conducted in-depth analysis on the various groups supplying munitions for hunting guns, used by the various groups, and provided the details in its reports.¹⁹⁹³

860. In particular, the panel’s 2014 interim report noted that the panel observed, ‘on occasion’, small groups of Anti-Balaka fighters with assault rifles, light machine guns and RPGs, moving in convoys of two pick-up trucks.¹⁹⁹⁴ In its 2014 final report, the panel concluded that the Anti-Balaka and ‘the armed group ‘Révolution et justice’ continued to rely on small arms, with motorbikes and stolen or commandeered light vehicles being used solely for transporting and protecting zone commanders, and the Anti-Balaka estimated at holding no more than a dozen vehicles.¹⁹⁹⁵ It also noted that since 5 December 2013, international forces collected approximately 1,200 military small arms, 1,150 hunting rifles and 180 light weapons; of the total seized between 5 December 2013 and 28 February 2014, 84% were confiscated from former Seleka fighters during their cantonment; from 1 March to around mid-August 2014, international forces seized fewer than 200 small arms and a similar quantity of artisanal rifles, and no light weapons.¹⁹⁹⁶ On 2 September 2014, the panel was informed that Anti-Balaka fighters in Bambari were seen for the first time in late August 2014 carrying machine guns and RPGs, representing a significant development in the operational capability.¹⁹⁹⁷

861. P-0884 testified that there were two types of weapons, hunting weapons; according to the information P-0884 had, Maxime Mokom supplied the ammunition – but the war weapons were lethal weapons, there were soldiers who had fled together with their weapons and in some incidents they took weapons from the Seleka.¹⁹⁹⁸ Maxime Mokom told P-0884 that he bought ammunition from Zongo and gave them to the women to take them to the field.¹⁹⁹⁹ P-0884 did not know if Mr Ngaïssona gave money to the Anti-Balaka before that.²⁰⁰⁰ P-0884 stated he sent money before 5 December 2013, there is the example of Yaliminde, but P-0884 did not know precisely who he sent the money to.²⁰⁰¹
862. Adrien Poussou testified that he did not recall clearly if Mr Ngaïssona ever told him that he was involved in financing the Anti-Balaka to purchase arms, but he did tell Adrien Poussou and Yvon Songuet that he had spent a great deal of money on the ‘upkeep of the men’.²⁰⁰² When confronted with his prior statement which suggests that Mr Ngaïssona did confirm to him that he financed the purchase of arms, Adrien Poussou stated that two or three months before Mr Ngaïssona was arrested, at the end of 2018, they had a discussion in his office at the Central African football association in the context of which he said that he had contributed to the purchase of weapons for the Anti-Balaka and acted with the Anti-Balaka during the election for Touadéra to be where he was.²⁰⁰³ Adrien Poussou thought this was not the first time he heard this from Mr Ngaïssona, but he did not recall the other times.²⁰⁰⁴

863. On the basis of the above, the Chamber concludes that Mr Ngaïssona provided financial assistance to individuals and groups already before 5 December 2013, and with a view to assisting the efforts in removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka, and bringing François Bozizé back to power. In the Chamber's view this is not negated by the evidence of some witnesses who said that Mr Ngaïssona, while in Cameroon, may have had less money than before or required financial assistance for private matters,²⁰⁰⁵ as other witnesses were clear in stating that financial assistance was given by Mr Ngaïssona. Similarly, D30-4914's blanket statement that Mr Ngaïssona never gave money to them to buy weapons,²⁰⁰⁶ or that D30-4914 did not hear of any ammunition sent from Cameroon,²⁰⁰⁷ of Mr Ngaïssona or Bernard Mokom sending weapons or ammunition to the border,²⁰⁰⁸ of promises that materiel would be delivered,²⁰⁰⁹ or of money transfers via Western Union,²⁰¹⁰ is, by itself, insufficient to raise doubts as to the evidence of other witnesses as outlined above.

864. The Chamber similarly considers not credible or relevant Didier Ouebio's blanket claims of not hearing or knowing about (i) Mr Ngaïssona bringing together groups of youth or FACA in Yaoundé or Mr Ngaïssona communicating with elements in Garam-Boulai or at the border;²⁰¹¹ (ii) a group of 17 from Douala coming to the Golf and receiving money;²⁰¹² (iii) Mr Ngaïssona organising military reinforcements for elements in the fields;²⁰¹³ Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom financially supporting from Yaoundé elements in the field through Express Union and intermediaries;²⁰¹⁴ (iv) Mr Ngaïssona or Bernard Mokom

Importantly in this regard, Didier Ouebio did state that Mr Ngaïssona transferred money twice through him, giving the amount to the witness with the account number and name of the bank, and the witness making the deposit.²⁰¹⁹

Requests for materiel

865. In addition to the above clear evidence on Mr Ngaïssona providing financial assistance to the efforts of removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power, and restoring François Bozizé to power, the Chamber has before it a number of emails which were exchanged between P-2843 and the email account associated with Mr Ngaïssona during the time at which Mr Ngaïssona was not in the CAR following the Seleka coup. These emails show, as further discussed below, that Mr Ngaïssona was directly involved in liaising with individuals on the ground that required material and financial means with a view to, in the initial instance, organising a response to the Seleka violence.
866. Before discussing the content of the emails, the Chamber turns to the submissions concerning the emails' reliability and probative value.
867. The Ngaïssona Defence, while not disputing the regularity of the procedure used to obtain the Yahoo email collection,²⁰²⁰ contests its authenticity and reliability.²⁰²¹ It asserts that the process used by the Prosecution to disclose the material did not preserve the integrity of the content of the Yahoo material and that the material has been altered,²⁰²² with authenticity in some items being so pervasive that the emails concerned should not be attributed any evidentiary weight.²⁰²³ The Ngaïssona Defence submits that especially formatting issues and incorrect time stamps of email exchanges raise doubts as to the authenticity of the Yahoo collection which also affect its reliability.²⁰²⁴ The Ngaïssona Defence also asserts that while some of the emails in question have been authenticated by witnesses, most of them have not,²⁰²⁵ diminishing the probative value of the evidence.²⁰²⁶

868. The Ngaïssona Defence further submits that the Prosecution has insufficiently substantiated the probative value of six Yahoo email accounts to the core issues of the case.²⁰²⁷ It challenges the Prosecution's interpretation of conversations retrieved from, inter alia, Mr Ngaïssona's email account, which allegedly show his involvement in the charged crimes.²⁰²⁸ In particular, the Ngaïssona Defence argues that the Prosecution failed to establish the relevance to: the charges related to the alleged May planning meeting in Cameroon,²⁰²⁹ the alleged June 2013 plan to rally the Youth in Bangui,²⁰³⁰ the alleged July-September 2013 strategy to return Bozizé to power (including contacting Bozizé to obtain money and resources for mobilising supporters),²⁰³¹ the alleged August-October 2013 financial transfers to Mr Ngaïssona in Cameroon,²⁰³² the alleged involvement of Mr Ngaïssona in FROCCA from July 2013 to September 2013,²⁰³³ and the alleged Anti-Balaka military operations and the armed conflict between the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka from October 2013 to July 2014.²⁰³⁴

869. The Chamber takes note that the Ngaïssona Defence, when questioning the authenticity and reliability of some of the items in the Yahoo email collection, neither challenges that the email accounts belonged to the respective individuals, nor that these individuals sent the emails in question. The issues raised are limited to alleged processing errors by the Prosecution, especially regarding inconsistent formatting and incoherent time stamps. In addition, the allegations made by the Ngaïssona Defence only concern certain items contained in the email collection, some of which were put to witnesses heard before the Court.²⁰³⁵ The Chamber does not find the alleged processing errors or anomalies to be of such a degree that they show a pattern which affects the overall reliability of the collection.
870. Furthermore, the Chamber notes that it has received the evidence of witnesses on certain email exchanges, which it has considered in the context of the clear and unequivocal content of the emails in question, as further outlined below. In light of witnesses providing specific context to the emails in question, mostly importantly by confirming their exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona at the relevant time, the Chamber finds that differences in time stamps or discrepant ways in which responses to various emails were sent²⁰³⁶ do not render the emails unreliable.²⁰³⁷
871. Turning to the emails before the Chamber, in one exchange on 24 and 25 June 2013, P-2843 asked whether Mr Ngaïssona would still be in Douala or Yaoundé until 8 July, as P-2843

²⁰³⁶ See Ngaïssona Defence Yahoo BT Response, ICC-01/14-01/18-1546-Conf, paras 14-16.

²⁰³⁷ The Chamber notes in this regard the following: (i) the argument that all versions of all email threads would necessarily have to contain all related emails presupposes that an individual would necessarily always respond to the latest email received; (ii) differing time stamps can be explained by a number of factors, yet what matters in the view of the Chamber is that the sequence of emails is clear based on their content; (iii) one example pointed to by the Ngaïssona Defence with a view to illustrating that its sequence is an ‘impossibility’ since the response to one email would have come before the initial email (see CAR-OTP-2124-0892) can be explained by looking at a different iteration of the exchange, which places the emails with their time stamp in the relevant chronology (see CAR-OTP-2130-3377); and (iv) the reports on the extraction and processing of the emails from the account associated with Mr Ngaïssona do not seem to suggest any abnormalities in this process, except for not respecting the ‘parent/child relationship’ between messages and attachments (see Reports, CAR-OTP-2118-6255; CAR-OTP-2130-4492). Accordingly, the Chamber has relied on the emails and assessed their content within the context of all the evidence before it, including that of witnesses who testified about exchanging with Mr Ngaïssona.

wanted to discuss the situation of the country, especially certain details that they could not talk about on the telephone ('la situation du pays surtout sur certaines pistes qu'on ne pouvait pas en parler au téléphone').²⁰³⁸

872. P-2843 testified that at the time, Mr Ngaïssona was in Douala and P-2843 asked to discuss the situation in the country with him because it was very difficult, and he was afraid to discuss even the situation of football and of members of the federation over the telephone.²⁰³⁹ The attachment did not refer to matters which could not be discussed over the phone, it concerned an individual who had been dismissed from the football federation's assembly.²⁰⁴⁰
873. In July and August 2013, Mr Ngaïssona received information through Alfred Legrand Ngaya in the form of emails. On 16 July 2013, Alfred Legrand Ngaya appeared to send a document detailing a meeting at his house in April 2013 at which participants set up a structure for the coordination of actions in support of the return to power of François Bozizé.²⁰⁴¹ In the text of the email, Alfred Legrand Ngaya explains that he is communicating the composition of the coordination they set up to mobilise the population for protest action, with the ultimate goal to demand the withdrawal of Djotodia and return Bozizé to power, while stating that the means are limited and asking whether it is possible to expect means for action, and stating that he knows the addressee to be capable of presenting the situation to the president.²⁰⁴² Mr Ngaïssona responded confirming receipt of the documents, and stating having transferred them to the 'BOSS' 'pour toute fin utile'.²⁰⁴³ Mr Ngaïssona forwarded this email to 'wapounabafils'.²⁰⁴⁴
874. In an email of 31 July 2013, Alfred Legrand Ngaya asks Mr Ngaïssona for a suggestion of a date to plan 'les actions d'insurrection populaire [sic]', taking into account the 'début des opérations militaires que vous allez engager', and further states that if operations should start in the province, it would not be useful to push 'Bangui' to the streets too soon since the 'insurrection populaire' will be effective if 'opérations militaires' start in Bangui – in response to the message on the same day, Mr Ngaïssona thanks for the message and suggestions and states following up soon.²⁰⁴⁵ In another response to this a few days later, Mr Ngaïssona says that he would have information very soon and for their operation to keep in touch during the day.²⁰⁴⁶ In yet another response of 3 August 2013, Mr Ngaïssona informs that they ('we') just set up the FROCCA and took dispositions 'pour une action rapide', further asks to get in touch with association leaders with whom they can work, which is urgent.²⁰⁴⁷ In response, Alfred Legrand Ngaya agrees with the name of the movement because it is close to his initial proposal, states that he will present this to the 'co-équipiers', who will have to do the same, and further says he will get in touch with the association leaders, asking whether he can be helped financially, 'puis que vous connaissez mieux que moi le tempérament de nos compatriotes', and if they have some means, it will be easy, while concluding that he will keep addressee informed of outcome of next 'concertation'.²⁰⁴⁸ Shortly after, Alfred Legrand Ngaya also asks Mr Ngaïssona whether the latter can suggest some names of association leaders because he is in the process of making contact, 'et c'est délicat tel que vous le savez'.²⁰⁴⁹

875. Alfred Legrand Ngaya explained in relation to the emails he exchanged with Mr Ngaïssona that they had spoken on the phone two or three times while Mr Ngaïssona was in exile in Cameroon, he would ask for news about the neighbourhood.²⁰⁵⁰ FROCCA was in Paris, organised by a lawyer, so there was a possibility for the international community to act.²⁰⁵¹ The witness heard about FROCCA through the email from Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁵² He did not recall if Mr Ngaïssona provided financial resources as requested; at some point he sent money to Alfred Legrand Ngaya to help the Anti-Balaka in their neighbourhood and dissuade them from bothering the population.²⁰⁵³ Alfred Legrand Ngaya did communicate with Mr Ngaïssona on what was happening in Bangui because they used to live in the same neighbourhood.²⁰⁵⁴ The witness did not recall discussing the Anti-Balaka with him.²⁰⁵⁵ Alfred Legrand Ngaya did not recall exchanging with Levy Yakété about passing information to youth on the ground and Anti-Balaka through Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁵⁶

876. Further exchanges from the beginning of October 2013 suggest that individuals were trying to contact Mr Ngaïssona through P-2843 with a view to receiving support. In an email of 5 October 2013, P-2843 wrote in relation to the situation of the country that 'notre cellule d'information a été informé de la dotation en moyen financier et matériel au éléments qui sont de l'autre coté du fleuve pour une coordination avec ceux de Bangui et la ligne Boali, Bogangolo, Bozoum [sic]', while the individual responsible for the elements in Bangui and PK12, Lieutenant Doguela, and the person coordinating the line Boali, Bogangolo, Bozoum, Lieutenant Lakouetene, 'n'ont reçu aucun moyen comme d'habitude'.²⁰⁵⁷ The message continues that P-2843 was asked to get in touch with Mr Ngaïssona for further information as this situation created dissatisfaction.²⁰⁵⁸ In a response sent on 6 October, Mr Ngaïssona asked to be provided with the phone numbers of the persons concerned, which he received, and then further asked to be given only '72' numbers,²⁰⁵⁹ which was done by P-2843 soon thereafter.²⁰⁶⁰

877. P-2841 was not aware of the email of 5 October 2013; at that time, his friends Doguela and Prince had organised with their groups and the situation was getting more and more complicated, so the idea was to pool efforts to get rid of the Seleka, they discussed issues of resources for battle on the ground, but P-2841 was not familiar with sending these types of emails.²⁰⁶¹ According to P-2841, 'notre cellule d'information' was simply referring to their small group which came together from time to time to have discussions with friends.²⁰⁶² P-2841 confirmed the message of 6 October 2013 at 12:56:16 concerned a similar scenario of money going through Zongo not reaching people in the field.²⁰⁶³ ‘Field’ referred specifically to the Anti-Balaka combatants across the territory; at the time they were already taking a significant number of towns and getting closer to Bangui.²⁰⁶⁴

878. On 7 October 2013, Mr Ngaïssona received an email from P-2843 which listed the following ‘needs’ of the officers: (1) Lieutenant Lakouetene (sites Kouzoundoro, Bogoura, Lambi, Lac Caimon, Ndjo, Bossemtélé, Bozoum and Baoro), needs ammunition, cigarettes, tarpaulins, telephone credit, rations, unforeseen – total of 5954000 FCFA; (2) Lieutenant Doguela (sites Bangui, Bimbo, Begoua, Landja) with estimated 500 men (10 officers, 40 sous officiers, 450 rank and file) needs topographical maps, compasses, Orange telephones, telephone credit, unforeseen – total of 5750000 FCFA.²⁰⁶⁵ The message further indicated a ‘besoin en armement’, specifying that each element has an individual ‘AK’, but collective weapons are needed, namely 50 ‘RPG7’ with 50 rocket boxes, 20 DKM with five 7.62 cartridge boxes, grenades, and ‘chargeurs AK’.²⁰⁶⁶
879. P-2843 explained that two friends who were soldiers knew that he was in contact with Mr Ngaïssona and asked him if he could put them in touch, without explaining why.²⁰⁶⁷ At the time, the soldiers in their neighbourhood were organised, Doguela and Lakouetene acted as intermediaries between the soldiers, who were armed, even civilians were.²⁰⁶⁸ Doguela and Lakouetene gave P-2843 to understand that some people had received means, but they had received nothing, which was why they asked him to put them in contact with Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁶⁹ During this period they were on high alert, organised themselves, information came from Zongo, everywhere, and they discussed what they heard.²⁰⁷⁰ The ‘other side of the river’ referred to Zongo, while ‘elements’ concerned information from his friends Blaise Doguela and Prince Lakouetene.²⁰⁷¹ P-2843 called Mr Ngaïssona to ask his opinion, after which Mr Ngaïssona sent P-2843 an email saying he should give him their contact numbers.²⁰⁷² P-2843 informed Mr Ngaïssona that Doguela and Lakouetene were soldiers and wanted to contact him.²⁰⁷³ P-2843 did not recall when during the year he was in contact with Mr Ngaïssona, but it was when the latter was in exile.²⁰⁷⁴ According to P-2843, when he sent to Mr Ngaïssona the needs communicated by his friends, Mr Ngaïssona did not answer to that specific point.²⁰⁷⁵ Prince said he had people there, had control over them and had contacts there, while P-2843 found out later that everything Prince said were lies, they never travelled throughout that period, Prince never did, they were in Bangui.²⁰⁷⁶ They did not tell P-2843 how they communicated with sites far away from Bangui, but he agreed that it was ‘virtually impossible’ to contact individuals on those sites in those days by phone, there was no connectivity.²⁰⁷⁷ Doguela and Prince led them to understand that they had elements in the zones indicated in the email.²⁰⁷⁸

880. P-2843 told ‘Rod Larry Martial Gallaut’ about having forwarded these requests to Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁷⁹ ‘Matos’ in this context referred to military equipment.²⁰⁸⁰

881. Around the same time, also P-2841 was in contact with the same user, which sounded as if Maxime Mokom had misappropriated or taken goods, because people were complaining they did not have any means.²⁰⁸¹ P-2841’s friends in the military, Doguela and Prince Lakouetene, told him that Mr Ngaïssona was sending food and money to these people, Prince was in regular contact with Maxime Mokom and at some point also Bernard Mokom, who was in

Cameroon with Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁸² P-2841 spoke to Maxime Mokom about this who said that he did not take anything and that Mr Ngaïssona had not sent money and goods for him for Zongo.²⁰⁸³ P-2841 did not have direct contact with Mr Ngaïssona at this time.²⁰⁸⁴

882. P-2841 explained further that Prince knew the villages mentioned in the email of 12 October well, he had been there on detachments with his elements, but during the crisis he was not able to deploy there.²⁰⁸⁵ The weapons were the ones that they indicated as soldiers for the purposes of the operation, the final assault on Bangui.²⁰⁸⁶ P-2841, Dongombe, Prince, Doguela met to talk about these requirements, sometimes they met with a whole group of people, sometimes other military friends joined, such as Guy Boundeka and Daniel Yangoupandé; Prince and Doguela were the most senior of the military in these discussions.²⁰⁸⁷ It was Prince's idea to ask Mr Ngaïssona for supplies and he convinced Doguela to do the same; the contact with Mr Ngaïssona went through Bens because he knew him through his work with the football federation.²⁰⁸⁸ P-2841 knew through Rod that Mr Ngaïssona was on the ground, in Yaoundé, Bertoua, 'G[aroua Boulaye]'.²⁰⁸⁹ Bangui, Bimbo, Begoua, Landja, as referenced for Doguela, essentially comprise all of Bangui; Doguela was, like Prince, committed to the 'final assault' or the upcoming attack on Bangui, they both had elements but needed the means to deploy and occupy the territory; in the end, neither of them was able to deploy their elements.²⁰⁹⁰ These requests were sent to Mr Ngaïssona because they knew that he had the money to finance these things; Mr Ngaïssona already financed a lot of youth movements and political movements, such as the KNK, the National Youth Council and 'COSCIPAC'; this was not just out of the goodness of his heart, behind it lay the desire to stay on good terms with those who held power as they would use his businesses for services and supplies; when the Seleka came to power, he lost a lot of money.²⁰⁹¹ P-2841 did not know if Dongombe, Prince and Doguela were in phone contact with Mr Ngaïssona right before these emails were sent; at the time, Prince was in contact with the Seleka, weapons were being trafficked across the river and were relatively easy to obtain; in addition, the arms depot had been looted by the Seleka and weapons could be bought from them – P-2481 did not know if Prince bought any of these weapons, but in general, he knew Prince was involved in this kind of thing.²⁰⁹² Prince engaged in a ‘virtual rebellion’ at the time and tried to show his power to people on the internet; as he was not so good with computers, P-2841 provided him with a young guy to help him publish on the web; Prince used the name Dingao, when he became Muslim, he called himself Abdel Khader.²⁰⁹³ P-2841 confirmed the suggestion that Prince willingly published incorrect information which then circulated.²⁰⁹⁴

883. In light of the unequivocal text of the emails sent to Mr Ngaïssona, as well as the further context provided by both P-2843 and P-2841 regarding why such requests for materiel and financial assistance would have been sent to Mr Ngaïssona, the Chamber considers immaterial that both P-2843 and P-2841 suggested that Prince was a liar. The fact remains that these requests were sent to Mr Ngaïssona in the belief that he could, and would, provide the relevant assistance, as well as that Mr Ngaïssona clearly did intend to establish contact with the individuals requesting such assistance.

884. Not long after, on 12 October 2013, another request for materiel reached Mr Ngaïssona, stating that the south (Fatima-Bimbo-Moungoumba), with focal point Kobo, needs Orange telephones, pharmaceutical products, telephone credit, rations, unforeseen at a total amount of 9860000 FCFA, as well as AK chargers, ‘RPG7’ and rockets.²⁰⁹⁵ The message further informed that the ‘message de casserole’ went well and gave additional information in this regard.²⁰⁹⁶ This email was then forwarded by Mr Ngaïssona on 12 October 2013 to the account of ‘beddanboy’ which replied on 17 October 2013 that the message was well received and that ‘le compte rendu sera fait immédiatement’.²⁰⁹⁷ The evidence before the Chamber suggests that this email account was associated with Eric Danboy.²⁰⁹⁸

885. P-2843 recalled that Kobo gave him the information in the email, because he said he was the focal point, and P-2843 was supposed to send this to Mr Ngaïssona.²⁰⁹⁹ Kobo did not give P-2843 the information directly, it was written on a piece of paper.²¹⁰⁰ P-2843 was not obliged to send the information to Mr Ngaïssona, but the people with whom P-2843 was corresponding and brought documents to him asked him to, they knew he was in contact with Mr Ngaïssona, had worked with him for several years.²¹⁰¹ Everyone knew Mr Ngaïssona was the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka; that is why they were compelled to come to P-2843 to have him send Mr Ngaïssona the document.²¹⁰² P-2843 did not know Danboy, was never in contact with him and had no idea his email would be forwarded to Danboy.²¹⁰³ P-2843 reiterated not discussing with Doguela and Lakouetene in detail; P-2843’s impression was that their interest was money, they asked P-2843 twice to ask Mr Ngaïssona to send them money because they had to take care of people, but P-2843 did not convey that message to Mr Ngaïssona because he understood they wanted to extort money from him.²¹⁰⁴ P-2843 did not follow up with Mr Ngaïssona about the emails requesting arms and money, he had some more discussions with his military friends who wanted money, but P-2843 did not send that message.²¹⁰⁵ P-2843 confirmed that they were also constantly together with Kobo, exchanging information.²¹⁰⁶

Second, the email does not refer to Kobo as being ‘in charge’ of the south,²¹⁰⁸ but rather as being a focal or contact point for the southern area, the question of whether Kobo controlled any group is therefore immaterial as such control is no precondition for serving as contact person. Third, the email itself and also P-2843’s explanations provided thereon do not suggest that any money would indeed have been received, that P-2841 thought he would have noticed if such money had been available²¹⁰⁹ is thus equally immaterial. Fourth, P-2841 stated hearing from Rod that Bens (Dongombe) said that the military men who formed groups in Bangui were waiting for supplies and Mr Ngaïssona told Bens to tell Rod what the needs were.²¹¹⁰ That P-2841 also thought Prince often lied to obtain information does not negate this statement.²¹¹¹ Fifth, also P-2841 was clear in saying that ‘matos’ was a reference to weapons and ammunition, while ‘les besoins’ concerned everything that went with the former, such as food for the troops, credit and the kind of supplies mentioned in the email.²¹¹² P-2841 thus obviously understood the content of the email as a request with materiel needed for armed activities. P-2841 further testified that he was in contact with Prince, Doguela and Maxime Mokom and received information not only from Prince, but also various other people about ‘matos’ arriving which would have been sent to the bush to the Anti-Balaka chiefs and people would cross over from the DRC with ammunition.²¹¹³ The Chamber further considers the content of this email in the context of the events on the ground at the time, as discussed in further detail below.²¹¹⁴ Indeed, P-2841 also knew that at the time, the Anti-Balaka came closer to Bangui and there was a battle in Ndjo.²¹¹⁵ Sixth, it is immaterial that P-2841 did not know why Mr Ngaïssona would have forwarded the email to Boris Danboy, whom he knew in Bangui and who joined Rod and Mr Ngaïssona’s group in Yaoundé, or that Boris Danboy and P-2841 did not speak about this when they were in contact.²¹¹⁶

887. This is because seventh, and most importantly, P-2841 testified that everybody knew in the country that Mr Ngaïssona was a big businessman, head of the Central African football federation, and he supported and had influence on the youth.²¹¹⁷ According to P-2841, it was when Mr Ngaïssona was in Cameroon and things were beginning to change on the ground as the Anti-Balaka advanced and took over a number of cities that it was understood that he would be the one in charge of mobilising resources and that resources should be transferred through him.²¹¹⁸ Prince looked for various sources which is why he immediately had to seek to contact Mr Ngaïssona to understand what was happening with funding.²¹¹⁹
888. P-2841 testified that everyone knew that for Michel Djotodia to go, resources had to be mobilised for the people in the field and Maxime Mokom told P-2841 that he had a list of people who were contributing to the movement.²¹²⁰ Guerson was close to the Anti-Balaka, served in the transitional government of Catherine Samba-Panza as representative of the Anti-Balaka wing,²¹²¹ but would not have been a financier, he was more of an intermediary for various commissions; he brought money to the Anti-Balaka in the field where he had contacts, in the range of 200,000 or 500,000 FCFA, in cash in little bags.²¹²² P-2841 did not know who gave Guerson the money.²¹²³ The Anti-Balaka in the field were also supported by villagers who provided food, goats, manioc; the main need was ammunition for traditional weapons and AK-47s, this essentially came from the DRC.²¹²⁴ At a certain point information circulated that the Anti-Balaka were suffering in the field, people made enquiries and heard Mr Ngaïssona was close to them, they contacted him and asked what to contribute; practically speaking, P-2841 did not know how such transfers were effectuated.²¹²⁵ P-2841 did not see any receipts from Western Union or Express Union.²¹²⁶ P-2841 did not see Mr Ngaïssona transferring money, but explained that in this context, smaller amounts of money like 200,000, 100,000, 50,000 were given in cash by hand, there was no need for money transfers.²¹²⁷ Celestin Yanindji was Mr Ngaïssona's vice-president at the football federation, had a lot of money, but lost it at one point.²¹²⁸ While Mr Ngaïssona was in exile in Cameroon, he had problems managing his accounts in CAR; Bens told P-2841 that Yanindji sent Mr Ngaïssona small amounts of money on occasion to help him out, but did not say how.²¹²⁹ According to P-2841, Touadera also contributed to the Anti-Balaka; Maxime Mokom indicated this.²¹³⁰ P-2841 clarified that he was never on the ground, never saw any direct contact between Mr Ngaïssona and the Anti-Balaka.²¹³¹ But what he said was based on discussions he had with all the teams, whether in Cameroon or DRC, he heard a number of things from a number of credible sources.²¹³² P-2841 explained that he exchanged with Gallaut, was a witness of some money that came from DRC and saw it with his own eyes.²¹³³

889. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the emails in question do not support the allegation of Mr Ngaïssona providing weapons and ammunition to the Anti-Balaka in Bangui.²¹³⁴ Bearing in mind its assessment of the evidence as outlined above, the Chamber considers that the emails show that Mr Ngaïssona, at the very least, acted as a liaison with the clear knowledge and intent that this entailed being a link to which the Anti-Balaka would make requests for weapons and ammunition, for purposes of engaging in armed hostilities.

Liaising with individuals linked to efforts to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power and bring François Bozizé back to power

890. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that Mr Ngaïssona, in addition to being involved in meetings with François Bozizé, Bernard Mokom and others in Cameroon, and travelling to the border area to liaise with groups as discussed below, was also liaising with other persons that, at that time or later, were involved in efforts to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power and bring François Bozizé back to power.

891. An email of 10 May 2013 from ‘thierry bongolo’ to the email addresses of Mr Ngaïssona, Levy Yakété and Joachim Kokaté suggests that at this time Mr Ngaïssona and the others were communicating with others, and that others wanted them to be engaged in their efforts.²¹³⁵ The Chamber notes in this regard that some months later, Thierry Bongolo was involved in the setting up of FROCCA.²¹³⁶
892. Further, Jacob Mokpem-Bionli heard from his nephew Ngaya that Mr Ngaïssona was beside himself that foreigners from abroad, Chad and Sudan, like Ali Darassa, Sidiki and Alkhatim could aggress their country and its inhabitants, he thought the CAR had opened its doors to them and he could not accept what was happening, Mr Ngaïssona said he would do everything to return to the country also in light of the fact that he had many assets looted by the Seleka.²¹³⁷ Mr Ngaïssona was still in Cameroon and with François Bozizé at the time and was informed of the resistance and movement of the resistance from the provinces to Bangui; they were kept informed and he told them not to commit crimes because they had already heard that some crimes were being committed.²¹³⁸ Mr Ngaïssona and François Bozizé were informed by phone, they had contacts with a lot of people still living in Bangui; Legrand Ngaya often called Mr Ngaïssona; Mr Ngaïssona was also a businessman so he had his own way of getting information.²¹³⁹ In Cameroon were also ‘Bozizé’, Captain Goundemo aka Gbagouma and Captain Eugène Ngaïkosset, military people who were behind the organisation of the resistance in Cameroon.²¹⁴⁰ Eugène Ngaïssoket came to Cameroon after he had been in the DRC, arrested there and freed again.²¹⁴¹ According to the witness, Mr Ngaïssona was in Cameroon when he heard that the Anti-Balaka had come to Bangui and were committing some misdeeds, so he needed to be in Bangui to take control of those youths, and he used his own personal money to take care of those children who had organised themselves from Bozoum, Ouham-Pende, Ouham, etc., until they got to Bangui – someone needed to bring them to reason so that the destruction may end.²¹⁴² Ngaya informed Jacob Mokpem-Bionli about the meetings held in Cameroon between Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Koudemon and others.²¹⁴³ The witness did not know if Kokaté and Bernard Mokom took part in these meetings, but Bernard Mokom was very close to Bozizé.²¹⁴⁴ According to the witness, he did not know whether the meetings in Cameroon were in Yaoundé, Douala or any other location.²¹⁴⁵ According to Jacob Mokpem-Bionli, he was not aware of former CAR ambassador Louis Oguere Ngaikoumon being removed from his position because of meetings regarding the destabilisation of the CAR at the CAR embassy in Cameroon.²¹⁴⁶ It was said that Oguere was removed from his position because he was Gbaya, but the witness was not aware of that.²¹⁴⁷ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli confirmed that in 2013, Oguere was secretary-general of the KNK.²¹⁴⁸

893. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli testified that the ‘Bozizé clan’ took a very strategically and physically active part in the Anti-Balaka resistance, Rodrigue Bozizé was one of François Bozizé’s children who actively took part in the fight and he was very mobile between Boeing and Boy-Rabe, while François Bozizé’s other children were not in Bangui.²¹⁴⁹ The witness did not know if they also financed the Anti-Balaka.²¹⁵⁰ The Bozizé clan refers to the Gbaya people – the Anti-Balaka were born in three prefectures, Ouham-Pende, Ouham and Nana-Grebizi and most of the people Jacob Mokpem-Bionli referred to as Bozizé clan were those who organised themselves to descend on Bangui.²¹⁵¹ They put in place a system to fight back against the Seleka advances – on 5 December when close to 4,000 elements met behind the hills, this was not a light matter.²¹⁵² The physical aspect were the Anti-Balaka coming down from the hill and confronting the Seleka on 5 December; some had sticks and others traditional weapons.²¹⁵³ According to the witness, he was not fighting to bring François Bozizé back to power, but against the Seleka violence, he never attended ‘any such meetings’.²¹⁵⁴ According to Jacob Mokpem-Bionli, he ‘never heard’ of such a thing to bring François Bozizé back to power.²¹⁵⁵

894. Brice Emotion Namsio explained that when Mr Ngaïssona was in Cameroon and in contact with Ngaya, the latter, who was the witness’s neighbour, also told Mr Ngaïssona that if he could not find Ngaya, he should call Emotion’s number.²¹⁵⁶

895. P-2232 learned from Mokom that they organised meetings in Cameroon and intended to organise at the border with a view to attacking, organised with Steve Yambété, but the attack did not take place because of a misunderstanding between the various teams, which was how Maxime Mokom was given responsibility – at that time, Levy Yakété had gone to France.²¹⁵⁷ P-2232 heard from Mokom that they set up a coordination office in Cameroon and since it was not functioning very well, they handed over responsibility to him in Zongo; Gbangouma also known as Olivier Koudemon as well as certain officers were also in Cameroon.²¹⁵⁸ Steve Yambété organised the first attack at the border and was arrested by the Cameroonians, at which time they noticed that their operation would not work and therefore asked people in the Congo to take over.²¹⁵⁹ According to P-2232, they did not succeed in coordinating their actions because the Cameroonian authorities were controlling them, and that is how they asked Maxime Mokom to take over.²¹⁶⁰ P-2232 stated that it was a political struggle which was followed by a military struggle.²¹⁶¹ They set up that front in order to fight politically with the international community so as to appeal to them so that Bozizé should be able to return and complete his term of office.²¹⁶² When responsibilities were transferred to Maxime

Mokom he was in communication with the people in Cameroon, but P-2232 did not have further information about what happened there, he only knew that during that period there was a lot of pressure upon them from the authorities of the country;²¹⁶³ Mokom was still in contact with Cameroon, it was Cameroon that sent him money to enable him to work; they were still in communication, and coordinating the activities together.²¹⁶⁴ After Mokom had used the money, he reported back to them, tell them who had taken such an operation in such-and-such a place, and he paid for this person and that person and for the food of other people.²¹⁶⁵ P-2232 did not know who he reported to; the name of the sender was a Cameroonian name.²¹⁶⁶

896. P-2658 knew Mr Ngaïssona as member of parliament from Nana-Bakassa, and thought Kema, Yongo and Charly based in Bossangoa were directly communicating with Mr Ngaïssona, then passing his messages to Dedane on the phone when they talked from time to time.²¹⁶⁷ After Dedane talked to the three, he briefed his elements in P-2658's presence; the elements said that their 'big boss Ngaïssona' sent a message through the three men, that Mr Ngaïssona would send ammunition and ammunition for the battle.²¹⁶⁸ The elements talked among themselves about Mr Ngaïssona providing them with materiel.²¹⁶⁹ P-2658 did not see the Anti-Balaka receiving equipment, but knew that Dedane brought ammunition when he went to Bossangoa before he deployed the elements for the attacks in Bowai, Bouca and Bossangoa.²¹⁷⁰ P-2658 did see ammunition arriving, as well as Kalashnikovs, a heavy weapon that was positioned on the main route, automatic hunting weapons and others.²¹⁷¹ P-2658 stated that there was no network connection in Gbonguere;

he did not know if the Anti-Balaka, including Dedane, communicated with Mr Ngaïssona.²¹⁷²

897. P-0884 testified that he did not have Mr Ngaïssona's or Bernard Mokom's numbers in Cameroon,²¹⁷³ but Mr Ngaïssona called him following a demonstration they organised at the airport.²¹⁷⁴ In or after August, Bernard Mokom called P-0884, but not very regularly, while P-0884 and Mr Ngaïssona called each other frequently, from September, maybe two or three times a week also when Mr Ngaïssona was travelling as he would call P-0884 to know what the situation in the country was.²¹⁷⁵ Bernard Mokom called P-0884 because of the demonstration he had organised at the airport in August,²¹⁷⁶ and they remained in contact, with Bernard Mokom saying he would give P-0884 his son's number and this son would call him – Maxime Mokom called P-0884, but referred to himself only as 'commander'.²¹⁷⁷
898. P-1719 testified that Rocca Mokom was in constant touch with Yaoundé, Bangui and Zongo, because at that time he was one of the key elements of the restricted team.²¹⁷⁸ Rocca himself told them, after they had set up the staff and held meetings following Michel Djotodia's resignation, that he was in touch with the authorities in Yaoundé, that he had exchanges with his father in Yaoundé.²¹⁷⁹ He was part of the restricted team and they ('we') only received instructions which were passed on.²¹⁸⁰
899. P-0306 testified that Andjilo was not in contact with Mr Ngaïssona while he was in Bouca, he talked to the emissaries who passed the messages on to them, 'Richard' and Konaté would receive instructions and pass them on, Konaté who told Andjilo everything he was saying; Mr Ngaïssona was in contact with Richard and Konaté by telephone.²¹⁸¹ When Andjilo received calls or they were communicating, and when their communication ended, he would

900. P-2673 explained that he was in Yaoundé, Douala, at the border, in the group without participating in the fighting, received money that Mr Ngaïssona gave to Mokom twice – his colleagues and comrades with whom he was gave him information.²¹⁸³ Mr Ngaïssona and François Bozizé are from the same village, said to be relatives; Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father had to inform Bozizé before they made any decisions, everybody knew this.²¹⁸⁴ Mokom father told P-2673 that he was in touch with Bozizé and they would call each other on the phone – according to P-2673, it is because of Mokom father's relationship with Bozizé that Mr Ngaïssona wanted him near him.²¹⁸⁵ Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father worked together, were always together in Cameroon apart from when Mr Ngaïssona left on business, and remained together until they returned to Bangui in 2014.²¹⁸⁶ P-2673 heard that when Mr Ngaïssona was in Yaoundé, he had contact with all the Anti-Balaka chiefs, had their phone numbers, and in particular was in contact with 'Ndale', and also with Andjilo and the chiefs in Bossangoa.²¹⁸⁷ Maxime Mokom was also in contact with the chiefs and Mr Ngaïssona was with Mokom father, so P-2673 thought he was also in contact with Maxime Mokom.²¹⁸⁸ The problems between Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom only started in Bangui when everyone wanted to be the chief, but before they were all in contact with the chiefs in the field.²¹⁸⁹ P-2673 did not go to see Mr Ngaïssona, who did not trust him, and also did not speak to him on the phone.²¹⁹⁰ He did, however, go to Mokom father at Caporal Chef Madier's house, close to Hotel La Vallée where Bien-Heureux Danboy lived with Madier, to try to get money, while P-2673 still lived in Yaoundé and before moving to Garam-Bouläi.²¹⁹¹ When eventually giving him money, Mokom father told P-2673 that he should go to Garam-Boulai and someone would take him across to Bouar, giving him the contact details of a person in Garam-Boulai.²¹⁹² Mokom father said ‘everyone’ was going to Bouar and once there, they would join the soldiers who were there with the Anti-Balaka.²¹⁹³ P-2673 knew of two people who had already crossed over to Bouar, a sous-lieutenant named Kambasseo and a son of Bozizé’s elder brother named Hector Emtenu, both of whom he was in contact with; he later learned that Didier Danboy and Jules Pessere also crossed to Bouar.²¹⁹⁴ Mokom father did not speak to P-2673 about ammunition or weapons.²¹⁹⁵ According to P-2673, he did not get involved with the Anti-Balaka once he went to Bouar.²¹⁹⁶

901. Adrien Poussou reiterated that Mr Ngaïssona reported during a meeting of FROCCA that he had been in contact with the former FACA and PG elements and others,²¹⁹⁷ with the ‘children’ out in the field who were motivated, and that he told Adrien Poussou and Yvon Songuet that he was financing and spent a great deal of money on the upkeep of the soldiers out in the field – to the witness, it logically followed from this that Mr Ngaïssona was part of the armed struggle for taking power back.²¹⁹⁸
902. P-0974 testified that during a meeting with Catherine Samba-Panza following Michel Djotodia’s resignation, Mr Ngaïssona explained that although he had been out of the country during the fighting, he had still been active with the movement, had organised meetings with former FACA members from Cameroon and been in telephone contact with people in the provinces for the birth of the movement.²¹⁹⁹ No one contradicted Mr Ngaïssona as regards the mentioned contacts.²²⁰⁰
903. P-2673 testified that Eugène Ngaïkosset, part of François Bozizé’s entourage and of Mr Ngaïssona’s entourage had already crossed over to Zongo before the 2014 events; when they were in Yaoundé, P-2673 heard that he had come to meet with Mr Ngaïssona and was seeking to go to Garam-Boulai at the border with Cameroon.²²⁰¹ P-2673 learned after that Ngaïkosset had arrived in Yaoundé and met with Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom,²²⁰² in October.²²⁰³

904. Furthermore, the Chamber recalls its discussion above regarding the prior recorded testimony of P-1847 introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules.²²⁰⁴ The question of Mr Ngaïssona's activities in liaising and coordinating in 2013 was one of the topics regarding which P-1847 deviated in his in-court testimony from his prior recorded testimony. Bearing in mind its above considerations, the Chamber has relied on P-1847's prior recorded testimony on this matter within the context of the other evidence before it.
905. Specifically, in his prior recorded testimony, P-1847 stated that Mr Ngaïssona was fully involved in the process of coordinating the Anti-Balaka actions even before his return to the country, and he continued to do so once officially designated coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.²²⁰⁵
906. P-1847 also stated, in his prior recorded testimony, that Mr Ngaïssona stayed at François Bozizé's residence at the Golf in Yaoundé following the latter's departure for South Sudan, and expressly communicated orders and attack plans to Anti-Balaka in the CAR via the telephone.²²⁰⁶ In this statement, P-1847 also explained that coordination meant the 'Anti-Balaka north' reporting directly to Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom, and taking directions and instructions from them.²²⁰⁷ Further, P-1847 stated that he heard from some Anti-Balaka elements that Bozizé called Florent Kema to give him orders via Mr Ngaïssona or Bernard Mokom.²²⁰⁸ In his prior recorded testimony, P-1847 said that Mr Ngaïssona controlled and verified if the money which he transferred to the combatants had arrived and was used for the intended purposes, such as buying of ammunition.²²⁰⁹

907. Bearing in mind the above considerations regarding the introduction of P-1847's prior recorded testimony pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules, the Chamber finds not credible P-1847's claims in court that this concerned the period after 2014 when Mr Ngaïssona was already coordinator, while before December 2013, Mokom and Wapounaba would have coordinated Anti-Balaka activities and issued orders to the Anti-Balaka at the border,²²¹⁰ or his general denial that Mr Ngaïssona would have given orders to the elements on the ground.²²¹¹ This assessment is further underscored by P-1847 indeed confirming, in court, that he heard from Severin and Éric that Ngaïkosset had discussions with Mr Ngaïssona and received some money to go back on the road so he could go back to Bangui and help the fighters who were fighting there.²²¹²

908. The Chamber further notes Mr Ngaïssona's knowledge and information in relation to attacks in the provinces,²²¹³ as well as in discussions preceding the attack in Bangui on 5 December 2013.²²¹⁴

909. P-1719 testified that when they were at the border, they clandestinely organised meeting and amongst all the members of the group, they knew that there was a coordination or directorate with a coordinator in Yaoundé, and they also knew that the coordinator of operations during that period was in Zongo, in Congo; this was known to everyone.²²¹⁵ There were several personalities in Yaoundé and the person he considered as the leading personality, the captain of the ship, was Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom, whom he met in Yaoundé and who gave him money for his transportation costs to the border; apart from those two individuals, they did not have any allegiance towards any other person and were not answerable to other people regarding what was happening in the field.²²¹⁶ According to P-1719, there was a provisional office before the arrival of Mr Ngaïssona in Bangui, each village, each prefecture had an operational local coordination; P-1719 heard people talk about Sébastien Wenezoui, at that time Yagouzou, Kamezolari and Maxime Mokom were all in Bangui.²²¹⁷

910. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that when Mr Ngaïssona came back to Bangui, the witness saw that he knew the Anti-Balaka very well; he realised that Mr Ngaïssona had links with the military because he saw him with FACA; for example, when Mr Ngaïssona called Alfred Legrand Ngaya on the day of the meeting with the transitional government in January 2014, the witness went to his house and saw him with Konaté – it was clear that they knew each other from before that day.²²¹⁸ Mr Ngaïssona was very popular and generous, but Alfred Legrand Ngaya did not know if he had contact with the Anti-Balaka leaders while he was in exile.²²¹⁹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya went to meet Mr Ngaïssona at the airport when he returned; the whole neighbourhood was really overjoyed at his return; there was a crowd of people at his house celebrating his return.²²²⁰ Everyone knew that Mr Ngaïssona was an influential person, had relationships, was close to Bozizé and a public personality.²²²¹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that his exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona while the latter was in Cameroon were not because the latter was involved in any organisation but because he was the former minister of youth when the witness was director general of the youth, and they were looking for some assistance and Mr Ngaïssona had permanent contact with the lawyer of FROCCA.²²²² During the meeting, Alfred Legrand Ngaya's impression was that Wenezoui and Ngremangou were amongst the main leaders of the Anti-Balaka at that time, but he did not know and could not decide the level of responsibility they had in the movement.²²²³

911. Some witnesses testified that in 2013, they did not necessarily hear about Mr Ngaïssona being active in liaising and coordination activities, but rather Maxime Mokom.²²²⁴ At the same time, P-0884 also said in this context that Mr Ngaïssona was in a group in Cameroon which often worked with Maxime Mokom and he always told P-0884 that ‘his children’ were advancing towards Bangui, but he himself never personally went to the field – but he had constant and regular contact with Maxime Mokom, in Cameroon they set up a team to coordinate activities.²²²⁵
912. Bearing in mind the above, and on the basis of the evidence as outlined, the Chamber therefore finds not credible the claim of D30-4914 that he was ‘very surprised’ when Mr Ngaïssona was chosen as coordinator as he had never heard of Mr Ngaïssona in connection with the Anti-Balaka before 2014.²²²⁶ Similarly, Sali Issa’s apparent attempt to account for all of Mr Ngaïssona’s activities during at least two weeks during which they would have worked together on football matters²²²⁷ is inapt to impact the Chamber’s conclusions on Mr Ngaïssona’s liaising and coordination activities while away from the CAR in 2013.
913. Based on the evidence as outlined above, the Chamber finds that Mr Ngaïssona liaised with persons that, at that time or later, were involved in efforts to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power and bring François Bozizé back to power.

Liaising with groups in the border area

914. The evidence before the Chamber, as further outlined below, shows that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom travelled to the border area between Cameroon and the CAR with a view to liaising with groups that were to engage in armed efforts with the then-ultimate aim of bringing François Bozizé back to power.

915. P-2673 knew from contacts with people close to Mokom father, such as Kevin Kpéfio, who was trusted by Mokom father and his circle, and it was confirmed to him by Achille who was in Bertoua, that Mokom father visited a military camp in Bertoua to give the soldiers money for food.²²²⁸ In September or October 2013,²²²⁹ Ndale went to see Achille in Bertoua and they then travelled to Yaoundé to meet Mr Ngaïssona, and P-2673 accompanied Achille, who told him that he had come with Ndale, to the residence for the meeting, but did not attend.²²³⁰ When Achille later telephoned him, he told him that people were criticising him for mixing with P-2673, for this reason, P-2673 did not ask Achille about what was discussed during the meeting.²²³¹ P-2673 further stated that Alesco, a colonel and commissaire in the police, and Achille are related and shared information.²²³² Achille said to P-2673 that he had men in Gobere and in Bossangoa.²²³³ Ndale and Achille were close and went to Bertoua together if called to a meeting.²²³⁴ Achille did not go to the field to fight.²²³⁵ Achille's small group was later with Mr Ngaïssona in Boy-Rabe when the latter returned to Bangui.²²³⁶
916. While P-2673 was in Yaoundé, Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father also went to Garam-Boulai with the 'chiefs of the archers', referring to Achille and Ndale who had their own group that used to fight poachers and highway bandits.²²³⁷ Ndale was the chief of the archers in Bouar, and Achille in Bossangoa, they used arrows to fight the 'aragina' and were called on to support the Anti-Balaka.²²³⁸ According to P-2673, the archers worked for Mr Ngaïssona.²²³⁹

²²²⁹ While the prior recorded testimony indicated the meeting to be in September (see P-2673 Statement, CAR-OTP-2127-6435-R01, at 6456, para. 134), P-2673 no longer remembered the date during his testimony, clarifying that it was probably in October, not before the fighting in Gaga, Bouca and Bossangoa (see P-2673: T-042, p. 4, line 10 – p. 5, line 7). Fono or Achille gave P-2673 the information about Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona going to the border to meet the archers.²²⁴⁰ Achille told P-2673 on the phone that Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father had met with Achille and Ndale in Bertoua, where Bozizé's close protection guards had fled to.²²⁴¹ Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom spent two or three days at the border to mobilise the archers and then returned.²²⁴² Achille had taken refuge in Bertoua, but Ndale remained in Bouar; Achille told P-2673 he would return to Bossangoa to reassemble them.²²⁴³ That is when they were provided with ammunition in Bouar.²²⁴⁴ Achille told P-2673 that Mokom was not going back to Yaoundé, he was supposed to stay at Garam-Boulai, meet and mobilise the archers and have everyone gather in Bouar, and Rod told P-2673 that Mokom took all his luggage and was going to leave for Bertoua and in Garam-Boulai to talk to the Anti-Balaka to mobilise them to fight, and then Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona returned to Yaoundé.²²⁴⁵ Jean Alesco Bouragoro informed P-2673 what Mr Ngaïssona was doing and that he went to Bertoua, accompanied by Mokom father; he went to Bertoua to meet the military and make promises that he would give them money to go to Garam-Boulai.²²⁴⁶

917. P-2841 testified that the archers were those who fought with bows and arrows to protect their cattle, they also used gris-gris and other things, and Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father wanted to approach them to see if they could also be used in the resistance, as at the time there were no Anti-Balaka in the north-west of the country.²²⁴⁷ Bouar is about 100 kilometres from the Cameroonian border, so they needed a first group to 'clean the ground' and then allow others to intervene – at the time, the situation in Bouar was very difficult and Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom wanted to potentially organise the movement there.²²⁴⁸ P-2841 did not visit Bertoua or Garam-Boulai at that point.²²⁴⁹ According to P-2841, the 'rapprochement' concerned more Mokom and the archers, they were not really talking about Mr Ngaïssona.²²⁵⁰ Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father, both Gbaya and close to François Bozizé who wanted to return to constitutional order, were in exile in Cameroon and wanted to organise a resistance movement in the CAR.²²⁵¹ According to what P-2841 heard, Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father went to the border with ammunition and medicine for the archers in Bouar and Berbérati.²²⁵² P-2841 was not on the ground, did not see Mr Ngaïssona in Bertoua or at the border, and did not know how or by what means he went there, how the ammunition was taken or how much of it, or who received the ammunition or medicine.²²⁵³ Rod, with whom P-2841 exchanged in these messages, knew about all this because he was amongst the civilians and military who had fled to Yaoundé, he took part in meetings, and according to P-2841, the information he provided was 80-90% reliable.²²⁵⁴

918. P-2841 was informed through messages that Levy Yakété was in Yaoundé with Rod, while Mr Ngaïssona was on mission, he was supposed to go to the border to make contact with the archers from Bouar, but Rod did not say what the nature of Mr Ngaïssona's visit was and P-2841 stated it was possible when asked whether Mr Ngaïssona travelled frequently as president of the football federation.²²⁵⁵ Kokaté was like a liaison person, contacted elements to mobilise them, he had a lot of connections in the military and in politics.²²⁵⁶

919. Further in this regard, the Chamber recalls its discussion of P-1847's prior recorded testimony being introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules.²²⁵⁷ The Chamber has thus considered P-1847's prior recorded testimony, including his evidence as set out below, together with the other evidence before it.

confirmed to P-1847 that he met Bernard Mokom several times.²²⁵⁸ Mr Ngaïssona moved between Douala, Garam-Boulaï and Bertoua to meet former soldiers, PG that had fled to the zone, all guards were in Bertoua under lead of Colonel Ngboya.²²⁵⁹

921. P-1847 also stated that Bernard Mokom stayed in Cameroon while others went to France to meet Bozizé, and coordinated the actions and messages in relation to the other FACA elements that had stayed in the CAR; he gave them orders, asking them to regroup to counter-attack the Seleka positions; Dedane talked to P-1847 about all this.²²⁶⁰ Some soldiers were at Beloko and Bouar and were very favourable to subversive military attacks.²²⁶¹ Achille Godonam was with several elements in a refugee camp in Cameroon and then sent several elements to the CAR to fight, with financing he had received from Bernard Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona for this purpose; these elements had makeshift weapons which they had in part from before, but they also bought additional makeshift arms with the funds transmitted by Bernard Mokom.²²⁶² Achille Godonam told P-1847 that he took part in meetings led by Bernard Mokom and received orders from him, in particular to regroup his men to attack the Seleka; P-1847 saw him two or three times in Yaoundé, in particular when he came from Garam-Boulaï to meet Bernard Mokom in Odja neighbourhood.²²⁶³ Achille Godonam came to Yaoundé with Adambou Ndale, who called himself ‘General’ and was the leader of the Anti-Balaka in Bouar; they wanted to meet Bernard Mokom but did not know where he lived, they asked P-1847 who showed it to them.²²⁶⁴ They spent a day with him and then went to see Danzoumi in Douala; his brother Sani Yalo was also in Douala; they organised meetings with Achille Godonam and Ndale.²²⁶⁵ Following these meetings, the latter two received some money from Danzoumi to be able to organise to attack; P-1847 heard this from Adambou Ndale, who said the objective was very clear: organise on the ground to attack the Seleka.²²⁶⁶ Bernard Mokom had proclaimed himself coordinator of the Anti-

Balaka that were at the border between Cameroon and the CAR, and also those on the ground in the CAR, he said so to Ndale and Godonam, in particular when he was unhappy about them meeting Danzoumi in Douala; he said he coordinated all Anti-Balaka activities and should be addressed.²²⁶⁷

922. P-1847 stated that the Anti-Balaka coordinators that lived in Yaoundé did not get along with the Anti-Balaka coordinators that lived in Douala, which led to information leaking and young people benefiting to take money to execute attack plans; there was no particular entity that put these two groups in touch; those in Douala fought for Michel Djotodia's withdrawal, while those in Yaoundé had as main goal that François Bozizé returns to power, meaning return to the constitutional order.²²⁶⁸ At the beginning, these two groups were together in their goal to chase out the Seleka, and it was following the demands of the Yaoundé group insisting on the retour to François Bozizé that the split occurred.²²⁶⁹ When François Bozizé was in Cameroon, the Anti-Balaka were not very well organised; P-1847 thought that they really started organising structurally towards October 2013, because that was the first time that Achille Godonam and Ndale were contacted by Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom to accelerate the struggle.²²⁷⁰

923. The Chamber does not consider the above evidence to be negated by the information provided by D30-4914, who said that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom never crossed the border at the Garam-Boulai side.²²⁷¹ Their crossing the border is indeed not suggested by the evidence, but rather that they went to the border area with a view to liaising with individuals of various groups. Further, other witnesses not hearing about Mr Ngaïssona or Bernard Mokom travelling to the border or being in contact with the 'archers' or Ndale²²⁷²

iv. Further activities in the border areas

924. As part of the communication and coordination activities, and further to the visits of Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom discussed above, the evidence before the Chamber shows that steps were taken in particular also in areas in Cameroon bordering the CAR, specifically Bertoua and Garam-Boulai,²²⁷⁴ which were location for refuge in particular of former members of the CAR security forces, including FACA and PG, as well as vantage point for planning an eventual return to the CAR.
925. For instance, the CAR Panel concluded that among those fleeing the violence since March 2013 were also around 150 former FACA who were duly disarmed and cantoned in sites in Bertoua and Douala, remaining in expectation of a return to the CAR once conditions for the reform of the army would have been put in place.²²⁷⁵
926. Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that an entire company of François Bozizé’s soldiers had fled to Bertoua, under Colonel Ngboya, and the witness contacted and warned him that it was not worthwhile for him to reorganise people to bring them back to the country under the pretext of bringing François Bozizé back to power.²²⁷⁶ Ngboya was the highest ranking officer heading the troops that had entered Cameroonian territory, so they were provided with his name at the Cameroonian ministry of defence and Jean-Jacques Demafouth tried to locate him and was told they were all in Bertoua; eventually, the witness managed to convince him to return to the CAR and he did.²²⁷⁷ 927. P-2673, who lived in Douala at the time, visited Bertoua once in early June, specifically Colonel Ngoya Emmanuel at the base.²²⁷⁸ Colonel Ngboya, who was in Bertoua with his elements, told P-2673 on the phone that he should not get mixed up with what was happening.²²⁷⁹ Ngboya left Bertoua for Yaoundé to meet Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom, but was arrested and taken to Yaoundé on his return, after which he returned to Bertoua.²²⁸⁰ P-2673 did not know if Mr Ngaïssona met with Gbangouma while at the border.²²⁸¹ Later, P-2673 told Alesco he would be going back to Garam-Boulai; the first time they went many people had been arrested, including Gbangouma, Lamkague, Pabandji, Wango, and after that they went back to Yaoundé.²²⁸² According to P-2673, Bozizé issued instructions to Mr Ngaïssona, who then passed them on to Mokom, and everything else that flowed from it, and Bozizé was aware of everything that happened; Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom had asked them to go to Garam-Boulai and once at that location they would be given the top.²²⁸³ Many FACA had gone to Garam-Boulai in advance of crossing over the border to the CAR, and when going there, one was supposed to contact a gendarme called Sabe, who had been to Yaoundé and had a meeting with Mr Ngaïssona, which he told P-2673 when they saw each other at the station in Yaoundé.²²⁸⁴ Sabe arrived in November.²²⁸⁵ P-2673 also gave the impression that he once met Sabe in the context of which Mr Ngaïssona phoned P-2673 to find out what was going on.²²⁸⁶ P-2673 gave the impression that they met him, Aaron Ouilibona/Wilibona, Rocco, and Mokom.²²⁸⁷ Following this meeting, Mr Ngaïssona gave an instruction that everyone should meet Sabe in Garam-Boulai; Aaron Ouilibona told P-2673 that Mr Ngaïssona had given this instruction.²²⁸⁸ According to P-2673, many soldiers went to see Sabe, Rocca Mokom and Aaron Ouilibona went to find his house.²²⁸⁹ In Garam-Boulai, P-2673 met Gbangouma, Fleury Pabandji, Lamkague, Kevin Kpefio, Steve Yambété and

Juvenal.²²⁹⁰ P-2673 sometimes went to Sabe's place to chat, eat, spend some time; Sabe already had elements from before this time, he was brigade chief in Kounde near Garam Boulai.²²⁹¹ P-2673, who was in Garam-Boulai between end of November 2013 and January 2014, was told around this time by Kempo, a civilian from Miskine, that they were preparing themselves and soldiers had left Garam-Boulai to fight in Baboua, led by Armel Emtanou, Bozizé's nephew.²²⁹² Some civilians and some Anti-Balaka were involved, as well as Azou Mandji and someone nicknamed Falli-Falli, a soldier.²²⁹³ Kempo also received money in Yaoundé before travelling to the border, P-2673 met Kempo when still in Garam-Boulai.²²⁹⁴ Kempo did not tell P-2673 that he had met with Mr Ngaïssona.²²⁹⁵ Aaron Ouilibona called P-2673 and asked him to join them, but he said he could not;²²⁹⁶ Ouilibona threatened him and called him a traitor.²²⁹⁷

928. In the context of the above, the Chamber considers immaterial that D30-4914 never saw Élysée Sabe getting instructions from Mr Ngaïssona, in particular bearing in mind that the witness stated not to know if the two were in contact.²²⁹⁸

929. P-1719 testified going to the border from Yaoundé with six people.²²⁹⁹ At the border, P-1719 called Azou Mandji, part of the presidential security, who took P-1719 to see Elysée Sabe (a gendarme), whom he knew quite well, and he explained the situation in the field to P-1719 who was able to get intelligence.²³⁰⁰ Other people from the CAR took him to see some others, Steve Yambété, Fylai Hervé, Kombo Juvenal, Seregaza Steve, Ouilibona, Zaparo Lili, Feindiro.²³⁰¹ Rocca Mokom, the younger brother of Maxime, was a civilian.²³⁰² At a debriefing the day after P-1719's arrival at the border, P-1719 asked Sabe whether they could get weapons to defend themselves, Sabe told him they had to be patient because there had been a promise about weapons; some soldiers already had their weapons, hidden in the CAR.²³⁰³ P-1719 asked because already in Yaoundé Mokom had told them that military materiel was available to carry out war at the border.²³⁰⁴ P-1719 initially found one team when arriving at the border, but he had ideas of the names of the fighters only after the attack of 10 January 2014, because initially these fighters mixed with the civilian population, and he only realised after the fighting that there were at least 200 individuals, including gendarmerie, FACA, some PG, and civilians.²³⁰⁵ Persons who went on the ground included those who came from Douala, Yaoundé and Bertoua, some from Bouar, some civilians from small localities close to the border.²³⁰⁶ To P-1719's knowledge, the person who paid the transportation costs of him and those with him, as well as those who preceded them and came after them, was the authority, Mr Ngaïssona, and Bernard Mokom.²³⁰⁷ Mokom had said some of their brothers had already arrived before them, and when they were in the field, people continued arriving from Yaoundé, these brothers said they came from Douala.²³⁰⁸

930. P-2232 stated that there was a point in Garam-Boulai and another point towards Kenzo until Berbérati where people were preparing themselves for the battle that would take place.²³⁰⁹ Bernard Mokom left the area and went to Yaoundé and two of his children, Télé, a soldier, and Rocco, were in the area.²³¹⁰ Aaron Caxis was in Amadagaza, Demowanset was in charge all the way to Berbérati, and in Garam-Boulai was also Mokom's younger brother Aaron, Chiki Chiki and Machin.²³¹¹ There was a military base in Bouar after the Seleka came to power, the armoury was almost destroyed and all the weapons taken away; at that time, one only needed to have some money to buy weapons; those who had hunting guns also got ammunitions from the other side of the border, particularly from Cameroon.²³¹² Those who were at the border posts got their supplies from Cameroon and the Bouar armoury, and from attacking the Seleka; those who received supplies from elsewhere were in Damara, Bossangoa, other locations.²³¹³

931. P-1847 testified that after initially taking the weapons which CAR military personnel wanted to take, the Cameroonian authorities also arrested some civilians and soldiers, held in Bertoua; after a while many of them were released.²³¹⁴ ‘Mbuya’ was put into barracks in the military camp Bertoua and free to move around.²³¹⁵ Koudemon aka ‘Bangouma’ was in the barracks.²³¹⁶ They were restricted to the area of Bertoua in the barracks from 2013 until 2014 after Michel Djotodia’s resignation.²³¹⁷ P-1847 agreed with the suggestion that Bozizé had around him several members of the FACA supporting the cause of his return to power, in position to advise him militarily speaking.²³¹⁸
932. P-0974 heard about local meetings that FACA had in Yaoundé and Bertoua, but he did not attend and did not know who did, he later heard from Mr Ngaïssona about a strategic meeting planned in Garoua-Boulai so that FACA from Cameroon and the CAR could attend, but the Cameroon intelligence found out about it.²³¹⁹
933. Assessing D30-4914 in this context, the Chamber notes the unclarities in his testimony. D30-4914, who was posted to the border in October 2013, stated he was in contact with people in Garam-Boulai who joined them, but he was never in contact with the FACA in Bertoua or Yaoundé, or with Mr Ngaïssona.²³²⁰ D30-4914 stated he had 350 people at the border, including FACA, PG, police, gendarmerie, civilians.²³²¹ Yet in his account D30-4914 is unclear about the timing, in first saying that the Anti-Balaka would have come to pass in December 2013-January 2014,²³²² while later saying his group would have formed around October/November 2013, followed by the claim it was from Djotodia’s stepping down onwards.²³²³ D30-4914 did not receive many additional elements from Cameroon, a minority came from the CAR, most of those people were just trying to get back to Bangui.²³²⁴ Rodrigue Bozizé came to the border and D30-4914 called him to tell him that he needed to return to Cameroon.²³²⁵ The uprising and movement at the border was not organised and no one coordinated them, but D30-4914 as experienced gendarme channelled the people to avoid chaos.²³²⁶ D30-4914 never heard of people in this group being instructed by some kind of authority to go there.²³²⁷ The people that joined them at the border paid for the trip themselves, D30-4914 never heard that it would have been paid for by Bernard Mokom or Mr Ngaïssona.²³²⁸ However, when asked how he knew this, the witness did not give any concrete source, which suggests that this was based on the witness's own interpretation.²³²⁹ Steve Yambete was no coordinator; D30-4914 was chief of staff at the border, Aaron Ouilibona was chief of operations, Zeregaza was also there; Machin Machin was not 'adjudant de compagnie', he did not lead a section.²³³⁰ There was a chain of command, tasks were given to soldiers that D30-4914 knew, each played their role; this structure was created by consensus in public, they were told 'From today onwards, if illegal acts are committed, you are the one responsible for punishing them. You should not kill, you should not steal', this was done in front of everyone.²³³¹ Never did Mr Ngaïssona, nor Bernard Mokom, call D30-4914 to give him any order whatsoever.²³³² D30-4914 refuted the suggestion that there would have been a general staff in Yaoundé.²³³³ While organising his elements at the border, D30-4914 was not in contact with those organising the elements in Ouham, it was a popular movement and each organised in the zone in which they were; he was not in contact with Dedane, Richard Bejouane or Andjilo; there was no structure to say there was any chain of command.²³³⁴ D30-4914 did not have any information that people in his 350-group were in contact with individuals in Cameroon for the purposes of military operations; everything that had to do with military operations was under his command, none of the soldiers would have had dealings with people in Cameroon to join them.²³³⁵ Officers called D30-4914 to say that he was awaited in Boali, not as gendarme, but as leader; this regroupment initiative took place when the Seleka general in Bouar fell and the Seleka left; D30-4914 in the end did not go to Boali.²³³⁶

934. On the basis of the totality of the evidence before it, the Chamber considers D30-4914 blanket denials regarding any coordination or liaising activities between individuals or groups in Cameroon or the CAR not credible and for the most part self-serving. D30-4914 had a clear interest in minimising his own role in the events.

v. General contacts of individuals within and across borders

935. The evidence before the Chamber, as further outlined below, shows that in addition to Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom, many other individuals present in Cameroon were in contact with others both within Cameroon, as well as with those in Zongo and in the CAR, and thereby were in a position to provide further insights into the communications and activities at the time. This evidence illustrates that persons in different positions and locations communicated with others with ease and shared information, online or in person, in the period before December 2013, about the events and activities in CAR.

936. For instance, P-2673 testified that while he was in Cameroon, he was in contact with Francis Bozizé, asking him for money, but eventually not receiving any.²³³⁷ While in Douala, P-2673 also met FACA, before moving to Yaoundé and eventually to Garam-Bouläi, where he stayed from end of November 2013 to January 2014.²³³⁸ P-2673 further explained that Lamkague worked with Gbangouma for Danzoumi; Steve Yambété was in the DRC, then in

Douala, and found Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom in Yaoundé before going to Garam-Boulai; one of the three Emtenou was the son of the older brother of Bozizé and was in Bertoua, fighting until Boali, while Hector Emtenou was in Yaoundé, came to find Danboy and Kambassio and they went towards Bouar; Armel was preparing for battle in Baboua.²³³⁹ Didier Danboy was with Mr Ngaïssona in the Golf area, Emtenou, Danboy were in the group which left before the rest, to Bouar.²³⁴⁰

937. Joachim Kokaté testified that while in Yaoundé and Douala, he saw many Central Africans who had sought refuge, soldiers and civilians, he met a number of soldiers and had telephone contact with others, with some regularly.²³⁴¹ For example, Joachim Kokaté had telephone contact with Tandor Lamkague and also saw him once in Douala.²³⁴² Joachim Kokaté also called with Semdiro, who was in Yaoundé, but they did not meet, and according to Joachim Kokaté they did not discuss anything related to operations in the field or activities concerning preparations for an attack.²³⁴³ Joachim Kokaté also was in contact with Levy Yakété in Cameroon and France,²³⁴⁴ and with Kevin Kpefio in Yaoundé, a KNK youth who, according to the witness, was ‘all the time’ in contact with Mr Ngaïssona.²³⁴⁵ Joachim Kokaté also met Thierry Lengbe in France in 2013, though he did not recall if he met him in Cameroon in November 2013, but Lengbe came to Cameroon frequently.²³⁴⁶
938. P-0884 testified that he started being in contact with the people in Cameroon after his return to Bangui as of August, September, as they called him to ask what had happened in August in relation to the demonstration he had organised.²³⁴⁷ The first person who contacted P-0884 was Bernard Mokom and later in September Mr Ngaïssona called him, as did Lamkague.²³⁴⁸

Mr Ngaïssona rang him saying they had seen P-0884 on television and that he had saved lives, which caused people to get in touch with him.²³⁴⁹

939. Jean-Jacques Demafouth was part of a mission sent by Tiangaye to Congo and Cameroon.²³⁵⁰ Jean-Jacques Demafouth heard, for example, conversations in which François Bozizé contacted some European friends and asked them to help him organise the Anti-Balaka, conversations wherein he asked soldiers who had remained within the CAR to help the Anti-Balaka, and they also knew which personalities left Bangui to meet him there, such as a former minister, Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona.²³⁵¹ The meetings took place in Bozizé's hotel but, according to Jean-Jacques Demafouth, Mr Ngaïssona had the capacity to create an organisation to defend the regime which had just been defeated even without seeing François Bozizé.²³⁵² When the witness arrived in Cameroon, he was indeed there, and the prosecutor of Bangui was supposed to arrive in Cameroon with an arrest warrant for him and two or three other persons.²³⁵³ At that time they knew that the Anti-Balaka were forming into a proper structure with real leaders in Cameroon.²³⁵⁴ As regards these leaders, they had been given the name of Lin Banoukepa, Mr Ngaïssona, Mokom, and some lower-rank soldiers.²³⁵⁵ They were also informed that there were meetings at the CAR embassy in Cameroon, to support the Anti-Balaka and re-organisation of the movement.²³⁵⁶ Jean-Jacques Demafouth

The witness explained that they worked closely with the Congolese intelligence services that provided intelligence on the conduct and behaviour of their fellow countrymen, including on weapons they had kept on the national territory before crossing or brought in, and afterwards in Cameroon the Cameroonian intelligence services explained that they had the largest number of weapons, some 2000 which had been collected and which the witness saw, including military-type (collective) weapons, and after this, they received the same information from the Chadian intelligence services; Cameroon provided information as to what François Bozizé was doing, the hotel he lived at, as it could eavesdrop on telephone communications and they gave them ('us') these conversations to listen to (see P-2328: T-046, p. 83, line 12 – p. 86, line 3).

did not know who participated, but they were told that their military attaché at the embassy in Yaoundé was organising the meeting in favour of the Anti-Balaka.²³⁵⁷

940. Nicolas Tiangaye testified that the Anti-Balaka were organised and had military leaders on the ground as well as political/financial leaders abroad, referring to François Bozizé and Mr Ngaïssona.²³⁵⁸ The witness was aware of an audio recording from beginning January 2014,²³⁵⁹ around the time at which Mr Ngaïssona returned to the CAR, intercepted by the intelligence services, in which François Bozizé gave instructions to the Anti-Balaka on actions to be undertaken, and regarding which Nicolas Tiangaye opined that one could understand that François Bozizé did not approve of the slippages and excesses committed by the Anti-Balaka, blaming them for the acts of violence against civilian populations.²³⁶⁰
941. The audio recording of this conversation, which is available to the Chamber, shows Bozizé asking what is happening, what exactly ‘they’ are doing and which mistakes they are making.²³⁶¹ Bozizé’s interlocutor states that the Sangaris asked them (‘us’) to billet elements in a single space, stay calm and not conduct military operations and that he (‘I’) transmits those messages but that once gone, ‘these children’ never respect advice.²³⁶² He continues that he had the opportunity to meet all leaders and asked them to directly give advice to their elements and ensure that it has impact, in which way ‘these children’ would be afraid and eventually respect advice, otherwise at this moment ‘total chaos’ (désordre total).²³⁶³ Bozizé says they, the leaders, need to reunite and take firm, strong measures in collaboration with the ‘whites’, that those who misbehave are to be executed, asks why they want to spoil all the good work accomplished, that they have done something great, saved their fellow citizens, and now everything is in the final phase, asks what they gain from getting themselves into trouble, that it will be said that all Seleka elements billeted and only Anti-Balaka are destroying country and that in the end instead of the Seleka it will be Anti-Balaka prosecuted at the ICC, that they ('we') defended them on 'the waves' and other media saying they were provoked by the Seleka who killed their families for which reason they revolted and now they put themselves in trouble?²³⁶⁴ He continues that the leaders need to take measures necessary to withdraw elements towards PK22 and other surrounding PK to better control them and that undisciplined elements who want to create all kinds of trouble need to be killed by Central African forces or French forces, that is the only solution.²³⁶⁵ He says that 'we' are following you and will return soon, but when they return it would be said to be faced with undisciplined elements, that they have to stop with this behaviour, and he does not want to hear about it anymore.²³⁶⁶ Further he says to regroup respectful and disciplined elements and those who do not want to be disciplined just have to be shot in the town concerned and it will be their problem.²³⁶⁷ He reiterates that they did something great and they should listen to their leaders, only the final phase is to be done, and that after the final conclusion they would be first ones to benefit, and yet they are in the process of ruining everything.²³⁶⁸ He says they are all children of the country and fought for the country, that they covered a distance of 100, 200, 300, 400 km before arriving and accomplishing great work for Central African people and that this must not be ruined, nothing must be destroyed, otherwise what would the international opinion think.²³⁶⁹ He reiterates to regroup elements and withdraw them far from Bangui, to take measures and discuss them with the whites from the French army, leaders of African forces to prevent any repetition of such acts; asks if they did not leave their villages from far to Bangui for a good cause and what their reward would be if they ruin everything.²³⁷⁰ The unidentified individual informs that the following day he would have a concertation meeting with the MISCA general and members of delegations based in M'Poko, asking for advice to know what to say.²³⁷¹ Bozizé says that the main subject needs to be how interlocutors can help mastering Anti-Balaka, but for the rest that since he does not know the agenda cannot give any advice.²³⁷² He reiterates to control the

Anti-Balaka and that if overwhelmed to ask Central African or French forces to organise patrols to arrest and detain them.²³⁷³

942. The Chamber disagrees with the suggestion of the Ngaïssona Defence that this audio recording does not allow the inference of François Bozizé's involvement with the Anti-Balaka.²³⁷⁴ It is clear from the way in which François Bozizé criticised his interlocutor that he wanted the Anti-Balaka to behave in a certain way, and not another. It is equally clear that he gives clear instructions on what should be done in the situation at hand. That François Bozizé would have told Aurélien Llorca that he made the call on instruction of the US State Department to prevent further violence²³⁷⁵ does not distract from this conclusion, it rather reinforces the impression that François Bozizé held, at that time, a certain authority over the Anti-Balaka which would have put him in a position to convince them of a certain course of action.
943. P-1847 testified that the relationship between Levy Yakété and Mr Ngaïssona began in Cameroon, not in Bangui, he did not know what their relationship was in Bangui.²³⁷⁶ P-1847 was in touch with other Central Africans that had also fled the coup at the time, both in Douala and in the capital, at different times, people of different backgrounds, civil society, civilians, government, military.²³⁷⁷ The military that he met who came to Bozizé were part from the general bodyguards, one of them came with him, there were Semdiro, Bangouma, Nontegé.²³⁷⁸ Corporal Severin Namkoisse was one of François Bozizé's security who communicated with P-1847 and gave him information on brothers in arms who had stayed in the CAR, saying some were hidden on the hill at Boy-Rabe and others in Berbérati.²³⁷⁹ Vincent Wapounaba was the bodyguard of Bozizé.²³⁸⁰ Adamou Ndale was not a military, he came with one of P-1847's cousins, Achille Godonam when they were on their way to Douala.²³⁸¹ P-1847 did not encounter Yalo Danzoumi, his cousin Achille knew him, when they went through P-1847 to say hello, they said they were going to see Danzoumi.²³⁸² Sani Yalo, a Central African businessman, also crossed to come to Cameroon, but P-1847 did not really know him like that.²³⁸³ Fred Serefio told P-1847 that Godonam was in permanent communication with Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father; P-1847 was convinced they were preparing the attack of 5 December 2013.²³⁸⁴ Serefio also told P-1847 that Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father were a lot in contact with chief sergeant Dedane, who was on the ground in Bossangoa; Serefio lived in Yaoundé but was constantly in contact with Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father; they often met at the Golf residence of Bozizé.²³⁸⁵

944. P-0876 commented on a number of emails he exchanged with others at the relevant time. In an email of 2 July 2013 sent to ‘lyakete’, P-0876 asked for the addressee’s phone number.²³⁸⁶ P-0876 explained that he wanted to meet Levy Yakété, but the latter was extremely cautious and it took a while before he answered.²³⁸⁷ Given Yakété’s high level of involvement, and P-0876 already thinking of going to Bangui, he still thought that if he could talk with the leaders from Paris and convince them to abstain from going down the path of war, he could have spared him the trip, but Yakété never wanted to meet.²³⁸⁸
945. In an email of 14 September 2013 sent to ‘tomontaigne’,²³⁸⁹ P-0876 mentions that work progresses well ‘du coté de nos amis de l’opération boali [sic]’, whereas ‘du coté de nos éléments (faca) il nous faut les doter en puce et crédits de communication; ils sont au nombre de 1694 alors je suis pratiquement le seul à y donner corps [sic]’.²³⁹⁰ He further asks for everyone’s contribution ‘pour arriver à mettre les éléments à l’aise, les opérations sont prévues avant la fin de ce mois pour neutraliser bangui en premier lieu car le congolais à donné son accord de principe [sic]’.²³⁹¹ The Chamber notes the explanation provided by P-0876 and considers it does not stand against the text of the email read by itself, as well as within the context of other evidence before the Chamber. First, P-0876 stated that the 1,694 elements mentioned were French troops in Bangui,²³⁹² whereas later stating that these were FACA who remained in Bangui, many of whom had fled.²³⁹³ The email itself makes clear that the number of 1,694 refers to ‘FACA’, that these were considered to be ‘their elements’, and that contribution was sought to put these elements at ease as operations were planned for the end of the month. This, in turn, makes clear that the email would not have been concerned about French troops ‘neutralising’ Bangui because of rumours that COCORA and COAC would enter Bangui soon.²³⁹⁴ It is similarly unlikely, given the widespread information available at the time about self-defence groups forming and Anti-Balaka attacks in the provinces starting by early September 2013,²³⁹⁵ that P-0876 would not yet have been aware of the Anti-Balaka at the time of this email.²³⁹⁶ Further, it appears illogical for the email to state that contributions are needed to put the elements at ease, if the money for SIM cards and credit would indeed have been for exclusively young people who would be P-0876’s informants.²³⁹⁷

946. This email was followed by a further message on 23 September 2013, which mentions waiting for reinforcement from Boali, and states that the ‘children’ wait for being given communication credit, and if they had this, they could provide real-time information.²³⁹⁸ It also mentions FACA mobilising ‘day and night’ for the operations.²³⁹⁹ Bearing in mind the considerations above, the Chamber does not consider P-0876’s explanation that the reinforcement would concern French forces to coincide with the actual content of the message.²⁴⁰⁰

947. P-0876 further exchanged with ‘tomontaigne’ in the context of him organising press conferences to appeal for the mobilisation of the Central African citizens faced with the international community so as to demand the resignation of Djotodia, but people started being afraid of the possible Seleka reactions.²⁴⁰¹

948. Also P-2841 testified that many people fled but kept contacts in Bangui, during this time Anti-Balaka – both civilians and military – found it quite easy to organise, a little at a time, both in the provinces and in Bangui, through phone communication and messages.²⁴⁰² According to P-2841, the telephone network is quite reliable but variable, and people use it ordinarily; not all provinces have network coverage, but there are areas where antennas might be used and then connectivity is established.²⁴⁰³ P-2841 stated that when Michel Djotodia came to power, many people fled Bangui, including many KNK youth with whom he stayed in touch; he was in touch with Central Africans who had left for Brazzaville, Chad and Cameroon.²⁴⁰⁴ He received information about what was happening on the ground from Rod Larry Martial Gallaut, Prince Lakouetene, Doguela, Maxime Mokom, Kevin Kpefio and many others.²⁴⁰⁵ P-2841 was not in contact with Mr Ngaïssona while the latter was in Cameroon.²⁴⁰⁶ P-2841 was in contact with Francis Bozizé who thought P-2841 was well placed in case he wanted to ask something about events in the CAR, as P-2841 obtained a lot of information from many people, including groups of friends, military, civilians, colleagues and students; Prince was a good source of information as he speaks Arabic well and was in contact with the Seleka's military hierarchy.²⁴⁰⁷ P-2841 agreed that in hindsight, some of the information he exchanged or received turned out to be false,²⁴⁰⁸ and that a lot was not always verified, but he also stated that one cross-checked information with someone within the network to see what it was worth.²⁴⁰⁹

949. In addition, the Chamber has received a significant amount of Facebook messenger exchanges. As outlined above,²⁴¹⁰ the Chamber has treated this evidence with caution and assessed it specifically in the context of other evidence before it, including that provided by witnesses. To the extent the Chamber has considered such evidence in the context of its holistic assessment of the evidence before it, it notes the evidence of P-2843,²⁴¹¹ P-2673,²⁴¹² P-2841,²⁴¹³ D30-4848²⁴¹⁴ and P-1719,²⁴¹⁵ which gives further context to some individuals exchanging messages who testified before the Chamber.

950. In the view of the Chamber, the evidence as outlined above shows that individuals in Cameroon communicated with each other as well as with other persons in different countries with ease, sharing information online or in person, in the period before December 2013, about the events and activities in the CAR.

ii. DRC (Zongo)

951. In addition to various individuals seeking refuge in Cameroon as outlined above, the Chamber has heard evidence on persons, including in particular those that would become involved in efforts to fight against the Seleka, crossing to the DRC, specifically Zongo, located just across from Bangui on the other side of the Oubangui river. Several witnesses testified about crossing the river to Zongo, the groups and individuals present there, and their contacts among each other or with other groups and individuals in other locations.

a. Individuals in Zongo

952. Mr Yekatom was one of the individuals who crossed to Zongo in the months following the Seleka takeover.²⁴¹⁶ The Chamber notes in this regard the suggestion that Maxime Mokom would have been at the origin of the arrest of Mr Yekatom,²⁴¹⁷ leading to animosity between the two, which is further addressed below. Of relevance in the current context is that Mr Yekatom did cross to Zongo at some point during the Seleka regime, and some time thereafter returned to the CAR.²⁴¹⁸
953. Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda was another individual crossing the river to Zongo, likely in September 2013.²⁴¹⁹ He had heard that he was accused by Michel Djotodia as having been responsible, alongside Eugène Ngaikosset and Hervé Ganazoui who both worked at the PG, for a detonation planned to disrupt Michel Djotodia's oath-taking ceremony.²⁴²⁰ The witness crossed the river in a canoe sent by Hervé Ganazoui and paid for by himself, with two others, both military.²⁴²¹
954. P-2232 described crossing over to the DRC together with the sons of Bozizé like Francis, Rodrigue, Kevin, Joseph known as Jojo, and Papi Bozizé, Gladys Bozizé, Ngaikosset Claude, Ngaikosset Eugène joined them later, Maxime Mokom, Nico Anagaza, and some military officers who were part of Bozizé's security, including two Muslims, one called Hissène.²⁴²² P-2232 did not cross with Fred Kossi, a soldier who joined his colleagues and

The Chamber notes that the swearing-in ceremony took place in August 2013 (see Press article, CAR-D29-0002-0078).

they travelled to Zongo together, but they all saw each other in Zongo.²⁴²³ When Hervé Ganazoui returned to Zongo, Maxime Mokom and Claude Ngaikosset were both there, after Mr Yekatom's arrival in Zongo there was Habib Beina, and later Ngaikosset was taken to Kinshasa, so they were in Zongo with Mokom, Dokabona, Sami Bawa and others.²⁴²⁴

955. Brice Émotion Namsio fled to Zongo in early September 2013, after the Seleka had attacked Boy-Rabe on 20 August 2013, and stayed there until November 2013.²⁴²⁵
956. P-0889 crossed the Oubangui river by boat to the DRC one week after the attack on his house in April 2013 because he was afraid the Seleka might return to kill him, registered, and went to Mole refugee camp.²⁴²⁶
957. P-1839 fled to Zongo after her abduction by the Seleka, disguising herself as Muslim to protect herself, going back and forth between Zongo and the CAR to visit her family and buy goods.²⁴²⁷ According to P-1839, it was difficult to cross the river because there were Seleka at the port, though it was possible to cross from Hotel Oubangui as there was no Seleka position or post at the cement factory.²⁴²⁸
958. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined below shows that a variety of individuals fled to Zongo, in addition to civilians also, and in particular, members of the defence and security forces close to François Bozizé. Specifically, in addition to Mr Yekatom and the persons describing their crossing the Oubangui river to Zongo above, the persons in Zongo for certain

959. P-2050 visited Mole IDP camp in February 2014 and when crossing the Oubangui river to Bangui, the pilot called Ivon Kobilu explained to her how he helped Bozizé’s wife and family crossing the river to Zongo when they fled at the time of the coup.²⁴⁴⁷

960. It appears that other than civilians, including also members of François Bozizé’s party KNK,²⁴⁴⁸ in particular members of the FACA and PG found themselves in Zongo.²⁴⁴⁹ In this regard, the Chamber notes the testimony of P-0876, who stated that the group in Zongo was ‘le plus dur’, 80% of Bozizé’s PG.²⁴⁵⁰ The majority of the PG had crossed over following the coup.²⁴⁵¹

b. Communication and coordination within and across borders

961. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined below shows that Maxime Mokom, while in Zongo, liaised with individuals and their groups in the provinces, as well as with his father Bernard Mokom and other individuals based at the time in Cameroon with a view to coordinating steps taken in response to the violence of the Seleka and bringing François Bozizé back to power. Following Michel Djotodia’s resignation in 2014, and as the structure of the Anti-Balaka became more formalised, Maxime Mokom was appointed as operations coordinator of the movement.²⁴⁵²

962. Specifically, P-2232 testified that Maxime Mokom, Mr Ngaissona and Claude Ngaikosset knew each other before in Bangui because they all worked under François Bozizé, and

Ngaikosset and Mr Ngaïssona lived in the 4th arrondissement.²⁴⁵³ P-2232 confirmed that Claude Ngaikosset and Maxime Mokom were close and belonged to the same family.²⁴⁵⁴ Maxime Mokom was in a way the leader of all those who found themselves in Zongo, after Ngaikosset's departure to Kinshasa he was like the supervisor of everyone, delegating responsibility to Dokabona, who acted like the military leader and reported to Mokom.²⁴⁵⁵ Before Claude Ngaikosset was transferred to Kinshasa, he used to be in charge of publishing tracts that denounced Seleka's activities; he was subsequently arrested by the DRC intelligence services and brought to Kinshasa.²⁴⁵⁶

963. P-2232 described Maxime Mokom having contacts with people in Bangui and those outside the country, which was how he led the operation.²⁴⁵⁷ During the preparatory phase for the attack of 5 December, he sent for those who were on the other side of the river to coordinate the activities, bringing in officers to lead those who were not soldiers.²⁴⁵⁸ Each group had a ComZone,²⁴⁵⁹ and Mokom worked in collaboration with them to coordinate the operations all the way to the suburbs of Bangui, which was the time that those from the other side of the river joined them to carry out the attack of 5 December.²⁴⁶⁰ Mokom had many contacts in Bangui within the army, he received information, intelligence, provided and gave instructions.²⁴⁶¹ Maxime Mokom was always in touch with his brothers and father, providing them with information; if they had not had these reports, they could not do the coordination, and that is also why Maxime Mokom remained coordinator of operations when he returned to Bangui and his father was advisor.²⁴⁶² happening on the ground, he would call them to give instructions.²⁴⁶³ Mokom had three or four telephones and that was how he managed the movement.²⁴⁶⁴ For example, sometimes he asked about practical measures to be taken before an attack, about the ammunition available, provided guidance, could instruct to attack only armed and not unarmed persons – for the Anti-Balaka, anything that was Muslim was a target, that is how a lot of damage was caused on the ground.²⁴⁶⁵ Maxime had phone contacts with Andjilo on the ground on a very regular basis ever since they were in the bush right up to 5 December 2013,²⁴⁶⁶ they coordinated the operations together.²⁴⁶⁷ P-2232 thought had there not been good collaboration and understanding between them, Andjilo would not have travelled hundreds of kilometres.²⁴⁶⁸ In 2013, the Orange network functioned very well in the CAR, in Zongo there was no communication problem because all the networks were functional, practically all the Bangui networks were functional.²⁴⁶⁹ Ngremangou was in Bangui behind the airport, used to communicate with Mokom and was also in charge of military operations.²⁴⁷⁰ ‘Ndali’, a native from Bouar, was from time to time in touch with Mokom, P-2232 did not know if Mokom gave him orders.²⁴⁷¹

The Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence’s argument that the reliability and probative value of the notebook are ‘questionable’ in light of the ambiguity as to who the author of the notebook is (see Annex C to Ngaïssona Defence Response to ‘Prosecution’s submission of call data records and related evidence via the “bar table”’ (ICC-01/14-01/18-1296), 13 May 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1409-Conf-AnxC, p. 96). P-0446 initially stated that he would have written parts of this notebook (see P-0446: T-096, p. 24, line 25 – p. 28, line 3). However, he later clarified that he had in fact not written anything in this notebook (see P-0446: T-096, p. 56, line 25 – p. 61, line 2). Considering this clarification, and on the basis of P-2232’s testimony as to the provenance of this notebook (see P-2232: T-076, p. 22, line 20 – p. 24, line 5), the Chamber considers that no ambiguity remains which would put into doubt the reliability or probative value of this notebook.

965. P-0889 got to know Maxime through Junior, creating a Facebook account for him under user name Maxime Gawaka, and over time running more and more errands for him, and eventually staying at his house.²⁴⁷² Over time, P-0889 chatted less with him the more Mokom was on the phone, all the time, trying to get in contact with the Anti-Balaka.²⁴⁷³ P-0889 thought Mokom and Namsio also met in Zongo, although he did not think Namsio knew the role Mokom had in the Anti-Balaka.²⁴⁷⁴
966. P-0889 stated that Maxime Mokom had a family member, a marabout, who distributed all the gris-gris to the Anti-Balaka leaders, and this marabout gave him the contact of Dedan Danboy, an Anti-Balaka ComZone, who then put Mokom in touch with the other Anti-Balaka leaders.²⁴⁷⁵ P-0889 further said that Achille Godonam, a Gbaya from Bossangoa, put Maxime Mokom in touch with Anti-Balaka leaders, gathering the numbers of most of these youth in the villages.²⁴⁷⁶ In this context, Maxime Mokom started instilling in them the idea that they had to chase out the Seleka.²⁴⁷⁷ Mokom led the Anti-Balaka via telephone and was in permanent contact with the Anti-Balaka leaders in the CAR; he had set up information cells in the CAR and was informed when the Seleka left a certain road or which numbers of vehicles they would take to get somewhere; youth called him to warn him of the Seleka movements.²⁴⁷⁸ Mokom was constantly on the phone, all the leaders called him, every morning, and as he considered P-0889 as his deputy, he told him he wanted to train him for when he would not be around, putting him in touch with all the Anti-Balaka leaders.²⁴⁷⁹ Things started being structured.²⁴⁸⁰ Maxime Mokom had three telephones to communicate.²⁴⁸¹ Mokom would enquire about headcount, tell groups where to go and which other groups to assist, with them chasing Seleka from one village after the other and advancing towards Bangui.²⁴⁸² At the very beginning, when people started out in villages including Bossangoa, Zere, Ouham-Bac, Bouca, Benzambe, Maxime Mokom was not in contact with them, but Achille Godonam put them in touch once they defended their villages.²⁴⁸³ The Anti-Balaka leaders in contact with Mokom while they were in Zongo were Mokpem Guy-Gervais, Mazimbele, Ngaïbona Rodrigue ‘Andilo’, Ngaïbona Dieudonné (younger brother of Andilo), Dedane Danboy, Yagouzou Sylvestre, Florent Kema, Ndangba Théophile, Lebene Thierry ‘Douze Puissances’, Ouapoutou Benjamin, Mandago Alexis aka Sol-Sol, Aforo, Ouabiro Dan Jobrice, Zonie Alain, Konate Yvon, Beorofei Sylvain, Mahamat Hissen, Yapele Chrysostone ‘Chikichiki’, Godonam Achille, Dede Alexandre, Hyppolite Azounou Côme – P-0889 knew he was in touch with them because he was next to him during their communications.²⁴⁸⁴ P-0889 also recalled Richard, Thibaut Kpa, an Anti-Balaka leader in Bossangoa, Romain Feindiri, and Constant Mahani, an Anti-Balaka leader in Damara or Bossembélé, among the contacts of Maxime Mokom while in Zongo.²⁴⁸⁵ P-0889 heard Maxime Mokom once talk to his father, Bernard Mokom, telling him that he had established contact with the youth that defended their villages.²⁴⁸⁶ Two lieutenants spent time or spoke with Maxime Mokom in Zongo, Tribunal and Dokabona, as did Émotion Brice Namsio, and before P-0889 joined Mokom also Claude Ngaikosset.²⁴⁸⁷ Maxime Mokom often sent telephone credit to the Anti-Balaka leaders in the provinces, asking P-0889 to buy credit.²⁴⁸⁸

967. Brice Emotion Namsio stated that while following the formation of self-defence groups in the hinterland on the radio, Maxime Mokom was in constant contact with those in the hinterland, communicating with them.²⁴⁸⁹ In November 2013, they heard that those in the hinterland who had left for Bangui, to attack the Seleka and defend the country, had reached the hill behind Boy-Rabe and the witness crossed back over from Zongo to defend the country.²⁴⁹⁰ There were no Anti-Balaka activities at Zongo yet, but Brice Emotion Namsio would not have known what was happening when he was not yet there.²⁴⁹¹ Maxime Mokom coordinated the operations conducted by those in the hinterland, from Batangafo, Bossangoa, to descend to Bangui, through telephone.²⁴⁹² Mokom sometimes called Andjilo, sometimes other leaders who were in areas with network, to say there were other coordinations there.²⁴⁹³ According to the witness, he was told while staying for a week with Lt Denamganaï that all Central Africans coming to Zongo were also registered to have an eye on them, and the witness went twice to Claude Ngaikosse to do so, but without success.²⁴⁹⁴ Maxime Mokom was police, there were FACA and also civilians living in the same houses, and they at times said that Maxime Mokom had told them that Andjilo was in this place, Douze Puissances in that place.²⁴⁹⁵ Maxime Mokom had three telephones on hand and was very often with Judicael Ezz, and through them Brice Emotion Namsio got to know that something was happening, Maxime Mokom also was the one who said that Andjilo and others had got to the hill and anyone who wanted to help their country get back to normalcy was supposed to do what they had to do.²⁴⁹⁶ Maxime Mokom was the operations coordinator, there was no other person who would actually issue the orders, and he was the one who coordinated before the attack, and after the attack called to initiate the 'CLPC'.²⁴⁹⁷ They would also meet amongst the military staff, Judicael had the laptop of Maxime Mokom and they were basically talking amongst each other.²⁴⁹⁸ Zongo would use the Orange and Telecel network and one could call everywhere, Bangui, other places.²⁴⁹⁹ Before the attack of 5 December

2013, Yekatom Rambo was in Boeing with Wenezoui, and they were in permanent contact with Mokom.²⁵⁰⁰

968. Brice Emotion Namsio further explained at the end of November 2013, a meeting was held in a compound rented by Ngaikosse before he went to Gemena, with ‘commander’ Maxime Mokom, Denamganaï, Dokabona, and others, who said that the Anti-Balaka were already behind the hill at Boy-Rabe and they needed to cross to support and make Djotodia and his supporters leave – this made the witness realise that there had been meetings and that indeed Maxime Mokom, who they called coordinator of operations, had been coordinating for a long time, because he said at this meeting that Douze Puissances was coming from the other direction, Andjilo came from that other direction, Mokpem had already arrived, Yandjoungou Gustave had already arrived, and that everyone had to cross to support these elements.²⁵⁰¹ Brice Emotion Namsio denied having been aware of military operations being planned to take back Bangui at the time he crossed over to Zongo.²⁵⁰²
969. Brice Emotion Namsio stated that while he was in Zongo, he ran out of money to pay his rent, and since through Alfred Legrand Ngaya he had Mr Ngaïssona’s number, he called him to ask for money.²⁵⁰³ A week later, Ngaya called the witness to say that Mr Ngaïssona had sent 40 or 45,000 CFA for him, which Ngaya then transferred to the witness through the Telecel network.²⁵⁰⁴ Brice Emotion Namsio maintained that while in Zongo, he did not know anything about Mr Ngaïssona organising an armed resistance to the Seleka.²⁵⁰⁵
970. P-1339 testified that when they were in Zongo, Mokom had a meeting with the soldiers, they spoke and created this plan to go back to the CAR and meet up behind the mountain and take their vengeance.²⁵⁰⁶

971. P-0884 testified that Bernard Mokom put him in touch with Maxime Mokom, who initially did not say who he was exactly.²⁵⁰⁷ Maxime Mokom called P-0884 frequently to know what was happening in Bangui, he wanted to know about the security situation and sometimes said he was holding meetings in the provinces and wanted to know whether there was a movement in the provinces, whether P-0884 was aware of the Anti-Balaka and coordinating this; P-0884 told him what was happening in Bangui.²⁵⁰⁸ After the demonstration at the airport, P-0884 was in contact with Maxime Mokom who told him that he had started gathering the Anti-Balaka in Bossangoa – people could see what they were doing on television, what FOMAC was doing, from the province right to Bangui, Maxime Mokom and his father were coordinating.²⁵⁰⁹ Maxime Mokom told P-0884 that he was following his efforts and when P-0884 denied his question of whether he was aware about the advance of the Anti-Balaka, he told P-0884 that he was the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka alongside his father.²⁵¹⁰ He would call about twice a week, Maxime called him regularly.²⁵¹¹ P-0884 initially did not believe Mokom when he talked about the Anti-Balaka on the ground and their advance; only towards the end he realised the Anti-Balaka were effectively advancing and only after February or March P-0884 realised that the person who called himself commander was effectively Maxime Mokom.²⁵¹²

972. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that certain ‘youth’ from Bangui, such as Namsio Brice alias Emotion, Lt Herve and Maxime Mokom were in Zongo, and he made the link via intermediary Emotion between Zongo and the youth in the provinces, as well as communicating with Maxime Mokom via Emotion, keeping them informed of the situation they lived in.²⁵¹³ Mokom would tell Emotion their military strategy, even though Emotion was a civilian, and the witness often asked Emotion what Mokom was doing in preparation to stop the carnage, since Mokom would not give their military strategy to him, a civilian.²⁵¹⁴ Lt Herve later revealed the military strategy to Emotion.²⁵¹⁵ Emotion told Jacob Mokpem-

Bionli that they were ready to go down to Bangui, that was the last phase.²⁵¹⁶ To the witness's understanding, Maxime Mokom was in charge of the military operation specifically strategy, at the time of the Anti-Balaka; they were all on the other side in Zongo and their intermediary was Emotion.²⁵¹⁷ Maxime Mokom returned to Bangui after the return of Mr Ngaïssona, crossing the Oubangui river where he was behind the Boy-Rabe hill with Lt Herve, Emotion and other youth.²⁵¹⁸ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli did not know if Mokom was in contact with the young Anti-Balaka from the provinces while in Zongo, he was regularly informed of what happened in Bangui, in particular before the attack of 5 December 2013.²⁵¹⁹ Mokom reacted very positively to the information communicated to him; he said in substance, 'be alert to defend the country'; it was a clear combatant message.²⁵²⁰

973. P-2269 stated that while in Zongo, he spoke to Andjilo on the phone many times, they agreed to meet in Bouca with their men, and he called other chiefs like 12 Puissances (from Bogangolo), Lt Konaté, Gustave Yadjoungou (from Bogangolo), Benjamin Ouatoupou (from Damara), Gabin Inga, Richard Bejouane, Dedane, and told them all to meet near Bouca.²⁵²¹ P-2269 called Andjilo because he knew him from Batangafo, he was already part of the group fighting the 'zaragina'.²⁵²² Although some 'liberators' joined the Anti-Balaka, its core were the youth.²⁵²³

974. The Chamber further recalls the evidence of witnesses who mentioned contacts between individuals in Cameroon and Maxime Mokom,²⁵²⁴ as well as of witnesses who were in the provinces and mentioned contacts with Maxime Mokom.²⁵²⁵

975. Further, Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda described how in Zongo Central Africans met as they knew each other and stayed in the same neighbourhood, and many people, military and civilian alike, came to visit him.²⁵²⁶ The elders, officers, talked about serious matters, often sitting with about 20 men to chat, play games, listen to news about the CAR on RFI, where they also heard about an upcoming movement against the Seleka.²⁵²⁷ As the witness was the eldest, others sought advice from him, asked what to do to advance in attacking the Seleka, and he based his advice on what he heard on the radio (RFI, Central African radio and Ndeke Luka).²⁵²⁸

976. Communications were not the only activity pursued from Zongo. Indeed, P-2232 used a contact he had within the Seleka to get a box of ammunition and some AK-47s, which were deposited in Boganda and then taken to Bossangoa.²⁵²⁹ Similarly, P-0889 stated that while in Zongo, Mokom bought hunting ammunition which he sent to the field, on boats.²⁵³⁰ P-0889 saw him twice sending ammunition, the second time a few days before 5 December 2013, and Mokom gave the ammunition to Bienvenu Namguende to bring them to the field and the leaders divided among themselves for the attack.²⁵³¹ P-0889 described how shortly before 5 December 2013, he heard a conversation between Maxime Mokom and Francis Bozizé in which Mokom asked for money he wanted to pay a marabout, which Francis Bozizé did send in several instalments using Ecobank, with Orofe who worked there giving it to his wife, and Mokom's wife crossing the river to get the money and bring it back to Zongo.²⁵³²

977. In addition to the above, the Chamber has before it a significant amount of Facebook messenger chats involving username 'Maxime Mokom Gawaka', suggesting that Maxime Mokom liaised with many other individuals.²⁵³³

978. The evidence before the Chamber shows that Mr Yekatom was one of the individuals who started organising from Zongo with a view to fight the Seleka.

979. The Chamber considers this not negated by the Yekatom Defence's suggestion that there would have been 'personal animosity' between Mr Yekatom and Maxime Mokom due to the latter reportedly having been involved in Mr Yekatom's arrest by the Congolese authorities.²⁵³⁴ Personal likes or dislikes do not exclude, by themselves, coordination efforts.
980. The Chamber further notes the Ngaïssona Defence's submission that the evidence on record shows that Mr Yekatom and Maxime Mokom would not have been in contact while the former was in Zongo.²⁵³⁵
981. P-2232 had heard that Mr Yekatom, Claude Ngaikosset and Maxime Mokom were liberators and knew each other from supporting Bozizé when he took power, and on the day when Mr Yekatom crossed over to Zongo, Claude Ngaikosset asked P-2232 to see who it was, Claude came and asked Mr Yekatom about the weapon he had given him, following which Mr Yekatom was placed under detention by the Congolese intelligence service.²⁵³⁶ After he was released, P-2232 did not have the opportunity to discuss with him, but Mr Yekatom was frequently with Mokom, discussing with him, Dokabona and others.²⁵³⁷ Mr Yekatom was constantly with Ouandjio and Satan.²⁵³⁸ It was after Mr Yekatom left Zongo with Ouandjio/Cœur de Lion and Satan that Mokom told P-2232 about them crossing the river, and afterwards P-2232 heard they found themselves in Mongoumba and from there went to Boeing behind the airport.²⁵³⁹ The Chamber notes that P-2232 also stated that he did not see Maxime Mokom and Mr Yekatom discussing or meeting regularly in Zongo, with Mr Yekatom operating in Lobaye,²⁵⁴⁰ but considers this to refer to the time after Mr Yekatom left Zongo.²⁵⁴¹

²⁵⁴¹ The Chamber therefore considers the arguments of the Yekatom Defence in this regard, as well as in regard to other details provided by P-2232 (see Yekatom Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2737-Corr-Red, paras 226-227), to be without merit.

982. P-1339 similarly testified that Mr Yekatom was a liberator when Bozizé took power.²⁵⁴² P-1339 further stated that Habib and Mr Yekatom would always meet up, they were soldiers and would meet regularly to talk.²⁵⁴³ P-1339 later heard from Bodios that Mr Yekatom was going to cross over again, go back and this indeed happened two or three days later.²⁵⁴⁴ The people in the bush after crossing that P-1339 then met up with included Mr Yekatom, Ouandjio Freddy aka Cœur de Lion, Habib, Satan and a corporal with nickname Keapex.²⁵⁴⁵
983. Vivien Beina stated that there were meetings with Claude Ngaikosset and Maxime Mokom, in which Mr Yekatom and Habib did not participate,²⁵⁴⁶ but he was forced to say that, since they were there, they wanted to start a rebellion.²⁵⁴⁷ The witness's brother joined Mr Yekatom because he wanted to fight the Seleka.²⁵⁴⁸ Soldiers were forced to cross and became committed together with their brothers in arms and some civilians, they reorganised themselves so they could fight the Seleka.²⁵⁴⁹ The movement to defend the population was created on CAR soil, and not in Zongo.²⁵⁵⁰ To Vivien Beina's knowledge, once Mr Yekatom and Habib had returned to the CAR, they never went back to Zongo.²⁵⁵¹
984. P-0889 stated that Mr Yekatom and Maxime Mokom never talked while he was in Zongo and that Mr Yekatom did not want to accept Maxime Mokom's orders as there seemed to be a problem between them.²⁵⁵²
985. P-0884 stated that when the Seleka entered, Mr Yekatom fled to Zongo where he was imprisoned by the authorities, and after he was released, he crossed the river to the CAR, at which time he started to set up his own movement and called on his brothers in arms to create his own group.²⁵⁵³

986. On the basis of the above, the Chamber is unable to conclude that Mr Yekatom was discussing with Maxime Mokom during his time in Zongo. However, as also further outlined below, the Chamber considers that Maxime Mokom and Mr Yekatom liaised in other contexts.²⁵⁵⁴

987. The evidence before the Chamber includes a video of Mr Yekatom answering questions of a journalist. In this video, Mr Yekatom explains that he was arrested and then fled to Zongo, where the idea on forming a movement to fight the Seleka was born, yet the movement did not start in ‘Zaire’, it was ‘here’.²⁵⁵⁵ Asked how he ended up having 1,500 men, Mr Yekatom states that Djotodia did not want to work with most soldiers and as trained soldiers, they could not just stay, while the youth were recruited but also chased by Michel Djotodia.²⁵⁵⁶ Mr Yekatom continues to explain the difference between Seleka and FACA, that with Seleka one can see they are Chadian, do not know Sango and are in majority Muslim, while they (‘we’) have military discipline and FACA are in majority Christian.²⁵⁵⁷ Mr Yekatom denies that it is a religious war because they do not touch the Muslims when passing through a village, and their concern is that the Seleka leave because ‘he’ is not Central African, but a foreigner, and their (‘our’) goal is to chase them back to where they are from and the populations are in peace.²⁵⁵⁸ Mr Yekatom states that with that they are in the process of doing, they will go to the end, that they do not want to have Chadian or Congolese CEMAC

988. The Chamber notes the Yekatom Defence's submission that this video is an indication that a movement separate to the Anti-Balaka, namely the 'Révolution des forces armées centrafricaines pour le peuple' (or 'RFACPP'), was formed by Mr Yekatom, Habib Beina and Freddy Ouandjio, also known as 'Cœur de Lion', on their return to the CAR from Zongo.²⁵⁶⁰ While the Chamber discusses the question of the 'RFACPP' and its relation to the Anti-Balaka further below,²⁵⁶¹ the Chamber is of the view that this video, by itself, does not support the conclusion of a separate movement. First, Mr Yekatom mentions the idea of a movement to fight the Seleka, which was started 'here' as opposed to 'Zaire', implying that a movement was created in the CAR. This by itself does not lead to conclude that such movement was separate to the Anti-Balaka. Second, and more importantly, in a different video in which Mr Yekatom appears, he indeed says so himself: introducing himself as 'chef de mouvement Anti-Balaka de zone sud', he continues to explain that when he found other soldiers in Zongo, he thought it was better to return to the CAR and '[c]'est là où que j'ai créé le mouvement A[nti-Balaka] pour venir chasser ces mercenaires qui sont venus détruire notre pays'.²⁵⁶²

As part of the efforts to counter the Seleka offensive and to ensure François Bozizé's return to power, in August 2013, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others met in Paris to create the 'Front pour le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique' (FROCCA). Lin Banoukepa was the executive director of FROCCA, while Mr Ngaïssona was one of its members. The group's objective was to advocate for the return to 'the constitutional order',

The Chamber notes the Yekatom Defence's opposition to this video in light of it being outside the temporal scope, and the appearance of Mr Yekatom being made for a political campaign when running to be elected as member of parliament (see Annex A to the Yekatom Defence Response to the "Prosecution's Eight Application for Submission of Audio/Videos Evidence from the Bar Table", 26 June 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-1945-Conf, 5 July 2023, ICC-01/14-01/18-1963-Conf-Anx-A, pp. 57-58; see also T-169, p. 82, lines 15-22). For purposes of its determination at hand, the Chamber considers this to be immaterial as a video having been aired after the time relevant to the charges does not negate the content of what Mr Yekatom is shown as saying on the video. Neither does the fact that his appearance may have been related to a political campaign.

which signified the return of François Bozizé to power. As such, FROCCA was one of the initiatives to achieve this stated goal on a political level, which co-existed with other efforts in this regard, specifically the galvanisation of groups eventually known collectively as the Anti-Balaka.

989. The evidence shows that in August 2013, in Paris, an organisation called ‘Front pour le retour à l’ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique’, short FROCCA, was founded. Several witnesses testified about meetings in this context, and what was discussed thereat, as outlined below.

990. The Ngaïssona Defence submits, inter alia, that (i) FROCCA never reached the stage of a cogent structure; (ii) meetings in the context of FROCCA never led to concrete discussions or actions; (iii) FROCCA was never formalised; (iv) François Bozizé’s return to power was an option, rather than FROCCA’s objective and, in any event, FROCCA’s objectives were non-violent; (v) Lin Banoukepa worked alone; (vi) FROCCA had no military capacity; and (vii) FROCCA did not finance the Anti-Balaka.²⁵⁶³

991. The Ngaïssona Defence further submits that there is no credible evidence that Mr Ngaïssona took steps to structure the Anti-Balaka and FACA pursuant to FROCCA’s ‘Plan Stratégique’,²⁵⁶⁴ arguing that (i) the Prosecution failed to demonstrate that Mr Ngaïssona played any role in the creation of FROCCA; (ii) there is no evidence that Mr Ngaïssona endorsed Lin Banoukepa’s press releases; (iii) only Adrien Poussou alleged links between Mr Ngaïssona, FROCCA and activities in the field; and (iv) Mr Ngaïssona’s email exchanges are not indicative of any action by him to further a so-called military ‘Plan Stratégique’.²⁵⁶⁵

992. At the outset, the Chamber considers that FROCCA, as already clearly stated by its very name, was meant to advocate for the return to the constitutional order, which, in the understanding of its founders as well as external observers, signified the return of François Bozizé to power. The Chamber finds equally clearly established by the evidence as discussed below that Mr Ngaïssona was part of this group, active in its discussions, and that Lin Banoukepa, a lawyer in France at the time and, as further discussed below, chosen as FROCCA executive director, did not work in isolation. The Chamber considers that the evidence as outlined below makes clear that any steps undertaken in the context of FROCCA were part of broader-scale attempts to ensure François Bozizé's return to power. In the view of the Chamber, the creation of FROCCA and its activities, of whatever limited nature they may have resulted to be, cannot be seen in isolation, but must be put in the context of steps and coordination efforts undertaken as discussed above, as well as of activities then unfolding on the ground, as discussed below.²⁵⁶⁶

993. Adrien Poussou, a journalist involved in meetings in Cameroon as outlined above, testified that mid- or end July 2013, he became aware that François Bozizé was in France and he met him on several occasions, including when arranging for Ghislaine Dupont to interview François Bozizé.²⁵⁶⁷
994. The above-mentioned interview of François Bozizé is available to the Chamber. Therein, he mentions being surrounded by compatriots with whom they discussed and agreed to set up a structure called 'Front pour le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique (Frocca)', with the goal to closely follow and denounce events in the country with a view to informing the international community.²⁵⁶⁸ Asked whether return to constitutional order means he would want to re-take power, he answers, 'Oui. Reprendre le pouvoir. Si l'occasion se présente, je le [...] ferai'.²⁵⁶⁹ Further asked whether this would be by political or military means, he answers, 'Oh, la voie politique puisque...la voie des armes ne vient que lorsque la solution politique n'est pas trouvée, bon ben...on choisit la voie des armes. Ça a été toujours comme ça'.²⁵⁷⁰ He refutes that he would have deployed military along the Oubangui in the DRC, in particular Captain Ngaikosset, stating that that is invented and that he only knows Ngaikosset is a refugee in the DRC.²⁵⁷¹ He also blames Chad for helping the Seleka to take power²⁵⁷² and when asked whether he hopes to take back the presidential seat one day, he says, 'Mais, la démarche n'est pas une démarche brutale c'est voir les voies et moyens qui puissent nous permettre de sauver ce peuple, ce pays, qui a trop souffert'.²⁵⁷³

995. In other supposed interviews at the time, François Bozizé is reported as stating that since he did not finish his mandate to expire in 2016, return to the constitution adopted in 2004 is a non-negotiable pre-condition, following which he would be open to dialogue with all Central Africans; while when asked whether he counts on taking up arms and launching a 'guerilla', he is reported as stating, 'Je ne m'interdis rien, mais ce n'est pas d'actualité. Je veux sensibiliser la communauté internationale aux souffrances de mon peuple. [...]'; asked which lesson to learn, says 'Ce monde, c'est la loi du plus fort. Mais les Centrafricains doivent savoir que Bozizé ne les abandonnera pas'.²⁵⁷⁴
996. In what appears to be the publication of another interview some months later, François Bozizé is reported as reproaching Djotodia for wanting to 'Islamise' the country, and later saying, '[...] je me dois de dénoncer les crimes de ceux qui oppriment mes concitoyens. Aussi, je voudrais interpeller tous les chefs d'Etat de la sous-région, les démocraties européennes et bien sûr la France qui a l'habitude de régler nos problèmes, pour leur demander de nous aider à faire partir ces bandits et rétablir la légalité constitutionnelle'.²⁵⁷⁵
997. In what appears to be the publication of an interview with Lin Banoukepa in August 2013, the latter is reported as, inter alia, presenting himself as coordinator of FROCCA, stating that everyone knows the Seleka has a hidden agenda to impose Islam, and as listing the objectives of FROCCA as re-establishing constitutional order, establishing power which separates state and religion and is democratic, respecting freedoms and rights of individuals, based on law and not 'Salafist religious dogmas'.²⁵⁷⁶

998. The Chamber also heard evidence of witnesses who were present at the meeting at which the creation of FROCCA was announced, as well as meetings following thereafter, as outlined below.
999. Adrien Poussou testified that the meeting he was invited to by François Bozizé was at the Novotel or one of the Accor Group hotels not far from Châtelet, and Adrien Poussou went in company of Martial Kombo.²⁵⁷⁷ Individuals attending the meeting included Martial Kombo, Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona, Francis Bozizé, Jean-Serge Wafio, Levy Yakété; Yves Songuet was to Adrien Poussou's knowledge not at that meeting, but he attended other meetings.²⁵⁷⁸ Approximately a dozen, maybe 20 people attended this meeting which was chaired by François Bozizé and had been presented as a meeting between him and the Central African diaspora.²⁵⁷⁹ François Bozizé presented his view of the situation in the country, the need to set up an organisation that would drive the demands for change, and asked the participants to make proposals to name or organise this.²⁵⁸⁰ Adrien Poussou thought that in reality the president and his entourage had already arranged this organisation beforehand, knew exactly what they wanted²⁵⁸¹ and after proposals were made, François Bozizé said, reading from a piece of paper,²⁵⁸² 'What if we called this organisation FROCCA (Front pour le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique)?'.²⁵⁸³ The participants were unanimous.²⁵⁸⁴ François Bozizé also informed the participants of the bureau's composition, that the person acting as executive director as deputy to him was Lin Banoukepa, and that Adrien Poussou was to be the spokesperson.²⁵⁸⁵ The witness added that during the first meeting of FROCCA, just a few names were made public as belonging to the FROCCA bureau.²⁵⁸⁶ When Adrien Poussou got the email, further discussed below, from Serefio, who was also present at this meeting, presenting the different topics and the members that would

1000. To Adrien Poussou's knowledge, at this first meeting no divergent views on how to return François Bozizé to power were discussed, however, they would be brought up in following meetings.²⁵⁸⁸ What was happening with the Anti-Balaka was not discussed during this first FROCCA meeting since these issues were not publicly discussed and that first meeting was public.²⁵⁸⁹ However, Adrien Poussou noticed private discussions within the inner circle of François Bozizé, which included Mr Ngaïssona, without the witness knowing what they were talking about.²⁵⁹⁰ After the meeting, François Bozizé was to meet with his supporters and Adrien Poussou did not know what happened there; only afterwards he was led to understand that the organisation was only a showcase for actions and activities carried out underground, hidden to them ('us') and the general public.²⁵⁹¹

1001. Joachim Kokaté testified that Lin Banoukepa was the general coordinator of FROCCA in 2013.²⁵⁹² FROCCA was created by François Bozizé during a lunch in Paris where he talked about the creation of FROCCA and told them that its president would be Banoukepa.²⁵⁹³ Joachim Kokaté was informed through a call from Mr Ngaïssona and Poussou who told him that there would be a meeting in a restaurant in Paris.²⁵⁹⁴ Joachim Kokaté was in Cameroon and Mr Ngaïssona called him.²⁵⁹⁵ Adrien Poussou and Joachim Kokaté met at the Gare du Nord and went to the hotel.²⁵⁹⁶ Joachim Kokaté did not recall when this meeting took place, but agreed with reference to a FROCCA 'communiqué' of 5 August 2013 that it could have been during that period.²⁵⁹⁷ At the meeting were Lin Banoukepa, Mr Ngaïssona, Levy Yakété, Adrien Poussou, Oguere, Francis Bozizé, Dieudonné Toko Félicien, 10, maybe 12,

13 people; Joachim Kokaté was not certain if Yvon Songuet was there, but he saw him during the same period in a hotel where Bozizé was living on the Champs Élysées.²⁵⁹⁸ François Bozizé revealed his intentions in a clear way; he said he had tried to contact the CEAC heads of states to be brought back to power, had not received a positive response, so he would start a movement called FROCCA, to be led by Lin Banoukepa; with this movement, he would use all the means possible, all means, so that he could return to power.²⁵⁹⁹ Joachim Kokaté thought Bozizé was thinking about using force to return to power.²⁶⁰⁰ At the meeting, there was talk about sending a delegation to New York; Bozizé sent money to Adrien Poussou to go and said to Adrien Poussou and Songuet that they would go to New York and represent and say what was going on.²⁶⁰¹

1002. Assessing the evidence of Joachim Kokaté and Adrien Poussou in context, the Chamber is of the view that Joachim Kokaté, in his description as outlined above, may have been mixing up information concerning several separate meetings. However, this does not, in the Chamber's view, distract from the reliability of either witness's testimony on the foundation of FROCCA and what was discussed in this context, with the caveat of Joachim Kokaté's description of his own role, as further discussed below.

1003. In this context, the Chamber also notes the evidence of D30-4720, who appears to have attended the same, initial, meeting as Adrien Poussou and Joachim Kokaté as well as several meetings related to the activities of FROCCA thereafter.

1004. Specifically, D30-4720 recalled being called by Levy Yakété for a meeting around July or August in a large hotel towards Les Halles, close to Châtelet, which was attended by many Central Africans, including Stéphane or Edouard Serefio,²⁶⁰² Guillaume Ngobo, Jean-Serge Wafio, Lin Banoukepa, Mr Ngaïssona, Salomon Kotrio, Pierrot Franck, Simon Ngunaibana, Levy Yakété, Thierry Bongolo, Dieudonne Tokafessie, Adrien Poussou, Sylvie Mazongo, Francis Bozizé, François Bozize; Steve Yambété and Wapounaba were not present, D30-

²⁶⁰² D30-4720: T-281, p. 13, line 14; T-282, p. 11, line 25 – p. 12, line 5. The Chamber notes that the witness first mentioned Stéphane and later Edouard Serefio, and that it is unclear whether she meant to refer to the same person.

4720 did not recall if Yvon Songuet or Joachim Kokaté attended.²⁶⁰³ According to D30-4720, the meeting centred around the idea of them having lost power, being in disorder, and returning to constitutional order, re-taking power through negotiations and lobbying.²⁶⁰⁴ D30-4720 stated that the strategy to ask France to act was to speak to people, the question of re-taking power through weapons was never discussed in the meetings in which the witness participated.²⁶⁰⁵ They set up FROCCA, there was no ‘plan B’.²⁶⁰⁶ D30-4720 did not recall Mr Ngaïssona saying anything about contacts with elements in the field.²⁶⁰⁷ François Bozizé listened much more and took notes, and was often interrupted by phone calls.²⁶⁰⁸ D30-4720 stated that they were discussing around taking back power by all means²⁶⁰⁹ – they were in France, going to carry out advocacy actions, make posters, demonstrate, meet officials, especially from the French government.²⁶¹⁰ The name FROCCA was chosen during the meeting, people were trying to find a name and this was ultimately decided.²⁶¹¹ Lin Banoukepa was chosen by unanimity as coordinator of FROCCA;²⁶¹² and appointing D30-4720 as treasurer, Kotro Salomon as deputy coordinator, Thierry Bogongolo and Poussou as in charge of communications was also discussed.²⁶¹³ They did not discuss the content of press releases at this first meeting; FROCCA emerged very quickly and then disappeared before they would reach their objectives, it really did not even get going; as soon as the president left, there was no further follow-up.²⁶¹⁴

1005. The Chamber does not consider that this evidence is capable of refuting the evidence of either Adrien Poussou or Joachim Kokaté on any of the meetings they described in the context of FROCCA, or of P-1847 as further outlined below. First, neither said that during the initial meeting at which FROCCA was set up, any military option to re-take power was discussed. Second, D30-4720 not remembering or noticing any discussion among other individuals taking place,²⁶¹⁵ or not hearing of meetings with a more limited number of attendees²⁶¹⁶ does not mean, in and of itself, that such discussions or meetings did not happen at all. Third, the Chamber considers of note that D30-4720 initially volunteered an answer on the question of re-taking power through weapons not having been discussed, without in fact having been asked about it. This gives the impression that the witness intended to justify the overall gist of the meeting, even though this was not put into question. Fourth, when initially stating that she did not hear any hostility against Muslims and caveating this by indicating that maybe something was said when she left the room because they knew she was Muslim,²⁶¹⁷ D30-4720 then suggested that this was her way of confirming that this did not take place.²⁶¹⁸ To the Chamber, such explanation does not sound plausible, and indeed is rather an indication that also D30-4720 was conscious that she may not have been aware of everything that may have been discussed. Fifth, the Chamber also notes its discussion further below on D30-4720 clearly overall being involved in a more limited manner in that she did not receive any of the documentation which was sent by email or otherwise communicated electronically.²⁶¹⁹

1006. Adrien Poussou explained that long after the first meeting, Serefio sent him an email as a follow-up on a second meeting that had taken place in a hotel near the Champs Élysées at which ‘allusions were made to military activities on the ground’.²⁶²⁰ According to the witness, someone had to have told Serefio that the meeting’s goal was to set up a military organisation, but to Adrien Poussou’s knowledge that was not the case, and he did not touch on this in his reply to Serefio.²⁶²¹ Adrien Poussou also explained that the assignments described in the email had to be done ‘beforehand’.²⁶²² The witness indicated, when asked what he meant with ‘allusions’ to military activities on the ground, that it was Serefio who in his email complained that he was absent from that meeting which was going to talk about military matters.²⁶²³ Adrien Poussou indicated that in addition, there were a number of meetings near the Champs Élysées and during one, Mr Ngaïssona attempted to say that the children out in the field were advancing, motivated, organised, ready to fight, and that he was in contact with them, but that Francis or François Bozizé cut him short and said those matters would be broached subsequently.²⁶²⁴

1007. The email exchange, which is before the Chamber, includes an email from ‘Edouard Serefio’ to ‘namsbona’, on 8 August 2013, with the subject ‘Le BUREAU FROCCA’, and in its body text lists what appear to be positions with related names, including ‘coordination/diplomatie’ – Banoukepa Lin, Serefio Edouard; ‘porte/parole’ – Yakete Lévy, Gounebana Fekeram Simon; ‘communication/ presse’ – Poussou Adrien, Kopaye François; ‘intérieur/association’ – Ngaïssona Patrick Edouard, Tokofesset Dieudonné; ‘organisation féminine’ [sic] – Mazoungou, Maboula; ‘jeunesse/mobilisation/sensibilisation’ – Nambo-Bona Michel, Bongolo Thierry; ‘trésorerie’ – Maboula, Bozizé Jean François.²⁶²⁵ This is followed by an email from ‘Edouard Serefio’ to ‘poussou.poussou’, which, on 23 August 2013, forwards the initial email and states that the undersigned did not attend the limited meeting at which Kokaté was present because he had not been informed and it should not be interpreted as bad faith, further asking whether the attributes of this (military) entity should be defined.²⁶²⁶

1008. Further, Adrien Poussou explained that the meeting at the hotel close to the Champs Élysées took place in August 2013 and was attended by Francis Bozizé, François Bozizé, Socrate Bozizé, Tokofesset, Mr Ngaïssona, Levy Yakété, Lin Banoukepa, Yvon Songuet, Joachim Kokaté, to take stock of what needed to be done to facilitate the restoration of constitutional order, meaning the return of François Bozizé to power.²⁶²⁷ At the time, nearly all Central Africans acknowledged that the situation in the country was catastrophic, and during the meetings they exchanged information on what was going on there.²⁶²⁸ That was when Mr Ngaïssona attempted to say that they were organised in the field, but Francis said such matters would be broached at a later stage.²⁶²⁹ Adrien Poussou understood Mr Ngaïssona's statement because he had already suspected those close to François Bozizé to be behind the Anti-Balaka, or at least be supporting them financially, so those utterances merely reinforced his conviction.²⁶³⁰ During one of the meetings, Adrien Poussou said that the military solution was not the right solution to solve the crisis and rather, diplomatic and political actions should be favoured.²⁶³¹ During one of the at least three meetings in that hotel near the Champs Élysées, Mr Ngaïssona also said that the elements in Bangui and Bossangoa were determined and motivated to fight the Seleka and regain power, but were missing weapons and ammunition.²⁶³²

1009. In Adrien Poussou's view, the meetings were not to set up a military organisation as he attended and neither he nor Mr Ngaïssona were military men, there was no military wing with direct links to FROCCA as an entity, in contrast to links with certain members of FROCCA.²⁶³³ The aura in the meetings was that the political solution was not the favourite; they talked about political action, but not many people within the Bozizé clan believed in it, which thought that the better choice was armed action.²⁶³⁴ On the day on which FROCCA was set up, there was no question of any action or military project, it was only subsequent that this became apparent as something obvious.²⁶³⁵

1010. Joachim Kokaté stated that after the lunch at which FROCCA was set up and Bozizé said that with FROCCA they would take up power by any means, they met again at the hotel where Bozizé was staying before the departure of Songuet and Poussou to New York.²⁶³⁶ Joachim Kokaté indicated that after this, he never had a meeting with Bozizé again, but Bozizé communicated directly with people close to him, while Joachim Kokaté followed the statement made by Banoukepa, who made several statements on behalf of FROCCA.²⁶³⁷

1011. Adrien Poussou testified that when they had finished their meeting, he, Yves Songuet and Mr Ngaïssona met in a café where Mr Ngaïssona informed them that he was financing the children out in the field, that he was responsible and handing out a lot of money for the upkeep of the Anti-Balaka combatants out in the field which he considered as being his children, being slightly reproachful to François Bozizé to the extent that it was him giving out money.²⁶³⁸ Adrien Poussou reached the conclusion about ‘sous-entendu militaires’ because Mr Ngaïssona had let it be understood that he had been speaking with Maxime Mokom, who turned out to be an Anti-Balaka, and after having spoken to him, he said that things were moving forward smoothly – Adrien Poussou drew from this that it was about military preparations which were progressing well.²⁶³⁹ Mr Ngaïssona did not say what Mokom was doing in the field, all that he said was that he would have further details subsequently.²⁶⁴⁰ Mr Ngaïssona said he had been on the phone with Maxime Mokom.²⁶⁴¹ Even if Adrien Poussou never met Maxime Mokom physically, it was public knowledge at the time that he was one of the Anti-Balaka leaders on the ground.²⁶⁴² The witness did not know who Maxime Mokom was at the time of that conversation, but got to know who he was when he was back in Bangui.²⁶⁴³
1012. Adrien Poussou reiterated that Mr Ngaïssona was reporting during a meeting of FROCCA that he had been in contact with the former FACA and PG elements and others,²⁶⁴⁴ with ‘the children’ out in the field who were motivated, and that he told Adrien Poussou and Yvon Songuet that he was financing and spent a great deal of money on the upkeep of the soldiers out in the field – to the witness, it logically followed from this that Mr Ngaïssona was part of the armed struggle for taking power back.²⁶⁴⁵ Adrien Poussou did not recall meeting Mr Ngaïssona in the time frame of August to 30 November 2013.²⁶⁴⁶

²⁶⁴⁶ P-2625: T-193, p. 59, line 23 – p. 60, line 3. The Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence counsel asked the witness whether he spoke to Mr Ngaïssona in the period from August to 30 November 2013 or whether, apart from

1014. While Adrien Poussou did not recall the exact sequence or timeline, he said that there were at least three meetings at the hotel near the Champs Élysées, one of which Albert Besse also attended, the one at which Mr Ngaïssona spoke about elements on the ground.²⁶⁴⁷ They did not discuss the issue of elements in Bossangoa during the FROCCA meetings, but it was common knowledge that many former PG elements were in Bossangoa and constituted the majority of the Anti-Balaka in that town.²⁶⁴⁸

1015. D30-4720 testified about a second meeting around Porte de Clichy approximately a week after the first, followed by a meeting of just three or four people in Lin Banoukepa’s office, and two meetings around Porte de Montreuil.²⁶⁴⁹ The second meeting was in a smaller hotel, attended by Poussou, Kotro, Jean-Francis, Serefio, while Banoukepa, Levy Yakété, Mr Ngaïssona and Jean-Serge Wafio did not attend.²⁶⁵⁰ François Bozizé came down for the meeting but did not stay very long, they did not really sit down and get down to business, and D30-4720 did not recall any discussions about an armed struggle to regain power, people were still talking about diplomatic and communication objectives, waiting for Lin Banoukepa to draw up a road map so they could begin making contacts.²⁶⁵¹ After the first two FROCCA meetings, D30-4720 saw Mr Ngaïssona around Gare du Nord, they greeted, deplored the fact that FROCCA had not been effective, and then he went on his way.²⁶⁵² The meeting at Lin Banoukepa’s office maybe took place one or two months after the meeting at Porte de Clichy, with Salomon Kotro, the deputy coordinator, and Tokafessie Dieudonne, but they only talked for a few minutes.²⁶⁵³ There was never any talk of armed struggle in D30-4720's presence.²⁶⁵⁴

1016. D30-4720 also described a meeting in Montreuil attended by Serefio, Tokafessie, Banoukepa, Salomon Kotro, during which they worked in a draft budget which was never finalised; they never received documents from the coordinator, never raised funds.²⁶⁵⁵ People did not talk about any armed struggle.²⁶⁵⁶ Another time in Montreuil there were not many people, Jean-Francis Bozizé, Serefio, and as they did not reach a quorum since the coordinator was not present, they did not actually hold a meeting.²⁶⁵⁷ They never met again regarding FROCCA.²⁶⁵⁸ According to D30-4720, there were no 'réunions restreintes' in the context of FROCCA.²⁶⁵⁹ At the end of the day, FROCCA did not help things move forward at all.²⁶⁶⁰ D30-4720 had not heard people say that there was an armed branch of FROCCA and had not heard that François Bozizé and his entourage would weaponise and organise self-defence groups to lead attacks against Muslims.²⁶⁶¹

1017. The Chamber recalls that in its view, the evidence of D30-4720 does not serve to discredit the evidence provided by Adrien Poussou, in particular. It is clear from D30-4720 that her involvement in FROCCA was limited to certain aspects and that she was not aware of all discussions that may have been had, which however, as such, does not exclude such discussions taking place. In particular, the Chamber notes that the witness mentioned not having had an email account at the time.²⁶⁶² In this context, the Chamber considers of note that the witness seemed unsure whether Mr Ngaïssona was present at the follow-up meetings,²⁶⁶³ which is remarkable insofar as she seemed to be certain about the other participants at meetings which clearly had a very limited number of attendees. The Chamber is of the view that it is implausible for D30-4720 to be certain about other attendees or discussions at these meetings, but not whether one of the accused in this case, which she was clearly familiar with, was present. To the Chamber, this indicates a certain tendency in the witness's evidence.

1018. The evidence before the Chamber includes a number of emails sent to the account used by Mr Ngaïssona at the time.²⁶⁶⁴ In a first email from 'ndikissi Ella' to 'npatriceedouard' of 24 September 2013, with subject line 'projets pour examen' and seemingly sending as attachments three documents with titles 'A[ccord] FROCCA', 'FROCCA-F[iche]-1' and 'FROCCA-F[iche]-2', the sender states that the drafts in question are attached, with the main lines which will be developed further, and that they would finalise the note on the 'horrors of Seleka' that day, to be sent maybe as of the following day.²⁶⁶⁵

1019. One of the documents which appears to be an attachment to this is entitled 'Protocole d'accord politique pour la création du Front pour le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique (FROCCA)'.²⁶⁶⁶ This document lists a number of goals, namely i) re-establishing as quickly as possible constitutional order destroyed by 'enemies of the nation' who inflicted, with 'Islamist mercenaries', violence on the CAR population; ii) restore and consolidate security; and iii) re-assure Central African people, economic operators and development partners for swift resumption of activities. The measures to be taken to achieve return to constitutional order include: (i) on the political level, make political parties, NGOs, intellectuals, opinion leaders (youth, women, ...), confession and spiritual leaders adhere to cause; (ii) on the diplomatic level, exhibit diplomatic intelligence on all levels; (iii) on the strategic level, take all measures necessary to avoid further suffering of people, specifically acquiring human, material and financial means to achieve goals, finding communication means which cannot be decrypted by intelligence services, preferably Thurayas, setting up smooth and practical coordination for swift and effective strategic actions, rebuilding confidence and aligning elements of security apparatus that only wait to address the 'affront'

inflicted by ‘envahisseurs islamistes sans foi ni loi’; and (iv) on the communication level, ‘très fondamentale d’éviter des déclarations frisant la haine, la vengeance et la division’.²⁶⁶⁷

1020. The abovementioned document outlines as essential steps the return of the democratically elected president to finish the mandate in 2016, the progressive re-establishment of State authority and security across the entire territory, organisation of elections, and re-organisation of the security apparatus. It further mentions a number of positions in the political and diplomatic coordination: political and diplomatic coordinator – Lin Banoukepa, spokesperson – Lévy Yakité, responsible for mobilisation of women – Mazoungou, responsible for internal affairs and associations – Edouard Patrice Ngaïssona, responsible for mobilisation and sensitisation of youth – Thierry Bongolo, responsible for finances and logistics – ‘ancienne TG KNK’, responsible for communication – Adrien Poussou.²⁶⁶⁸

1021. Another document entitled ‘[FROCCA] – Fiches d’activités préparatoires pour le retour en Centrafrique – Fiche 1’ mentions the goal of awareness raising and outlines a plan for an activity to be held no later than one month after 16 September 2013.²⁶⁶⁹ A second document which appears to be ‘fiche 2’ outlines a political declaration to re-take power and form a government, priority activities for FROCCA, and an action plan for the political transition.²⁶⁷⁰

1022. Adrien Poussou commented on several emails and the above documents as follows: he knew Jean-Serge Wafio as president of the CAR democratic party who was thought of as close to François Bozizé, part of the presidential majority group, and Gbaya from the same region as Bozizé.²⁶⁷¹ Jean-Serge Wafio took part in the meeting that established FROCCA.²⁶⁷² Adrien Poussou had not seen the FROCCA political agreement before, but it is in keeping with the decision taken during the first meeting establishing FROCCA.²⁶⁷³ According to the witness, the role attributed to Mr Ngaïssona in this document, as being responsible for domestic affairs and associations, was related to his activities, since he said he was in regular contact with a number of people who had remained in the country, with associations referring to the groups in the field, like COAC.²⁶⁷⁴ Looking at the document was the first time Adrien Poussou had seen that such level of responsibility and such function had been attributed.²⁶⁷⁵

1023. Joachim Kokaté had also not seen the FROCCA political agreement before and stated that he did not know the plans and strategies of FROCCA because he was not a member.²⁶⁷⁶ He indicated that Jean Serge Waffio is a politician from the CAR but that he did not know why he would be a party to this agreement; Mazoungou was a member of Bozizé's government; Thierry Bongolo was working at the economic and social council during Bozizé's time.²⁶⁷⁷ Joachim Kokaté maintained not having been aware of the positions people occupied within FROCCA, never having been a member of FROCCA and having no information about what happened in FROCCA.²⁶⁷⁸ Joachim Kokaté insisted not knowing anything about FROCCA.²⁶⁷⁹ According to Joachim Kokaté, when he spoke on television, Africa 24, he denounced Djotodia's government speaking as a Central African who was against the seizing of power by force and the Seleka violence, but not on behalf of FROCCA.²⁶⁸⁰ When he spoke on television for the first time, he was in telephone contact with Mr Ngaïssona and they talked about that.²⁶⁸¹ Frequently when he made statements it was after discussions between himself, Mr Ngaïssona, other compatriots, because Joachim Kokaté was not present in Bangui.²⁶⁸²

1024. The Chamber notes in this regard that the evidence before it shows that Joachim Kokaté was clearly a member of FROCCA and involved in planning its activities, as shown by his attendance to the meetings and by the evidence of other witnesses who attribute to him a specific role in this group. The Chamber notes in this regard that the witness seems to have been well familiar with Lin Banoukepa, who appears to have been legal counsel of the CPJP while Joachim Kokaté was involved therewith.²⁶⁸³ On this basis, the Chamber considers not credible the claim of Joachim Kokaté that he was not a member of FROCCA and would not have played any role in it.

1025. The Chamber considers of no further consequence that D30-4720 stated never having received or been informed of any FROCCA drafts, press releases or communications.²⁶⁸⁴ Indeed, the witness herself indicated that she did not have an email account at the time.²⁶⁸⁵ Overall, in light of the witness's clearly limited knowledge of any activities of FROCCA, and bearing in mind the Chamber's above discussion on this witness's evidence,²⁶⁸⁶ the Chamber considers the evidence of D30-4720 of little assistance for its determinations regarding FROCCA.

1026. The Chamber has before it a typed document which purports to contain a collection of FROCCA press releases.²⁶⁸⁷ In what is called 'Communiqué de presse no 001' of 5 August 2013, the Seleka coup and violence are addressed, the creation of FROCCA is announced, before concluding, 'Tout en s'imposant le devoir de chasser, par les moyens légaux, les criminels de la Séléka du sol centrafricain qu'ils ont souillé et profané, le FROCCA interpelle la conscience collective centrafricaine en vue d'une adhésion sans condition à cette lutte légitime de libération nationale'.²⁶⁸⁸ The second statement, dated 16 August 2013, also denounces the Seleka violence, and expresses the support of FROCCA for solutions envisaged by the UN Security Council to re-establish peace, democracy and stability in the CAR 'à la seule condition du retour à l'Ordre Constitutionnel en Centrafrique', before concluding: 'Le [FROCCA] appelle l'ensemble des forces politiques et sociales centrafricaines à faire plus que jamais preuve du nécessaire esprit de responsabilité pour préserver l'unité nationale et obtenir sans délai, le rétablissement de notre président élu, qui doit garantir la poursuite du processus démocratique dans notre pays'.²⁶⁸⁹

1027. A further statement of 18 September 2013 denounces the ‘Islamisation’ and ‘Somalisation’ of the CAR and demands the withdrawal of Djotodia, Tiangaye and the Seleka.²⁶⁹⁰ The statements are followed by what is said to be an interview with Lin Banoukepa who is reported as stating, inter alia, that the aim of FROCCA is to ‘[r]établir l’ordre constitutionnel, établir un pouvoir laïc, démocratique respectant les libertés et droits des individus. Un pouvoir ayant pour fondement le droit et non les dogmes religieux salafistes’.²⁶⁹¹

1028. The Chamber considers of importance to note within which temporal context these statements were set. Specifically, they were issued at a time when self-defence groups were organising in the CAR, emerged into the Anti-Balaka, and started to advance towards Bangui, engaging in hostilities during this advance.²⁶⁹² In particular the statement of 18 September 2013 was issued the day after an attack on Bossangoa.²⁶⁹³

1029. The Chamber notes that while in France, Mr Ngaïssona did not only participate in the meetings regarding FROCCA as outlined above. Rather, Adrien Poussou also learned – he did not recall from who – that Mr Ngaïssona, when in France, sent money via Western Union to the field, said to be for the upkeep of the elements in the field; and when Adrien Poussou was later in the government, he became aware of Western Union receipts on which he recognised some of the names of Central African soldiers.²⁶⁹⁴ Michel Djotodia showed Adrien Poussou a number of money transfers and gave him a number of names, including that of Mr Ngaïssona as being one of the people sending money to their accomplices in Bangui, but the witness did not specifically see the name of Mr Ngaïssona on a money transfer.²⁶⁹⁵ According to Adrien Poussou, it was not necessary for Mr Ngaïssona to go himself to a Western Union office; for example, when Adrien Poussou was in New York on a FROCCA mission with Yvon Songuet, it was not François Bozizé himself who went to a bank to send money to them, neither one of his sons, he would send somebody else.²⁶⁹⁶

People like Yvon Songuet and others might have resorted to other people to send this money.²⁶⁹⁷ Once Michel Djotodia resigned, they did not hear about this matter any further.²⁶⁹⁸ On the receipts which Djotodia showed him, Adrien Poussou could see amounts ranging from 800,000 to a million, and he saw that some of the amounts were sent to Olivier Koudemon, not remembering any other names.²⁶⁹⁹

1030. Adrien Poussou explained that that was why he later said on RFI that François Bozizé and people close to him were sending money to accomplices on the ground, that being the official position of the government.²⁷⁰⁰ Also in this interview he felt pushed to say that people had been instrumentalised by people from Bozizé's clan because (i) he had listened to a phone conversation in which Levy Yakété told people to go to the airport to increase the numbers of displaced people to show that the Djotodia government was not in control of anything; (ii) Mr Ngaïssona had forwarded him an email from someone in Bangui telling him that he was distributing pamphlets, they were organising on the ground to destabilise the regime; and (iii) all eyes were on François Bozizé following the 5 December attacks, after which FROCCA published a 'communiqué' claiming responsibility.²⁷⁰¹

1031. Adrien Poussou indicated that Mr Ngaïssona sent him the mentioned email in August or September 2013, in the period when he was meeting with members of FROCCA.²⁷⁰² It was a sort of report to Mr Ngaïssona sent by Ngaya, who then became lead of the Anti-Balaka at Boy-Rabe and claimed to be a pastor.²⁷⁰³ According to the witness, Mr Ngaïssona forwarded this email to him as he was supposed to be a member of the FROCCA communications team, and it was a means of telling Adrien Poussou that he was organising things on the ground, in touch with people there and that they were carrying out activities.²⁷⁰⁴ Adrien Poussou did nothing with this email.²⁷⁰⁵

1032. In an email from ‘Alfred le Grand Ngaya’ to ‘npatriceedouard’ of 16 July 2013, the sender states that he communicates the composition of the coordination recently created with a view to mobilising the population for protest actions against the Seleka exactions, with the ultimate goal being the withdrawal of Djotodia and return of François Bozizé to power; further states that the members are highly motivated but lacking means, and asks whether such means would be expected from the addressee’s side; further saying that the population, mainly in Bangui, is ready to go to the streets to protest and it is sufficient to just start the process; concluding that he knows the addressee is capable of presenting the situation to the president for steps to be taken.²⁷⁰⁶ In another email Alfred le Grand Ngaya’ sends to ‘npatriceedouard’ on 13 August 2013, included in the same email chain, the sender indicates that he attaches a copy of the ‘tract’ they are disseminating in the city of Bangui on that day.²⁷⁰⁷ This email is forwarded by Mr Ngaïssona to Adrien Poussou on the same day, and appears to contain in its attachment a typed document with a FROCCA header entitled ‘Appel patriotique’, which points to the positive situation under the Bozizé rule, denounces the exactions of the Djotodia regime with criminal disciples and mercenaries imported from Chad and Sudan, claims that the latter wants to ‘Islamise’ the CAR and asks, in this light, and bearing in mind the appeal of Bozizé on 10 August 2013 on RFI, the interview discussed above, that ‘tu dois te lever, résister et rejeter l’oppression que t’impose NDOTODJIA et sa horde de séléka’, and to mobilise ‘comme un seul homme’, to take out Djotodia and demand from international community ‘return to constitutional order’.²⁷⁰⁸

1033. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that he knew that FROCCA was set up by Bozizé’s lawyer, Lin Banoukepa, after Bozizé left the CAR, with deputy Mr Ngaïssona.²⁷⁰⁹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya communicated with Mr Ngaïssona briefly to find allies and share information, their goal was to restore Bozizé in power legally.²⁷¹⁰ Levy Yakété was a member of FROCCA.²⁷¹¹ They ('we') shared the same vision as FROCCA, had to liberate the country through a popular uprising and wanted something to indicate to the international community, that was why they walked about the front for the return to the constitutional order.²⁷¹²

The Chamber considers irrelevant the suggestion that the documents in question may not have been ‘authentic’ FROCCA documents (see D30-4720: T-282, p. 36, lines 11-15), in light of P-0808’s specific testimony on this email and his exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona.

1034. The exchanges between Mr Ngaïssona and Alfred Legrand Ngaya in relation to FROCCA did not end here. In response to a FROCCA 'communiqué' sent by Alfred Legrand Ngaya on 13 August 2013, Mr Ngaïssona indicated that 'the authority' would like to read and approve the document before publication, and suggests drafting a 'communiqué' accusing the Seleka of using the FROCCA name for diversion purposes, and that he as focal point waited for the central coordination in Paris regarding the actions to take, which will be read to the 'patron'.²⁷¹³ Alfred Legrand Ngaya reacted, stating that a text would be proposed, and asking for advice on how to prompt the FROCCA executive coordinator for a preliminary view on the tract.²⁷¹⁴

1035. Mr Ngaïssona reached out again to Alfred Legrand Ngaya on 17 September 2013, asking for news,²⁷¹⁵ to which Alfred Legrand Ngaya responded that the situation in the country remained alarming, with Bossangoa, Bouca, Batangafo in distress, stating that preoccupied with FROCCA lines of action to allow envisaging actions on the national level, and asking whether Mr Ngaïssona could give some indication for which actions to propose.²⁷¹⁶ In response, Mr Ngaïssona stated that given the situation in the country, they ('we') have men on the ground that manoeuvre, asking Alfred Legrand Ngaya to 'accentuer la dégradation dans Bangui et faire généralisée sur une bonne partie du territoire [sic]', and further asking whether he could get workers in the public and private sector involved.²⁷¹⁷ Alfred Legrand Ngaya followed up stating that the proposals would be examined to find appropriate actions, but that people were afraid, though they were thinking ‘with the others’ and would keep informed.²⁷¹⁸ Mr Ngaïssona in turn responded saying that matters were urgent, and whether a response could be done as quickly as possible, ‘le Grand BOSS attends [sic]’.²⁷¹⁹

1036. The Chamber notes that this exchange coincides with the time of the attack in Bossangoa in September 2013, as well as attacks in surrounding locations earlier that month.²⁷²⁰

1037. Alfred Legrand Ngaya explained that he contacted Mr Ngaïssona for FROCCA action because the situation was really chaotic and they hoped for something to happen.²⁷²¹ According to the witness, any discussions on manoeuvring would have concerned mobilisation of the population, political actions, citizen actions.²⁷²² It was systematically through Mr Ngaïssona that Alfred Legrand Ngaya obtained information about FROCCA.²⁷²³ The witness did not know what Mr Ngaïssona meant with people on the ground, he could not suspect Mr Ngaïssona as being someone who was in favour of war; his correspondence with Mr Ngaïssona was related mainly to popular movements, associations; the idea was to persuade popular movements to do something; they (‘we’) were hoping that FROCCA would put pressure at the level of Paris.²⁷²⁴ Alfred Legrand Ngaya understood the proposals to be within the framework of the actions they had been carrying out, that is, to mobilise association leaders.²⁷²⁵ The witness did not recall exchanging messages with a Facebook account of ‘Bangui FROCCA’; in any event, their (‘our’) actions were extremely discreet and he was therefore not aware whether other persons were working under the name of FROCCA.²⁷²⁶ At their level, there was an increasingly generalised awakening of consciences, such as concert of pots.²⁷²⁷

1038. Adrien Poussou stated that Yvon Songuet also said that he was putting a lot of money into the project for François Bozizé’s return to power and that it had already cost him a lot of money, showing Adrien Poussou in the café in Paris receipts of Western Union money transfer to convince him that he was paying money to send to Cameroon out of his pocket.²⁷²⁸ The witness could see the logo, but not the sender or recipient.²⁷²⁹ When Songuet and Adrien Poussou were later colleagues in the government, from July 2014 onwards, Songuet gave him some receipts and said that this Anti-Balaka issue had ruined him, but Adrien Poussou no longer had those receipts.²⁷³⁰

1039. Adrien Poussou explained that in the meeting at the hotel close to the Champs Élysées he was nominated to go to New York with Yvon Songuet for a lobbying mission, especially by virtue of the fact that the witness attempted to sensitise others for the need to favour political and diplomatic solutions to the ongoing crisis.²⁷³¹ François Bozizé dealt with financial and military matters together with his son Francis, who used to be minister with special responsibility for defence matters.²⁷³² To Adrien Poussou, it seemed clear that there was a military branch, even though there was no formal link between it and FROCCA as such.²⁷³³ According to the witness, while he sent Adrien Poussou to New York, François Bozizé did not believe in these diplomatic initiatives and was not counting on them to regain power.²⁷³⁴ They ('we') were convinced that the solution would be diplomatic, and to satisfy them, and maybe to get rid of them as well, they were sent to New York – proof of this being that on their return, no one met with them for them to be able to report on their activities.²⁷³⁵ When they came back from New York, they talked, if only to tell Bozizé's inner circle about their impressions of what people told them there,²⁷³⁶ but Adrien Poussou had no further communications with François Bozizé.²⁷³⁷ According to the witness, he did not go to New York representing FROCCA, the messages transmitted were not in the name of François

Without further information on this matter, the Chamber does not consider this allegation to compromise Adrien Poussou's account and relies on it accordingly.

Bozizé, even though he financed the mission, and no memorandum was object of a discussion with François Bozizé whom they told it was important to go to New York to meet people and speak with them about the situation in the country.²⁷³⁸

1040. As regards further activities of FROCCA following the meetings in Paris as outlined above,²⁷³⁹ the Chamber notes, from the evidence outlined below, that its members seemed to attempt to gain support from individuals or groups that they considered could contribute to FROCCA's stated cause. However, the evidence on record does not show that there would have been a concerted alignment of groups with FROCCA.

1041. First, Joachim Kokaté testified about being approached by Francis Bozizé who drafted and sent to him a document of the 'Collectif des Officiers Libres', which he wanted the witness to validate at the request of his father, and which Joachim Kokaté accepted, thereafter publishing it on social media.²⁷⁴⁰ According to the witness, this was just for the purpose of having his name on the document, it was a strategy of François Bozizé, but Joachim Kokaté had no role.²⁷⁴¹ The strategy of attack of Bozizé with others was planned by FROCCA.²⁷⁴² At the lunch they said they had an attack plan, a strategy, which they were going to work on, but Joachim Kokaté was not involved and could not give details; as former soldier, Joachim Kokaté considered that talking about 'attack' means going to war and he thought this was what FROCCA decided to do.²⁷⁴³ At the same time, the witness maintained that he was a supporter, sympathiser of the Anti-Balaka, but never on the ground; he never gave a single order and did not have that competence.²⁷⁴⁴ According to Joachim Kokaté, he understood after the meeting with Franklin Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona, Bernard Mokom, Eric Danboy, Rodrigue Bozizé in Yaoundé that they were the deciders of the military wing of FROCCA.²⁷⁴⁵ Mr Ngaïssona was determined to see that Bozizé come to power with him and Mr Ngaïssona told Joachim Kokaté that he organised and coordinated military actions in the field.²⁷⁴⁶ Joachim Kokaté stated that his statement on BBC Radio on 22 August 2013 was in the context of knowing that the Seleka was made up of Central Africans and mercenaries from Chad and Sudan, and in any event not a statement, but the opinion of the written media.²⁷⁴⁷

1042. The document before the Chamber mentions that since 10 December 2012, a ‘horde of foreign invaders’ is in the pay of certain compatriots; that since 24 March 2013, a strange fate is imposed on the entire people with the systematic violation of fundamental human rights; and that to stop this, the ‘Collective’ adheres completely to the objectives of FROCCA; asking all Central African patriots to put themselves at the disposal of the efforts made by François Bozizé, and stating that the time to act has come, asking for a patriotic uprising of all soldiers inside and out to liberate the country and re-establish the constitutional order.²⁷⁴⁸

1043. Second, Adrien Poussou testified about receiving an email forwarded to him by Mr Ngaïssona in August 2013, but indicated that he did not know Stéphane Youfeina, did not know the mentioned group, or any of the other groups that joined FROCCA in the acts of adhesion.²⁷⁴⁹ According to Adrien Poussou, in the main these groups were factitious – an individual alone could draft his own text and refer to a group to show there was public support for FROCCA, but in reality these groups did not exist, as was the case for Levi Yakété’s ‘MOREPOL’.²⁷⁵⁰ To Adrien Poussou’s knowledge, Kokaté was the only member of the previously mentioned ‘Collective of Free Officers’.²⁷⁵¹ Like ‘MOREPOL’ and some other movements that existed only in the form of their releases, that collective issued a statement indicating FROCCA membership.²⁷⁵² Adrien Poussou did not discuss with Mr Ngaïssona why the latter had sent the documents to him, he received emails quite regularly during that period and Mr Ngaïssona forwarded Adrien Poussou emails that had been received from Bangui.²⁷⁵³

1044. An email before the Chamber of 13 August 2013 from ‘youfeina stephane’ to Mr Ngaïssona indicates an attachment entitled ‘GSFROCCA.docx’, and states sending the document as discussed, email which then is forwarded by Mr Ngaïssona to Adrien Poussou on the same day.²⁷⁵⁴ An undated, unsigned document before the Chamber entitled ‘Groupe de soutien au Front de Retour à l’ordre constitutionnel en Centrafrique (GSFROCCA)’ states that following the recent announcement by François Bozizé of FROCCA’s creation, the ‘reflection group’ met and set up the GSFROCCA, mentioning the members of its coordination team.²⁷⁵⁵

1045. Third, media publications which are not further supported by other evidence suggest that the FDPC would also have aligned with FROCCA.²⁷⁵⁶ Similarly, the Chamber has before it a number of items which suggest activities of a group called ‘Jeunesse Centrafricaine du FROCCA’,²⁷⁵⁷ without however having received further information thereon.

1046. On the basis of the above, the Chamber considers that some groups may have expressed their support towards FROCCA, but that there was no general alignment with it.

1047. Adrien Poussou testified that at around end of November and beginning of December 2013, he was convinced that Anti-Balaka factions were acting in the name and on behalf of François Bozizé and his clan.²⁷⁵⁸ Former members of the PG and armed forces, considered as being close to François Bozizé, led these Anti-Balaka factions, as known by everyone and said by the government, and they knew François Bozizé was instrumentalising at least a faction of the Anti-Balaka.²⁷⁵⁹ When the attack on 5 December 2013 took place, there was a FROCCA ‘communiqué’ signed by Banoukepa which stated clearly that FROCCA was the political entity behind those who had attacked, there were government ‘communiqués’ which involved François Bozizé and the people close to him, and there was media information that named François Bozizé was being responsible for, or at least the beneficiary of, these attacks; also Mr Ngaissona.²⁷⁶⁰

1048. The Chamber notes that also witnesses who were not directly involved in setting up FROCCA or in its activities provided information on this group, as outlined below.

1049. P-1847 testified that he was informed by François Bozizé, in South Sudan, that he was leaving for Paris, where he then met up with his lawyer Banoukepa, Yakété, Kokaté, Adrien Poussou and other members of the Central African diaspora that supported Bozizé, and they created FROCCA, with Kokaté as spokesperson.²⁷⁶¹ P-1847 thought this was beginning September 2013, shortly before the UN summit in New York planned for 19 September 2013.²⁷⁶² The purpose of FROCCA was to coordinate military action on the ground against the Seleka group that was there.²⁷⁶³ As spokesperson, Joachim Kokaté provided information, made contact with the soldiers and combatants on the ground.²⁷⁶⁴ Bozizé made a statement on RFI in regard to this meeting, and Joachim Kokaté made a statement on BBC, while Levy Yakété called P-1847 and talked about the meeting, mentioning that they had designated Adrien Poussou to go to the US for the UN summit, to lobby and raise awareness among Central Africans in the US about the need to return to the constitutional order in the CAR.²⁷⁶⁵

1050. P-1847 was aware of the plan to return the constitutional order to the CAR, Yakété and Joachim Kokaté talked about it; the strategic plan as outlined accorded with P-1847’s understanding of what FROCCA was designed to do and doing.²⁷⁶⁶ After FROCCA was created, Kokaté asked P-1847 for the contact details of Godonam; Kokaté often contacted P-1847 and they discussed the situation in the country, political information, the organisation of FROCCA, in relation with Levy Yakété whom he always mentioned.²⁷⁶⁷ P-1847 was aware of Jean Serge Wafio's participation in FROCCA, he was an official of 'ECCAS' at the time and he decided to participate in FROCCA to help, as confirmed to P-1847.²⁷⁶⁸ Kokaté was contacting former military and fighters and tried to regroup them, both in relation to his role in the movement and in FROCCA.²⁷⁶⁹ At the time, they wanted to have the return to the constitutional order.²⁷⁷⁰

1051. Aurélien Llorca interviewed François Bozizé on 6 June 2014 in Entebbe, Uganda, occasion on which Bozizé denied commanding the Anti-Balaka in the CAR, any involvement with what was happening there, and stated not understanding why people would say he was responsible.²⁷⁷¹ Bozizé explained that the Anti-Balaka took control over Bossangoa in September 2013 when he was in Paris and thus he could not have been involved, and that the fact that a lot of people involved in that insurgency were close to him was a coincidence.²⁷⁷² Bozizé also said in relation to the telephone call tapped between him and Yvon Konaté that he had called Konaté at the request of the US State Department to prevent further violence, and that the leak of the conversation coincided with internal struggles within the Anti-Balaka movement for leadership, which Aurélien Llorca supposed was referring to the power battles between Bara, Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona, Wenezoui and others.²⁷⁷³ Bozizé said that he never played any coordination role for the Anti-Balaka and had never called any Anti-Balaka commander before that particular call, saying that the Anti-Balaka were a grassroots reaction to the crimes committed by the Seleka and that he welcomed the election of Samba-Panza.²⁷⁷⁴ Bozizé also said that his political movement, FROCCA or KNK, had no relation with the Anti-Balaka.²⁷⁷⁵ Aurélien Llorca believed Bozizé was not necessarily personally involved; during their meeting, which lasted quite long, Bozizé did not receive any phone calls, which indicated to the witness that he was not very busy.²⁷⁷⁶

1052. Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that in 2013, they were aware of meetings organised by close collaborators of Francis Bozizé in France for the purpose of organising the Anti-Balaka.²⁷⁷⁷ Francis Bozizé and Lin Banoukepa were the main organisers of those meetings.²⁷⁷⁸ Kokaté introduced himself as leader of FROCCA at the time, a movement which was also an Anti-Balaka movement.²⁷⁷⁹ Jean-Jacques Demafouth thought it was sort of a Central African front led by Kokaté with the objective to re-dynamise the Anti-Balaka movement.²⁷⁸⁰ Kokaté was travelling between Paris, Cameroon, Congo and other African countries to find resources and to mobilise Central African soldiers in training who had been sent by François Bozizé and to re-dynamise the movement.²⁷⁸¹

1053. P-0884 testified that FROCCA, according to its name, advocated for the return of the constitutional order, supporting François Bozizé's return to power, and favouring a transition.²⁷⁸² He heard François Bozizé's statement about the FROCCA's creation on the radio, but did not know anything about FROCCA's activities.²⁷⁸³ They ('we') were informed that Joachim Kokaté and Levy Yakété were involved in the activities of FROCCA, P-0884 recalled Yakété made such a statement over RFI.²⁷⁸⁴ According to P-0884, FROCCA was considered to be the political arm of the Anti-Balaka.²⁷⁸⁵ P-0884 did not know the link between Mr Ngaïssona and FROCCA, though in the organigram, which P-0884 did not verify, he was a political leader in the group.²⁷⁸⁶ P-0884 knew that Mr Ngaïssona was a member of FROCCA, but did not know how FROCCA was set up and which role Mr Ngaïssona played in it; he heard over the radio that he was a political leader, but did not have any details.²⁷⁸⁷

1054. P-2673 stated hearing about FROCCA on the radio, but not knowing what they did or anyone in it; further stating that everybody knew that Yakété was its founder and creator.²⁷⁸⁸ At one point, P-2673 befriended 'FROCCA' on Facebook for his own information.²⁷⁸⁹ P-2673 gave the impression that he was not amongst them but simply wanted to know more, having heard that those in FROCCA were having meetings.²⁷⁹⁰ P-2673 asked Yakété if he could go to FROCCA meetings but in reality did not want to attend, he merely wanted to find out where those from FROCCA were meeting, he also wanted Yakété to send him money.²⁷⁹¹ Asked about the relationship between FROCCA and the Anti-Balaka, if any, P-2673 opined that there was a link – all of Bozizé's entourage knew that there was a clear link between FROCCA and the Anti-Balaka, because members of FROCCA knew what Anti-Balaka were doing and vice versa, also Yakété was a member of FROCCA and supported the Anti-Balaka.²⁷⁹²

1056. P-1858 agreed with the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona never wanted the return of the constitutional order, and indicated that he believed that this thought was mentioned by Bara and that he heard Mr Ngaïssona talk about it for the second time, which was what brought discord between Mr Ngaïssona and 'Mokom'.²⁷⁹⁶ Bringing Bozizé back to power was what was meant when saying ‘return to the constitutional order’.²⁷⁹⁷ P-1858 agreed with the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona mentioned that the goal was reached in reference to chasing the Seleka away from power, whereas the goal of those who wanted to bring Bozizé back to power was never reached.²⁷⁹⁸

1057. According to P-2926’s report, François Bozizé went to France following stays in Yaoundé and Nairobi, seen there in summer 2013 and staying until September, coinciding with the re-emergence of his supporters and the creation of FROCCA announced on 5 August 2013, coordinated by Lin Banoukepa, composed of people close to Bozizé, including Mr Ngaïssona, Levy Yakété, Joachim Kokaté.²⁷⁹⁹ In releases and media interventions, the FROCCA coordinator took up the rhetoric of Bozizé’s circles from the beginning of the conflict in relation to the ‘forced Islamisation of the CAR’ and an attack launched by ‘Islamist Muslim mercenaries coming in more than 15,000 from Chad and Sudan’, which was perfectly illustrated by the ‘communiqué’ of 18 September 2013, which stated that the Seleka was systematically destroying public buildings, churches, houses of worship all across the CAR with the sole political aim of ‘de-Christianising’ the CAR to allow introduction of the Koran and forced Islamisation – it conceptualised the fight against the Muslims by bringing forward the notion of ‘Centrafricanité’, borrowing from the Ivorian political context.²⁸⁰⁰ This notion related to the argument that Seleka were not really citizens, and its promoters linked it to linguistic, cultural and religious aspects, in that people had to speak Sango, be part of the CAR culture (in particular through language), and not be Muslim.²⁸⁰¹ The agenda of FROCCA was return to the constitutional order, meaning the return of François Bozizé, playing the role of indirect spokesperson of Bozizé who was in hiding and stayed discreet.²⁸⁰² Through Lin Banoukepa, FROCCA also claimed the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, encouraging the youth to rise up against the ‘foreign Jihadists’ and considering this attack as a return to the constitutional order.²⁸⁰³

1058. The evidence as outlined above shows that FROCCA, founded in Paris in August 2013, was meant to advocate for the return to the constitutional order, which signified the return of François Bozizé to power. The evidence equally shows that Mr Ngaïssona was part of this group, active in its discussion, and that its executive director Lin Banoukepa did not work in isolation. Indeed, any steps undertaken in the context of FROCCA were part of broader-scale attempts to ensure François Bozizé’s return to power and must be seen in the context of steps and coordination efforts undertaken as discussed above, as well as of activities unfolding on the ground, as discussed in the following section.

4. Formation of groups in different localities and emergence of the Anti-Balaka

Against the backdrop of the violence committed by the Seleka, and in parallel to the activities in Cameroon and Zongo, self-defence groups in various localities across the CAR formed or re-activated from previous existence very quickly following the take-over of power by the Seleka. Individuals within those groups also obtained amulets or gris-gris. Some of these individuals and local groups converged onto and joined together in Gobere, north-east of Bossangoa.

In Gobere, civilians and former members of the Central African armed forces (FACA) and Presidential Guard gathered, and (i) organised into various sub-groups with a leader each; (ii) set up or maintained contacts with groups and individuals in other locations, including Maxime Mokom in Zongo, who was considered to be a coordinator of operations; (iii) organised trainings in weapon handling and combat by FACA members; and (iv) made further plans with a view to descending onto Bangui and removing the Seleka and Michel Djotodia from power.

At the same time, former members of the FACA and Presidential Guard also in other localities created new or joined pre-existing self-defence groups, organising themselves into military-like structures and assuming or sharing command over them.

Initially having formed separately, these groups started out with a common enemy and increasingly coordinated their activities, thereby essentially forming one movement. This movement came to be known as ‘Anti-Balaka’.

The armed groups forming at the time were armed mainly with makeshift and bladed weapons, hunting rifles, service weapons retained by members of the FACA, and weapons they seized from the members of the Seleka after engaging them in hostilities.

i. Self-defence groups in various localities

1059. While efforts were undertaken in localities outside of the CAR as outlined above, individuals within the CAR, in particular in the provinces, did not remain passive. Rather, as further outlined below, the evidence before the Chamber shows that, in light and in the context of the violence committed by the Seleka as outlined above,²⁸⁰⁴ groups composed mainly of civilians formed in various localities across different provinces of the CAR as well as in Bangui with a view to defending against the abuses perpetrated by the Seleka. It appears from this evidence that, in many localities, self-defence groups already existed in the past to fight against road bandits and poachers and that such groups were either re-activated or re-purposed with a view to defending against the Seleka.

1060. The Prosecution submits that, consistent with the plan set out in FROCCA’s founding document, Mr Ngaïssona ‘helped mobilise and equip existing self-defence groups, new recruits, FACA and PGs in strategic positions’ in Bangui, Zongo, around Gobere, and along the Cameroon and CAR border, ‘to prepare and execute attacks against Seleka positions’.²⁸⁰⁵ The Prosecution submits that the evidence ‘demonstrates unequivocally that [Mr] N[gaïssona] exercised his coordinating role in collaboration with Bernard M[okom] and Maxime M[okom]’.²⁸⁰⁶ In particular, the Prosecution argues that Mr Ngaïssona invited members of the KNK, FACA, and chiefs of self-defence groups to meetings in Yaoundé before the 5 December 2013 attacks to structure the Anti-Balaka.²⁸⁰⁷ It further argues that Mr Ngaïssona ‘provided money, ammunition, food, medication, and Thuraya satellite phones’ to the Anti-Balaka ‘in the field’ directly and indirectly, including through Bernard Mokom and Maxime Mokom.²⁸⁰⁸

1061. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that the evidence does not support any coordination between Maxime Mokom and Mr Yekatom’s group, or between the ‘Gobere group’ and individuals in Cameroon, notably Mr Ngaïssona, or Maxime Mokom.²⁸⁰⁹ Regarding the ‘Gobere group’, it argues that the evidence concerning Mr Ngaïssona coordinating with or issuing orders to this group is inconsistent and often amounts to hearsay and speculation,²⁸¹⁰ and that there is inconclusive evidence regarding Maxime Mokom’s interactions and role vis-à-vis the ‘Gobere group’.²⁸¹¹

1062. The Yekatom Defence concedes that ‘various local resistance groups’ formed, some of which were ‘loosely coordinated, with differing levels of coordination’, but that this was not ‘unified, structured, and ideologically homogenous’, as argued by the Prosecution.²⁸¹² Regarding these groups, the Yekatom Defence submits that after the Seleka takeover, a group called ‘Siriri’ was formed and led by Yvon Konaté in Bangassou following instructions of François Bozizé with the aim of reaching Bangui to fight against the Seleka, including among its members FACA elements and Levy Yakété as ‘coordinator/spokesperson’.²⁸¹³ It further suggests that the CLPC was established through the initiative of ‘Mokom’ while he was in Zongo prior to 5 December 2013, aimed at ‘persuasion and mobilisation of the population to bring Bozizé back to power’, and that individuals associated with it included, inter alia, P-0306, Konaté, Brice Emotion Namsio, Alfred Legrand Ngaya, Lebene, Ngremangou and P-0884.²⁸¹⁴ The Yekatom Defence also argues that P-0954 created his own armed group called FRAPPE to resist the Seleka;²⁸¹⁵ and

a. Information about a ‘movement’ forming in the provinces

1064. Indeed, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that the information she received once she became head of the transition government indicated that the Anti-Balaka were youth organised to defend their locality against robbers and bandits, using artisanal weapons, knives, non-fire arms to defend themselves, which then organised to defend their interests in light of the Seleka abuses.²⁸¹⁷ While she heard about the Anti-Balaka while she was mayor of Bangui, the first time that the witness became aware of the group as an organised movement was on 5 December 2013.²⁸¹⁸

1065. Adrien Poussou stated that information notably through the press indicated that ‘these “Anti-Balaka”’ – expression which had two meanings, but could be understood as ‘anti-machete’ – had more and more weapons and were increasingly better organised.²⁸¹⁹ This was between about April and summer 2013.²⁸²⁰ Since Adrien Poussou learned in Yaoundé that those close to François Bozizé wanted to use armed violence to take power, he concluded that they would organise ‘these Anti-Balaka militiamen’ to attack the Seleka.²⁸²¹ Levy Yakété, who was also in France and with whom Adrien Poussou had occasional discussions, confirmed this when saying, ‘We are organising the young men out in the field’.²⁸²²

1066. Similarly, P-0884 explained that the movement was made up of different individuals from different areas like Bossangoa, Bouar, Mbaïki, Pissa, reacting to the abuses of the Seleka.²⁸²³ Everyone was organising their own ‘demonstrations’, Mr Ngaïssona, the Anti-Balaka, and they came together; everybody was responding differently and then moving towards this resistance.²⁸²⁴ For example, Maxime Mokom and Bernard Mokom called P-0884 to say that they were each in contact with some people; these people were organising their resistance spontaneously in different zones; in Cameroon, the provinces, groups coming from Bossangoa, Boganagom, Yaloké, Berbérati, Bossembélé, converging on Bangui on 5 December 2013; Maxime Mokom and others were all organising themselves separately.²⁸²⁵ At the beginning, the Anti-Balaka were several groups that came from the provinces, a revolution of the population, not a group that belonged to a single individual.²⁸²⁶

1067. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that they heard of people mobilising all over the country and moving towards Bangui using cattle routes.²⁸²⁷ The youth joined the Anti-Balaka spontaneously as they were angry with the way they were treated by the Seleka; they were motivated and it was not necessary to recruit anyone to join.²⁸²⁸ According to the witness, young people came from all villages, Sangreline, Ouham-Pendé, Ouham, Ombella-M’Poko, because people were exasperated.²⁸²⁹

1068. P-0876 stated that self-defence groups gathered under the banner Anti-Balaka, in a spontaneous movement without a structure as such led by someone and no political agenda at the time; they gathered in the provinces with ComZones and groups that did not know each other.²⁸³⁰ The name came up after the Anti-Balaka from Bouca clashed with the Seleka there and won, taking their weapons.²⁸³¹ The ComZones reported to Captain Ngremangou, intermediary between Bozizé and the elements on the ground, there were also Bozizé's children like Francis, and Mr Ngaïssona provided money.²⁸³² P-0876 agreed with the suggestion that it would have been impossible to organise all those groups under one coordination in 2013 and also 2014.²⁸³³

1069. Also other witnesses mentioned hearing of resistance groups organising in various localities in the face of violence committed by the Seleka.²⁸³⁴ In fact, the phenomenon of self-defence groups in CAR provinces was not new, with local groups in the past defending against road bandits and poachers.²⁸³⁵

at the hand of the Seleka.²⁸³⁷ Such defence against Seleka atrocities also meant, according to some witnesses, removal of Michel Djotodia and of the Seleka from power.²⁸³⁸

1071. It appears from the evidence that while the above were among the initial motives, this did not include, in the early stages, advocating for the return of François Bozizé to power, or indeed having wider political ambitions. For example, P-1193 explained that after the collapse of the ‘Seleka government’, the population expected a change, a return to peace, to constitutional order.²⁸³⁹ Vivien Beina stated that initially, the goal was to get rid of the Seleka, they had no political ambition and the idea of taking Bangui came later.²⁸⁴⁰ Similarly, P-2841 stated that the Anti-Balaka was not created to ‘take power’, it was a spontaneous self-defence movement at first, politics came later.²⁸⁴¹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya confirmed that the objective of the Anti-Balaka groups was to defend themselves against the Seleka and that these groups were not set up with the aim of bringing Bozizé back to power – indicating that at that moment they were not thinking of Bozizé because he had abandoned them.²⁸⁴² D30-4848 testified that the Seleka was a danger for the country and that it was necessary for them to leave, so everyone was making efforts to ‘drive them out by all means possible’.²⁸⁴³

1072. The Chamber further refers to its discussion of the Anti-Balaka’s objectives and policies, as set out below.²⁸⁴⁴

1073. The evidence before the Chamber does not allow to conclude when or in which context the name ‘Anti-Balaka’ first appeared. It is clear from the evidence that this name was commonly used for the groups forming against the backdrop of the Seleka violence.

1074. Different witnesses provided different explanations for the meaning of the name, referring to it standing for ‘anti-machete’,²⁸⁴⁵ on the basis of ‘balaka’ being the Sango word for machete, or for ‘anti-balles AK’, in reference to them being protected against bullets.²⁸⁴⁶

1075. Several witnesses mentioned that self-defence groups organised to fight against the Seleka were called ‘Siriri’,²⁸⁴⁷ referring to the same phenomenon that eventually was generally known as the Anti-Balaka.

1076. The question of gris-gris – amulets – being used by Anti-Balaka is widely discussed in the evidence before the Chamber. While it is clear that also Seleka may have worn gris-gris,²⁸⁴⁸

as well as individuals not necessarily associated with the Anti-Balaka,²⁸⁴⁹ it is equally clear that gris-gris in the context of the conflict within the CAR and certainly following the Seleka takeover and the emergence of self-defence groups were commonly associated with the Anti-Balaka.²⁸⁵⁰ The evidence mentions the acquisition of gris-gris in Gobre and other areas.²⁸⁵¹ The evidence also indicates that not all Anti-Balaka elements necessarily wore gris-gris.²⁸⁵²

1077. In this context, the Chamber considers of lesser significance that certain rules may have attached to wearing gris-gris.²⁸⁵³ The fact that some people considered that breaking such rules may have impacted the protective capabilities of their gris-gris does not, in and of

1078. Several witnesses, as further outlined below, testified to the formation of self-defence groups in specific localities, including in particular in the Ouham prefecture. At least some of these groups would eventually gather and join together in Gobre.²⁸⁵⁵

1079. For example, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that he was the secretary-general of the Anti-Balaka in his village in the Bossangoa area, directing operations to attack the Seleka in the bush, with him having a hunting rifle and them making their hunting cartridges out of ammunition seized from the Seleka.²⁸⁵⁶ They also seized weapons from Seleka they defeated.²⁸⁵⁷ The witness also traced the origins of the group back to previous groups that had defended against road bandits and poachers,²⁸⁵⁸ stating that they started calling themselves Anti-Balaka when François Bozizé was still in power, when armed Peuhl acted as road bandits and they defended themselves.²⁸⁵⁹ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana thought there were other groups which fought against highway bandits; in fact, there were self-defence groups for each locality, for example, Godonam Richard was part of the self-defence group in Ouham, there was somebody else in Bogangolo and other localities close by.²⁸⁶⁰ He also indicated that on one side they were called Anti-Balaka while in another region they were called ‘Anti-Zarguina’.²⁸⁶¹

1080. Similarly, P-2269, who had initially crossed to Zongo,²⁸⁶² stated that when his mother was killed, he got very angry and wanted to avenge her death, so he crossed back to Bangui with over 100 men, going through the bush to Bossangoa.²⁸⁶³ P-2269 went to Bossangoa with his men ‘to prepare the rebellion’ – he knew some of the men from the 2003 rebellion, some were from Bangui, Bossangoa, and a mix of other areas, and they were all in the camp in Zongo with him.²⁸⁶⁴ According to P-2269, ‘Mokom’ told him to fight the Seleka, to help lead the rebellion.²⁸⁶⁵ His task was ‘to cross with the men and attack the Seleka’; as ‘libérateurs’, they (‘we’) had knowledge of what could be useful for the movement and they could teach the youth who joined them.²⁸⁶⁶ P-2269 stated that ‘Mokom’ did not create the rebellion, he joined it like him; the person who created the rebellion was from Bossangoa.²⁸⁶⁷ In Bossangoa, men and women joined them.²⁸⁶⁸ The Anti-Balaka only had hunting weapons like sticks and machetes, and no support, and they did not want outsiders because they did not want politics to interfere.²⁸⁶⁹ They did not have the objective of taking the presidency, they (‘we’) just wanted to bring peace, felt abandoned and alone.²⁸⁷⁰ While in Zongo, Dazoumi Yalo wanted to take power by force and be president, but they (‘we’) did not agree and he did not become their leader.²⁸⁷¹

1081. P-2602 stated that the overall leader of the movement in the Ouham area was Dedane, who was a chief corporal while the rest of them were only corporal, and that other Anti-Balaka in Dekoa, Sibut, Grimari, Ndjoukou defended those locations.²⁸⁷² He explained that if those in the other locations had their phone numbers, they would call in case they needed reinforcement, and some of their men would leave through the bush to help them.²⁸⁷³ They would know who to call because in those various areas they had military who fled during the crisis and they would look for a way to be in contact with their colleagues, went from left to right.²⁸⁷⁴

²⁸⁶⁴ P-2269 Statement, CAR-OTP-2111-0336-R01, at 0341, para. 36. The Chamber notes that P-2269 commented on different lists of individuals, including List, CAR-OTP-2111-0365, which, according to P-2269, contained also individuals that were not part of his group, and at the same time not all persons that were in his group (see P-2269 Statement, CAR-OTP-2111-0336-R01, at 0358, para. 168), and List, CAR-OTP-2111-0367, a handwritten list which P-2269 started in Zongo and updated in the bush to keep track of his men (see P-2269 Statement, CAR-OTP-2111-0336-R01, at 0358, para. 169). The Chamber notes that List, CAR-OTP-2111-0365 appears to contain two lists of names, on the first page names listed between numbers 102 and 152, entitled ‘ABLK Agriculture’, and on the second page names listed between numbers 127 and 168, entitled ‘Liste des candidats’, with what appears to be a fax stamp indicating 19 November 2016. The Chamber further notes the evidence of P-0461, who stated that people in Bangui heard that some people started fighting back against the Seleka in Bossangoa and Bouca, and young people of the 4th arrondissement started to discretely organise themselves and arranged going to Bossangoa to join this self-defence movement, travelling in small groups of 3 to 4 persons – this movement became known as the Anti-Balaka (see P-0461 Statement, CAR-OTP-2031-0190-R01, at 0194-95, para. 25).

1082.P-0306, a resident of Bouca, testified that when the Seleka killed his older siblings, he decided to defend himself and started to fight against them.²⁸⁷⁵ He explained that the population spontaneously rose up to chase out the Seleka; they fought them and once the Seleka left, they recuperated their weapons, including AK-47 called ‘kalachs’, DKM, 10 weapons in total; eventually reconquering the locality.²⁸⁷⁶

1083. Significantly, P-0306 described how two emissaries came to his group passing on messages from Mr Ngaïssona and saying that ‘the authority’ asked them to go to Bangui to assist in chasing out the Seleka.²⁸⁷⁷ P-0306 further explained that before they started walking to Bangui, they were told to go and fight and that they would receive some assistance at the end for food and for buying things they needed, they were promised that some help would be given at the end of the operation.²⁸⁷⁸ He specified that they were promised to receive money when they reached Bangui and that ‘[t]hat is how [they] mobilised for [their] country with a view to chasing out the Seleka’.²⁸⁷⁹ P-0306 confirmed the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona offered the money and the message came through Konaté.²⁸⁸⁰ He further specified that ‘they’ talked about a large amount of money, around 250 million or billion, P-

The Chamber notes in this context that P-0306 initially did not recognise an individual in Photograph, CAR-OTP-2099-0262 as Konaté, but then recognised him in a compilation (see P-0306: T-065, p. 33, line 11 – p. 36, line 16; T-067, p. 33, line 18 – p. 37, line 4; T-068, p. 22, line 22 – p. 23, line 5, p. 76, line 10 – p. 78, line 16). On this basis, and bearing in mind the overall testimony of P-0306 on this event, the Chamber does not consider the witness initially not making a relevant identification to render his account unreliable.

0306 did not recall exactly; however, when they got to Bangui, they did not receive anything, the promise was not kept.²⁸⁸¹

1084. P-2269 stated that he got his men to go to the bush near Bouca to meet Andjilo and his men; he knew Andjilo from before, as a person one could call who could do things.²⁸⁸² P-2269 took about 280 men and on the way some more joined them, and they gathered in the bush near Bouca.²⁸⁸³ Thereafter, they went to Gobere.²⁸⁸⁴ P-2269 stated that they were organised by areas, even if they were all Anti-Balaka, each area had a chief, like Bejouane who moved from Gaga to Yaloké and was also with them near Bouca before going back to Gaga.²⁸⁸⁵

1085. On the other hand, away from the provinces, in Bangui itself, P-0889 and Brice Emotion Namsio started organising a self-defence group amongst youngsters in Boy-Rabe.²⁸⁸⁶ They had three bows and two machetes, but did not use these weapons because they were concerned that when seeing them with those, the Seleka would use their ‘war weapons’ against them.²⁸⁸⁷ To defend themselves they created the ‘opération casseroles’: when the Seleka arrived in the neighbourhood, they took pots to make noise.²⁸⁸⁸ At the beginning, they only had 35 in their group.²⁸⁸⁹

1086. As further outlined below, also individuals who were not directly involved in any groups formed both in the provinces and in Bangui got to know of their formation.

1087. For example, P-2462 heard her neighbour Stéphane also called ‘Tol Nol’, who had left Bossangoa and had gone to Bangui,²⁸⁹⁰ when he returned about two weeks before the clash in Bossangoa on 17 September 2013, that he had gone to attend a training to prepare the revenge against the Seleka because ‘they were foreigners who had come to destroy the country’.²⁸⁹¹

1088. Similarly, P-0475, an imam in Bangui at the time, explained that before the Anti-Balaka formally emerged in Bossangoa and Bangui, young people of Bossangoa formed defence groups, as the local population had no other way of protecting itself against the Seleka violence.²⁸⁹² In September 2013, P-0475 went with Archbishop Nzapalaigna and others to Zere to try to persuade the young people to put down their weapons.²⁸⁹³ There, P-0475 saw a group of around 20 or more young people, including women, with amulets and gris-gris, hunting rifles, makeshift guns and machetes, who were adamant and determined about attempting to enter Bangui, taking over governmental power, and said that they wanted to overthrow the Seleka because they had done a lot of harm, killed their parents, destroyed their homes and markets.²⁸⁹⁴ P-0475 said there was tension because of him being Muslim.²⁸⁹⁵ In a photograph taken during the visit, P-0475 identified the young people who called themselves Anti-Balaka,²⁸⁹⁶ drawing a distinction with individuals in another photograph who, according to him, were civilians, not soldiers.²⁸⁹⁷

1089. P-1847, who received information from Achille Godonom and relatives in Bossangoa,²⁸⁹⁸ said that Achille Godonom was the leader of ‘the original Anti-Balaka’ that fought against road bandits on the Bossangoa-Bouca-Batangafu axis, and that Andjilo was another Anti-Balaka leader who was part of this ‘original Anti-Balaka’ and under command of Achille Godonom at that time.²⁸⁹⁹ Achille Godonom fled to Garam-Bouläi and was in contact via telephone with several of his elements on the ground.²⁹⁰⁰ P-1847 considered that at the beginning, the Anti-Balaka were not ordered nor organised.²⁹⁰¹

1090. When P-1577, a photojournalist, travelled to Bossangoa and its surroundings in early November 2013, he encountered individuals that identified themselves as Anti-Balaka.²⁹⁰² The majority of weapons that P-1577 saw at that time were artisanal, fabricated in local villages, machetes carried in a sleeve, and a few Kalashnikovs.²⁹⁰³ When they met the local population, it was clear there was some hierarchy because they were always taken to a spokesperson or chief of the Anti-Balaka, who identified as such, they were in charge, there was a clear hierarchy on who they would speak to and who not.²⁹⁰⁴ P-1577 heard that the local groups were in communication with each other, for example they heard on a number of occasions that if there was a fear of an attack, or a military or Anti-Balaka event to take place, they would summon the other Anti-Balaka groups from other villages, sometimes quite some distance away, and then come together as multiple Anti-Balaka groups to carry out that particular mission.²⁹⁰⁵

1091. The Chamber notes in this regard that this observation made by P-1577 is indeed borne out by the evidence on the advance of Anti-Balaka groups towards Bangui and attacks in Bangui and Bossangoa.²⁹⁰⁶

because their parents and relatives had been killed; they could not let foreigners – people who came from Chad, Niger, Sudan – ‘have their [own] way’.²⁹¹³

1095. According to P-0974, a former Anti-Balaka member, the second resistance to Seleka took place in villages around Bossangoa, in Zere, and in Bozizé’s native village of Benzambé, and the resistance movement became widespread, larger operations were carried out, and many Seleka were killed, as P-0974 heard on RFI.²⁹¹⁴ Each of these resistance groups had their own gris-gris, and the group in the south led by ‘Rombhot’, Cœur de Lion and ‘Habib’ crossed the river with gris-gris from the DRC.²⁹¹⁵ The largest area with gris-gris was Bouca-Batangafo, led by Andjilo who was the most powerful marabout-fighter in the area; and Damara was led by 12 Puissances, who took his power from DRC.²⁹¹⁶ In the west, Anti-Balaka in Ouham-Pende prefecture used gris-gris; and in Bouar, the Anti-Balaka – as the resistance became known later –, was led by three Ndales, General Ndale, Colonel Ibrahim Ndale, and Adamou Ndale.²⁹¹⁷ Belo was another Anti-Balaka first active on the Bouar-Bohon axis, then based in Abba.²⁹¹⁸ After General Souleyman was killed, the Seleka retreated north from Berberati, Carnot, Baoro, Bouar, Bocaranga, facing resistance the whole way from the Anti-Balaka, in Ndale, Belo.²⁹¹⁹

1096. D30-4914, a gendarme posted to the border with Cameroon starting in October 2013, stated that the self-defence group in Bouar was led by the Ndale family, including Adamou Ndale and Ibrahim Ndale; and that Armel Emtenu was also part of this group, seconded by Jules Pessere.²⁹²⁰ In 2013, Adamou Ndale did not go to Cameroon, he stayed in Bouar; the population in Bouar donated for the resistance, of which D30-4914 heard because his group and the group in Bouar called and exchanged regularly.²⁹²¹

1097.P-2232, a former Anti-Balaka member, testified that Dedane went into the bush in the north and started fights in Bozoum together with Richard Bejouane, with numbers gradually growing; General Mauri, Hippolyte Côme Azounou, Corporal Inga joined and fought against the Seleka.²⁹²² Following Ndjo,²⁹²³ the movement started growing in strength.²⁹²⁴ They had hunting weapons and machetes in the beginning and retrieved some weapons from the Seleka during their attacks.²⁹²⁵ Andjilo and 12 Puissances joined the movement and all of them together went to Bangui.²⁹²⁶ Groups were created in Bossangoa and the initiator of the first group was the leader and would immediately become the elements' ComZone, who gave them orders, took them all the way, contacted the coordination to inform about all those movements, provided guidance and leadership for the troops on the ground.²⁹²⁷ They borrowed the word 'ComZone' from the army, it is a military term, a region commander for the north, east, any other area.²⁹²⁸

1098.P-2393, a resident of Carnot, stated that since mid-2013, they heard persistent rumours that some Christians were forming a group named Anti-Balaka, gathering in the bush, and were going to attack Carnot; they also heard that some of these Anti-Balaka were from Carnot but that they would also be assisted by Anti-Balaka coming from different areas.²⁹²⁹

1099.Zenaba Oumar, a resident of Yaloké, was told by some Christian friends that Christian men and adults who fled Yaloké got together in the bush and trained to fight the Seleka.²⁹³⁰ The witness stated that there was fear within the Muslim community that the Christians were forming groups for a revenge attack on the Muslim community in Yaloké and surrounding towns and villages.²⁹³¹ When those in the Christian and Muslim community were talking

c. Gobere

1101. With self-defence groups forming in various localities in the CAR provinces, various groups and individuals, including from the mentioned self-defence groups in particular within the Ouham prefecture, gathered in Gobere, a locality north-east of Bossangoa. The Chamber received the evidence of witnesses who were present at Gobere and thus in a position to describe the situation, including Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, P-0975, P-2658 and P-2602. As further outlined below, these witnesses explained how they arrived to Gobere and their reasons for going there, which groups and individuals were present, which activities they engaged in, and which plans were made with a view to eventually descending onto Bangui.

1102. The Prosecution submits that the FACA and the PG gathered the pre-existing self-defence groups and new recruits in Gobere and Benzambe, where they prepared them for combat, administered rituals and/or fetishes, provided rudimentary training, organising them into a military-like structure and arming them.²⁹³⁴ The Prosecution submits FACA, PG, and non-military chiefs assumed and/or shared command over approximately 2,000 elements in Gobere and that Maxime Mokom coordinated them.²⁹³⁵ The Prosecution argues that, as a consequence, the number of elements, their strength and military capabilities grew over the next months.²⁹³⁶

1103. The Yekatom Defence submits that the Gobere group was formed by FACA soldiers that fled to Gobere during the Seleka takeover to resist Seleka exactions and that Maxime Mokom was in contact with them and other self-defence groups in the provinces prior to 5 December 2013, and that individuals ‘associated’ with the ‘Gobere Group’ included, inter alia, Dedane, P-2269, Denamganai, Bejouane, Houronti, P-2602, Bama, P-0306, Lebene, Mazimbelet, Yadjoungou, Mokpem, Kema, Konaté, Danfei and Brice Emotion Namsio.²⁹³⁷

1104. The Ngaïssona Defence submits that the Prosecution failed to present coherent and corroborative evidence on the location of Gobere, the group’s organisation and composition, and subsequent movements.²⁹³⁸ Specifically, it argues that (i) information on the location of the Gobere camp is confusing and inconsistent; (ii) the evidence is inconclusive on the origins of the ‘Gobere group’; (iii) the Prosecution failed to present corroborative evidence concerning the organisation of the group; (iv) witnesses do not corroborate each other on any training in Gobere; (v) witnesses did not unequivocally identify the leaders of the group and did not confirm that FACA ‘assumed or shared command over self-defence groups’; (vi) the evidence is inconclusive on the identities of group members; (vii) the group had ‘very limited’ logistical capacity, with no access to funding or weapons; and (viii) evidence is inconsistent on the group’s progression out of Gobere and subsequent attacks in the region.²⁹³⁹

1105. The Ngaïssona Defence further argues that Mr Ngaïssona did not assist Anti-Balaka and FACA elements in Gobere,²⁹⁴⁰ and had no role in financing the individuals gathered at Gobere.²⁹⁴¹

1106. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that members of the FACA and civilians, including those who had already organised in self-defence groups, gathered in Gobere, administered traditional rituals, organised and structured the groups, trained in handling weapons, and strategised with a view to advancing through the provinces towards Bangui in order to drive Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power. i. Arrival to Gobere and reasons for going there 1107. Several witnesses testified about the circumstances in which they decided to go to Gobere, and how they reached the location.

1108. At the outset, the Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence's submission that '[i]nformation on the location of G[obéré] camp is confusing and inconsistent'.²⁹⁴³ The Chamber considers that the evidence of three witnesses who were at Gobere and provided sketches or marked maps with a view to indicating the location in fact largely overlaps. Indeed, P-2602, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana and P-2658 all located Gobere to the north, north-east of Bossangoa,²⁹⁴⁴ with maps also showing 'Bonguere' as a separate location south thereof.²⁹⁴⁵ That the location indicated by these three witnesses is not exactly the same is, in the Chamber's view, immaterial for reaching a conclusion on the approximate location. Indeed, the Chamber considers it reasonable for individuals walking in areas otherwise unfamiliar to them to not subsequently pinpointing the locations of these areas on maps or aerial imagery shown to them. This is with the exception of the information provided by P-2251, who located Gobere further south-east of Bossangoa.²⁹⁴⁶ In light of the other evidence before it, the Chamber does not rely on P-2251's evidence concerning the location of Gobere.

1109. P-2602 was the first to arrive to Gobere, everything that happened there took place when he was already there.²⁹⁴⁷ P-2602 stated that he fled into the bush and walked to Ouham after he was wounded when the crisis started, and they constituted themselves into groups to prevent more mercenaries from entering.²⁹⁴⁸ Before they went to Bossangoa centre and the Chadian contingent took all of ‘them’ back to Chad, their base was at 43 kilometres from Bossangoa, in the bush, called Gobere.²⁹⁴⁹

1110. According to P-2602, Danboy Dedane decided for Gobere to be chosen as base because he was born in Bowaye and knew the forest, the area very well.²⁹⁵⁰ On the way there, P-2602 told the former self-defence group in each village and hunters they met in the bush that he was going to Gobere and people could join if they felt like defending the country, and the hunters would pass on the message.²⁹⁵¹ P-2602 was in communication with Kema, Houronti, Bama, Feikouma along the way, asking if they met with the mercenaries on the way, if anything happened to them, and then told them they would meet in Gobere.²⁹⁵² While in Gobere, they sent messages to the small villages around, to the chiefs, self-defence groups, to tell them, that they were children of the country, would like to defend, and asking them to supply food, and to let children who thought they were strong come to join in Gobere and defend the country.²⁹⁵³ P-2602 had heard about Gobere because it is in his sub-prefecture, though he had never been to the place specifically; in his mind, he wanted to go his home town, Kabo, but Dedane, who was born in Bowaye, said he knew a bit about Gobere and decided they should stay there.²⁹⁵⁴

1111. P-0975 had heard about men gathering in Gobere to prepare gris-gris and revolt against the Seleka, so he walked with others through the villages of Bogangolo, Ndjo, Bossangoa to join the men in Gobere, arriving there in June or July 2013.²⁹⁵⁵ According to P-0975, Gobere was remote so that the Seleka would not see that they were gathering and training.²⁹⁵⁶

1112. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana similarly heard that men were gathering in Gobere, north of Bossangoa, with planes, weapons, tanks, and that white people would give them weapons – they were told to go there by word of mouth, it spread all over the provinces.²⁹⁵⁷ The witness heard from a fetish seller called ‘Benjamin’, a zone commander who later also went to Bangui, that they ‘had to go to Gobere to defend [their] country against the Sudanese and Chadian mercenaries’, who did not even speak Sango or French but only Arabic.²⁹⁵⁸ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that ‘men from Bozoum, Bossembélé, Bouar, Baoro, Berbérati, Carnot’ came to Gobere to get their fetishes from the ‘marabout’ and then returned to their villages, recruit in their localities and share fetishes, which helped the whole Anti-Balaka movement spread in the CAR.²⁹⁵⁹ Those who had been close to François Bozizé fled to Gobere and were planning to go back to Bangui to force out the Seleka.²⁹⁶⁰

1113. Indeed, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana explained that after François Bozizé’s and Godonam’s departure, the soldiers surrounding François Bozizé decided to go to Gobere to set up a group.²⁹⁶¹ On their way, they met Modibo Lundi who also took Mauri, and once they had reached Benzambe and Gobere, they set up a group which was called ‘Anti-Zarguina’, but later called ‘Anti-Balaka’.²⁹⁶² The witness left his village of Gbozo in June 2013, in a group of 67 who were joined by others along the way, of which he was chosen to be the leader walking to Gobere, circumventing Bogangolo to Bobala and staying in the bush close to Ndjo, then crossing Bossangoa, the Ouham river, and reaching Gobere.²⁹⁶³ According to Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, Gobere is in the bush between Yourouba (where François Bozizé had his house) and Benzambe.²⁹⁶⁴ also heard that ‘Marabouts’ would bring fetishes to Gobere.²⁹⁶⁶ The witness went to Gobere to defend his country, but he was also motivated by the promises, they were told that the former president would provide them with weapons so they could liberate the country.²⁹⁶⁷ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana heard from ‘Benjamin’ from Ndjo, who sold fetishes, and from others who were at Ndjo that weapons and fetishes would be provided.²⁹⁶⁸

1115. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that the formation of the group was something many people knew about and they did not ask people to come, but no one would have known there was a gathering if it had been done in a random way: the ‘modibo’, Mauri, Benjamin, Bien from Boali, Honoré, Bengue sold fetishes and people who bought them returned to their locations and re-sold them to men who wanted to protect themselves against attacks.²⁹⁶⁹ When they were in the bush, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana heard the name Mokom, who was still on the other side of the river later when the witness was in Bangui and Mr Ngaïssona was the first person to return.²⁹⁷⁰

1116. P-2658, who was taken by an Anti-Balaka group on a road near Gbonguere and eventually moved along with an Anti-Balaka group until their attack in Bossangoa in September 2013,²⁹⁷¹ drew a distinction between ‘Gobere’ and ‘Gbonguere’,²⁹⁷² and testified that Gobere is in the bush, one could see very far, there were no mountains or hills, it was really in the bush with very few spare huts.²⁹⁷³ According to P-2658, the hill on which Dedane stayed was near Gbonguere, and he moved about from that hill because it was easier to have the telephone network from there.²⁹⁷⁴ P-2658 did not see any civilians when he was there, only Anti-Balaka.²⁹⁷⁵

1117. The Chamber notes in this regard that Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana described the area of Gobere as mountainous,²⁹⁷⁶ and further stated that the only place they spent a lot of time at was Gobere, and once they left, they moved forward heading in the direction indicated to them.²⁹⁷⁷ On the first point, and recalling that Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana and P-2658 placed Gobere in similar areas towards the north-west of Bossangoa, the Chamber considers this discrepancy concerning its description as mountainous to be immaterial. On the second point, and noting that no other witness specifically mentioned a group staying in ‘Gbonguere’, the Chamber recalls the specific circumstances of P-2658’s stay with the groups around Gobere, that he was with them for some weeks having been abducted and therefore likely not informed of all details of the group’s workings, while at the same time noting Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana’s evidence that at some point, the group split up.²⁹⁷⁸ In light of this, the Chamber does not consider the witnesses’ accounts to be contradictory on its face, and relies on their descriptions of the groups and their activities accordingly.

1118. Also witnesses who did not go to Gobere themselves had information on the groups gathering there. Specifically, Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that Gobere and Kpalanboa were villages of their ancestors, well known by all Central Africans, and in light of the Seleka atrocities, the youth of the provinces grouped together to resist, following in the traces of their ancestors to Gobere to ask their blessings, so in Gobere, the ‘Anti-Balaka was born’.²⁹⁷⁹ The same explanation holds for Kpalanboa, about 35 kilometres from Bossangoa on the road leading to Benzambe and Nana.²⁹⁸⁰ According to the witness, the youth from Ouham-Pende and Ouham started the resistance because their home country was in danger and one needed to react.²⁹⁸¹

1119. Brice Emotion Namsio, who was in Bangui at the time,²⁹⁸² stated that Gobere was a village in Ouham, behind Bossangoa, where ‘they’ regrouped to start opposing the Seleka.²⁹⁸³ The witness also mentioned a marabout called ‘Maury’ who started out at Gobere, towards Batangafo.²⁹⁸⁴

1120. Roger de Martial Yagao, who was in Bossangoa from September or October 2013 onwards, heard that there was an Anti-Balaka base at Gobere, 70 kilometres from Bossangoa on the road to Bouca, where the Anti-Balaka were getting their fetishes to be protected; the witness himself never went there and did not know who the Anti-Balaka chief was there.²⁹⁸⁵

1121. P-2673, who was in Cameroon at the time, heard about Gobere and was in contact with Bama,²⁹⁸⁶ stated that Bama was there, describing it as a little village where the Anti-Balaka came from, and that often one would hear them say, ‘I’m a real Anti-Balaka, I came from G[o]bere’.²⁹⁸⁷ P-2673 stated that Bama was there already before the Seleka coup.²⁹⁸⁸ P-2673 did not know if the FACA in Cameroon were talking to the FACA in Gobere.²⁹⁸⁹

1122. P-0965, who joined Andjilo’s group shortly before the attack in Bangui on 5 December 2013,²⁹⁹⁰ stated that the Anti-Balaka movement in Bossangoa started in Gobere, then they came all the way to Bangui.²⁹⁹¹ P-0965 said that the original name was ‘Siriri’ and everybody knew the group by that name, their objective was to bring peace.²⁹⁹²

1123. Alfred Legrand Ngaya heard rumour that the Anti-Balaka started in Gobere where they got their fetishes, which were also used by FACA elements, though the witness did not know if they also got them from Gobere.²⁹⁹³ According to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, it was due to the fetishes that the Anti-Balaka, once they got angry, became ‘uncontrollable’.²⁹⁹⁴

did not know what they did there, he did not live with them, he did not know the ancestral traditions, as a Gbaya city person who grew up in Bangui.²⁹⁹⁶ According to the witness, she heard from her father how they were initiated.²⁹⁹⁷ Odette Namsona said that the young people came together well before 5 December 2013, the Anti-Balaka movement emerged before that, in 2013 young Muslims attacked these young people and they decided to gather at this ancestral location to be trained and learn the ancestral warrior rites.²⁹⁹⁸

1125. Nestor Wiabona stated that the Anti-Balaka formed in a dry place called Gobere, had only traditional weapons, and the witness did not hear of any authority or any support they would have received.²⁹⁹⁹ Jeannot was the leader of the Anti-Balaka during the events, he made traditional ‘soins’ (‘treatment’).³⁰⁰⁰ The goal of the Anti-Balaka was not to have Bozizé return to power, but rather to have peace return, because the Muslims in town wanted to convert all Christians.³⁰⁰¹

ii. Individuals and leaders in Gobere

1126. According to the evidence before the Chamber, several FACA members were present in Gobere, in addition to civilians.

1127. For instance, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that there were initially 15 FACA members, mostly from the PG, and one policeman, among the civilians, with more FACA members progressively joining over time.³⁰⁰² Initially the FACA members and police officers were not in command, but they took more power with time.³⁰⁰³ According to the witness, the FACA and police members were not liked because they were not courageous and had failed to protect them against the Seleka, while the civilians had to defend themselves instead.³⁰⁰⁴ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana specified that they did respect the FACA they had begun the movement with, like Dedane Romain, Valo, the aide-de-camp of Mr Ngaïssona in Bangui, but they did not respect those who joined them as they moved forward.³⁰⁰⁵

1128. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana recalled the following FACA members: Dedane; Kema; Sol-Sol, name Mandago; Ndangba Pissidi Théophile; John Rambo, nicknamed ‘Rambo’ (different to Mr Yekatom); Houronti; Bama Clément; Romain; Kpa Thibaut; Benchui; Guederan; and a corporal from Gonyi who was living right next to Mr Ngaïssona’s house in Bangui.³⁰⁰⁶ The witness was welcomed by Dedane when he arrived, but after a quarrel, Dedane no longer stayed in that place, left and returned, trying to find network for calls and to collect information.³⁰⁰⁷ Andjilo in Gobere was not really known and not respected, he was just an element like Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, and it was only when he was given power to fight in Bouca and succeeded, that his name and reputation gained and he became more important.³⁰⁰⁸

coordinating operations with Dedane, who reported to Maxime Mokom and received orders from him during their attacks.³⁰¹² Dedane, his deputy and the ComZones told them to be calm, wait, and get ready with their fetishes until the moment they would be sent to the prefectures where the Seleka were.³⁰¹³

1130. It is clear from the evidence before the Chamber that individuals and groups in Gobere were communicating with Maxime Mokom, in Zongo at the time, who was considered to be part of the leadership structure.

1131. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated in this context that Maxime Mokom in Zongo coordinated operations with Dedane, who reported to Maxime Mokom and received orders from him during their attacks.³⁰¹⁴ Dedane communicated with Maxime Mokom by mobile phone, but the witness was not present when they spoke; Dedane called the chiefs of companies together to give instructions he had received from Maxime Mokom.³⁰¹⁵ P-2269 stated that while he was in the bush, he kept in contact with ‘Mokom’ and other chiefs, they informed each other of the situation, location and where to move next,³⁰¹⁶ and P-2269 reported to ‘Mokom’, they sought advice from each other.³⁰¹⁷

1132. The Chamber recalls further the evidence from witnesses who were present with Maxime Mokom in Zongo according to which the latter was in constant communication with individuals in the provinces, including with Dedane.³⁰¹⁸

1133. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that he knew the names of those in Gobere since he was responsible for drawing up the lists of the companies: there were Honoré who sold them fetish, became a group chief and mostly handled the Boali road once they got to Bangui; ‘Modibo’, a generic name for fetish sellers, sold fetishes, but the witness could not know each of the names.³⁰¹⁹ Commenting on another list,³⁰²⁰ the witness explained further that chief corporal Mokpem Guy Gervais, Dedane, Ndangba, Guederan, Danfei, while Namdanga joined them after the first battle in Bossangoa, Mandago Alexis, Yandjiki Brice met them in Benzambe during the first battle, and the witness did not know Feigan Youwana Anicent or Ndomaté Dieu Beni.³⁰²¹ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana discovered during at a meeting at the Azimut hotel that Konaté had drawn up a list of FACA who had joined up in Gobere ever since June, and he made a statement with Mr Ngaïssona present, saying that he never saw anyone carrying the rank of lieutenant and others in Gobere, and he also spoke to Ndangba about it and asked how it was possible that in the bush they did not see the soldiers and afterwards they joined and had a list during the meeting with coordinator Mr Ngaïssona and deputy minister Ndomaté.³⁰²² Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana did not recognise another list which he thought was a list of elements based in Boeing, and clarified that Sylvestre Yagouzou was never in Gobere, but in the sector of Combattant and Boeing.³⁰²³

1134. The Chamber has before it a number of different lists of names, one of which is entitled ‘Liste des FACA ralies depuis juin a Gobere’, mentioning, inter alia, Mokpem Guy Gervais, Yanoue Aubin, Mokpem Danboy Brice, Mazimbele Guy, Dangba Pissidi and Mandago Alexis.³⁰²⁴ Another typed document entitled ‘1^{ère} Compagnie Gobere chef de Compagnie Nganafio Honoré Liste des éléments Gobere 1 (Bossangoa)’ lists 841 names.³⁰²⁵ Another handwritten list entitled ‘Liste des Anti Balaka Gobere 2 le coordonateur Yangouzou Sylvestre chef des campagnes Danboy Zepherin Les elements’ lists 224 names.³⁰²⁶ On the basis of the evidence before it, the Chamber is unable to conclude that these lists reflected exclusively individuals present in Gobere at the relevant time. At the same time, they clearly included persons specifically mentioned by witnesses as having been present there.

1135. The Chamber also has before it a video showing Sylvestre Yagouzou who, when asked where his men came from, explains that ‘we’ come from Gobere, where many FACA met them, and then they distributed over the four corners of the CAR, with marabouts everywhere.³⁰²⁷

1136. P-0975 explained that Dedane, a FACA member who was later killed by Andjilo’s younger brother, was their commander-in-chief in Gobere and appointed Andjilo as zone commander (‘ComZone’) for Ombella-M’Poko prefecture, who in turn ordered P-0975 to lead a section of 20 to 30 men.³⁰²⁸ Andjilo and other ComZones reported directly to Dedane, while P-0975 reported to his chief of battalion Rodrigue Yadoungou, who in turn reported to Andjilo.³⁰²⁹ P-0975 recalled there were sections and battalions, a section might consist of 20 to 30 men and a battalion of 40 to 60 men.³⁰³⁰ The ‘Youngsters’ in Gobere ranged in age from 17 to 60 years.³⁰³¹ P-0975 did not know other Anti-Balaka leaders like ‘12 Puissance’, Andjilo, Rodrigue before the ‘revolution’.³⁰³²

1137. P-2602 stated that the group in Gobere included seven militaries and for the rest civilians, from various villages.³⁰³³ P-2602 led one group, and had a person above him, a chief corporal, Danboy Dedane.³⁰³⁴ Kema, Houronti, Bama and Feikouna, all natives from Bossangoa, had communicated with them through phone and joined them in Gobere,³⁰³⁵ as did Nambozouna, Yangobenda, Gueffio Alex, Lakoutene, Ouagalas, and Jean Baptiste Fendiri.³⁰³⁶ The people they registered were about 3,676, but there were still other people joining them.³⁰³⁷ Houronti was the one who had the list of all the men who were at the base at the time.³⁰³⁸ The number of seven militaries increased when some of their colleagues heard about and joined them, increasing their number to 16.³⁰³⁹

1138.P-2602 explained, commenting on a list,³⁰⁴⁰ that the following people were in Gobere: Namdanga Faustin, Vincent Dorassio (he was then in Bossangoa), Nganzoumna Alain Bienvenu was the youngest among them, Demonwansee, Bambai Jaques, Wallot Brice Arnold, Ndamale Benjamin, Gueffio Alexandre, Kema Daniel, Jean Baptiste Fedeiri, Dedane Mercia Cherubin is Dedane Danboy, Guederan Gael, Yandjiki Brice, Yangoubenda.³⁰⁴¹ Guy Mazimbele, a native from Batangafo, came with his team to Gobere and from there to Bangui, he joined the group at Mborouba, passed through Gobere to go there; Thierry Lebene was at Gobere, at the time they were going out to attack he was a member of Dedane's staff, a small team with Guederan as only military; Benjamin Ouapoutou, Gobere, marabout; Gustav Yadjoungou, Gobere, he was part of the Bouca team; Richard Bejouane from Bozoum was in Gobere, he was like an advisor and in charge of Mborouba's base.³⁰⁴²

1139.P-2602 explained that some FACA joined them along the way, including three from Bossembélé: Weamore, Yawore and Mbele, while Mokpem joined after the attack on Zéré, coming from Bangui through the bush, and Touaboy met them in Bogangolo.³⁰⁴³ They met Yvon Konaté at 120 kilometres from Bangui, he did not come to Gobere; Aubin Yaouné, Alfred Kossi, Ngontai Bertran, Abou Alex, Lundi Martial, Boy-Poro, Ndangba Turano – P-2602's younger brother –, Ndomate Dieu Beni, Thierry Octinam joined them at Mborouba, 30 kilometres from Damara.³⁰⁴⁴ They did not know Sylvestre Yagouzou in Gobere, they heard about him when he arrived in the capital, P-2602 met him when they were fighting the mercenaries at the airport; Richard Bejouane was not at Gobere, they were only sending

1140. P-2658 recalled Herman, Regbai, Desire, Togbo among the Anti-Balaka gathered in Gobere.³⁰⁴⁶ The elements were divided into six groups, led by Andjilo, corporal Dangba, 12 Puissances, Nambozouina and Akim.³⁰⁴⁷ Dedane met with the group leaders every morning in Gobere.³⁰⁴⁸ The group leaders joined during the exercises with the elements at Gbonguere, where Nambozouina, 12 Puissances and Akim came every morning to greet Dedane as chief on the hill, at which time Andjilo was no longer there.³⁰⁴⁹ Andjilo had already gone to Bouca and Dedane was in the habit of calling him over the telephone.³⁰⁵⁰ P-2658 saw Andjilo in Gobere two days after his arrest.³⁰⁵¹ Dangba was a chief corporal in the army and had many elements,³⁰⁵² Nambozouina, a FACA, and P-2658 grew up together,³⁰⁵³ Akim used to be a driver in Bossangoa and people called him ‘Massa Akim’ or ‘chef’, but he had no elements under his control.³⁰⁵⁴ When P-2658 was arrested, Akim said in Sango that they did not have to keep an Arab alive, they were killing Arab people, but 12 Puissances said the commander had given instruction to keep P-2658 alive.³⁰⁵⁵ Moundjou (meaning in Sango ‘light skin’) was an Anti-Balaka element, not a commander, he was working under 12 Puissances.³⁰⁵⁶ 12 Puissances was an Anti-Balaka commander; Dedane told P-2658 that 12 Puissances was a hunter.³⁰⁵⁷ P-2658 did not know the names of Ndomaté, Alfred Ngaya, Wenezoui, Yvon

Given the specific circumstances of the witness at the time, who was in the area and moving with Dedane’s group against his will, the Chamber considers this not to distract from the detailed testimony provided by the witness. The same holds true for P-2658 not recognising what appears to be P-0966 in Photograph, CAR-OTP-2031-1252 (see P-2658: T-135, p. 54, lines 4-11, p. 69, lines 20-25).

Konaté, Modibo³⁰⁵⁸ and did not hear the names of Houronti Dieudonné,³⁰⁵⁹ Richard Bejouane³⁰⁶⁰ or Modibo.³⁰⁶¹ P-2658 had heard the name of Marabout Lundi, but did not recall his real name, everyone would call him marabout.³⁰⁶²

1141. In a video interview of Dieudonné Houronti, the latter described that they started ‘the movement’ in Bossangoa, walking through the bush to get there, where they then also encountered military who had gone there from Bangui, 16 in total; that they created their Anti-Balaka base in the bush, at around 40 kilometres from Bossangoa and 15 kilometres from Benzambe, called Gobere; that there were about 2,000 people there, which would be trained by the soldiers in tactics, combat, how to advance and fight; that they also had ‘marabouts’; and that they fought even though they did not have any weapons, only machetes.³⁰⁶³

1142. Individuals who were not present in Gobere themselves also provided information on the persons who were there. For example, P-2232 testified that Gobere was a village where Dedane went for the first attack to Bozoum, they regarded this village as the ‘password’ for the Anti-Balaka and from Gobere, they regrouped to go to other villages and organise other attacks.³⁰⁶⁴ Other individuals in Gobere included Mauri, Azounou, Marabout, Richard Bezouane, Corporal Inga; Konaté was not yet with them during the first attack, he joined them afterwards.³⁰⁶⁵ These people were like ComZones, they commanded troops, supervised them, were in the front and also looked at how they should attack the villages.³⁰⁶⁶ Asked whether any ammunition was brought to Gobere, P-2232 denied, stating when they left Bozoum to go to Gobere, they did not have any support, they started receiving support after the fight in Ndjo, so their used their own means to fight, recovered arms and ammunition on the ground.³⁰⁶⁷ P-2232 stated that everybody who belonged to this group were former hunters, others were highway bandits, they were used to handle hunting guns, machetes, arrows, but did not really teach someone how to use a machete, you learn that by yourself.³⁰⁶⁸

1143. P-0884 heard that when the Seleka were advancing to take over the country, Gbaya soldiers went to Gobere and were in contact with Maxime Mokom.³⁰⁶⁹ There were 17 of them, they started using the term Anti-Balaka, taking advantage of pre-existing groups that fought against the Peuhl's cattle, destroying fields and against road bandits, and that used traditional training to reinforce them to lead them to fight – going into towns, they trained other people, until they arrived in Bangui.³⁰⁷⁰ All the Central Africans talked about it; when they went there it was to protect themselves with the supernatural powers so as to become invulnerable.³⁰⁷¹ Dieudonné Houronti, a gendarme, was among the 17,³⁰⁷² as were Bama Clement, Mokpem, Dangba.³⁰⁷³ P-0884 confirmed that Ouapoutou Benjamin (civilian), Thierry Lebene aka 12 Puissances (civilian), Guy Mazimbelet (military), Yadjoungou, Mokpem (military), Donoh (military), and Houronti were all in Gobere.³⁰⁷⁴ The military themselves told P-0884 that they were in Gobere when they came to Bangui in December, saying that when the situation was difficult, 17 soldiers went to Gobere to create the Anti-Balaka movement with Maxime Mokom as coordinator.³⁰⁷⁵ P-0884 did not know how long they were in Gobere.³⁰⁷⁶

iii. Activities in Gobere and plan to advance

1144. The evidence outlined below shows that the Anti-Balaka in Gobere were organised. The individuals present in Gobere were registered on arrival and organised into various groups.

1145. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that he was in charge of registering new recruits and informing them about the principles to be respected: ‘do not steal, do not attack civilians’, if an Anti-Balaka was caught stealing, the thief would be tied up and beaten and the witness personally sanctioned several such punishments.³⁰⁷⁷ His men respected his orders and would be punished if not, by whipping them and making them stand up all night.³⁰⁷⁸ The instructions given to those who joined were, ‘don’t kill or steal, don’t touch the Muslim women. And if the Seleka attack, you can defend yourself’.³⁰⁷⁹

1146. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana described that they were divided into 14 companies, each company with between 500 and 1,000 persons and divided into four sectors, dispatched to areas according to the province of origin of their elements,³⁰⁸⁰ and he was a deputy chief before becoming a chief of company.³⁰⁸¹ The witness gave a list of elements in Gobere to ComZone Kema³⁰⁸² since as one of the few literate men, he was asked to keep the register of companies and their members, with Kema then forwarding the lists to Maxime Mokom.³⁰⁸³ It appears from Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana’s testimony that lists were more or less regularly updated as the various groups moved around.³⁰⁸⁴ ComZone Kema kept the list of all elements in Bossangoa and forwarded them to the leader, Kema told them that once he found some coverage, he would give the names of the people.³⁰⁸⁵ Each group had a secretary, and the witness re-transcribed all lists and prepared a clean copy before forwarding.³⁰⁸⁶ Dedane was responsible for communicating the lists, but at one point the group split up and Kema would send the information to Dedane, who would send it on.³⁰⁸⁷ It was a matter of recruiting them into the army later and people who were not on one of the lists were not considered to be part of the movement: it appears from Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana’s testimony that integration into the army was considered to be the reward for protecting the country,³⁰⁸⁸ while the soldiers in the movement, in case of victory, might get one rank higher.³⁰⁸⁹

1147. P-2602 explained that they divided the group, organised according to the various chiefs, all in all they had 11 camps, within which the leader was to teach his men how to shoot, dismantle or assemble a weapon; each camp had a military as a chief, always FACA, including Kema, Bama, Houronti, Feindiri Romain and KPA (replacing Feikouma who was sick), Danwe, and in December Wallot Brice joined them and was in P-2602's group, Mandago Alexis.³⁰⁹⁰ Dedane was their chief and P-2602 did not know if he had someone above him, but he was communicating always on the phone.³⁰⁹¹ The camps were called companies and divided further into sections with chiefs who were civilians; a company could be 200 or more, in P-2602's company were 207 people and 11 sections, each one of which 'having 30 people [sic]'.³⁰⁹² Each company had a secretary whose work was to register all newcomers to make a list of all the men who were there, where they were coming from, to then tell them their rules not to steal; P-2602's secretary was Nambama; their rules were that each person joining should be registered because if not, they could not perform traditional rites on him.³⁰⁹³ Some had performed the rites in their own customs and villages where they were, but registered when joining and then could not go back to their village.³⁰⁹⁴

1148. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that when they arrived at Gobere, there were no weapons, it had 'all been a lie', and had he known, he would have stayed in his village to fight.³⁰⁹⁵ The witness did not leave because, according to him, once one joined the movement, one could not go out freely and leave until authorisation was given,³⁰⁹⁶ but then he stated it was no longer possible for him to find his way back to his village.³⁰⁹⁷ When they left Bossala, the objective was to get weapons and ammunition in Bossembélé, so they could go to Bossangoa with weapons, yet they left Bossangoa without weapons and in Bossembélé they received a fresh supply of weapons, ammunition, grenades to head to Bossangoa a second time.³⁰⁹⁸ There were rumours about tanks and war arsenal, but when they reached Gobere they did not see any; at Ndjo, they saw people had ‘DKN’ and AK-47s, but at Gobere they did not see any tanks or arsenal, while they had one DKN and a ‘lance-roquettes’, and the soldiers had AK-47s; once they arrived in Benzambé, they started to have some conventional weapons, gradually as they advanced they retrieved those.³⁰⁹⁹

1149. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana further stated that few people had mobile phones, no one in his company had one.³¹⁰⁰ Only chiefs could use them and an element who was caught with a mobile phone would be suspected of betrayal and regarded as traitor, since some could use a phone to give their location.³¹⁰¹ Only the chiefs knew where the network was, so they looked for spots with coverage.³¹⁰²

1150. P-0975 stated that in Gobere they survived on wild fruits.³¹⁰³ P-2602 stated that in Gobere, they were being brought food by the small surrounding villages, Bozoum, Paoua, because their relatives informed them about the location, they (‘we’) were sending people in the field, also one military, Ougalas Didas, went from Gobere to Bozoum to Bouar.³¹⁰⁴ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that there were no buildings, just saw straw places, they had very few possessions, could not change clothing, had insects and no shelter when it rained, except for the leaders who used tarp to protect themselves.³¹⁰⁵

³¹⁰³ P-0975 Statement, CAR-OTP-2033-7885-R02, at 7889, para. 30. In this context, the Chamber notes that there appears to be a discrepancy between the evidence of P-2658 (see P-2658 Statement, CAR-OTP-2126-0012-R02, at 0024-25, para. 78, at 0026, para. 90; P-2658: T-134, p. 29, lines 22-25 p. 47, line 25 – p. 48, line 3; T-135, p. 52, line 8 – p. 53, line 2) and P-0966 (P-0966: T-117, p. 13, line 22 – p. 14, line 6; see also P-2251 Statement, CAR-OTP-2093-0045-R01, at 0050, paras 32-33, at 0050-51, para. 35; P-2251: T-043, p. 11, lines 3-21) on how much food was available in Gobere. Considering that also P-2658 stated that it was difficult to find food in Gobere, that some Anti-Balaka had problems to eat, and that he in fact never saw the cows (see P-2658: T-135, p. 53, lines 3-23), the Chamber considers this discrepancy to be immaterial, and in any event insufficient to render the evidence of P-2658 unreliable as a whole.

1151. The evidence before the Chamber, as discussed below, shows that training on how to handle weapons was provided by the former FACA elements to the civilians. While they were low on weapons and living conditions overall were challenging, civilians in the groups received some training on handling weapons by the FACA members present. With discussions being had on how to move the groups' activities forward, as further outlined also below,³¹⁰⁶ Gobere was in essence a regrouping and vantage point for groups to coordinate and discuss their further steps to be taken for them to be able to advance to Bangui and eventually remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power.

1152. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that there were training and exercises in Gobere, they did simulations with sticks.³¹⁰⁷

1153. P-0975 described Gobere as a place of refuge, training, regrouping for youngsters to fight the Seleka, who were a scourge on the country.³¹⁰⁸ P-0975 spent two months in Gobere receiving training from FACA members who had fled into the bush, including on self-defence techniques, the use and assembly of weapons, for those who had any; they mainly used traditional hunting rifles, 'saguets' and machetes, and did not have automatic weapons; they were also taught how to differentiate the different sounds of weapons and protect themselves.³¹⁰⁹ According to P-0975, there were only about four to five FACA members who trained them in Gobere, their overall objective was to 'free [their] brothers and sisters' from the Seleka.³¹¹⁰

1154. P-2232 testified, asked if the ComZones in Gobere also provided training, that the Anti-Balaka movement did not really have any training as such, or did not have a centre for training; in the field, they learned how to shoot, how to get and put ammunition into the gun, they learned as they were going along.³¹¹¹

1155.P-2269 stated that they practised some rituals and traditions in Gobere, he trained his men how to shoot a gun and the other chiefs did as well.³¹¹²

1156.P-2602 stated that they were training the civilians in Gobere.³¹¹³ After training the civilians, they divided so each was to be in a group and they had a common agreement on which group would attack which location, so that they could chase away the mercenaries.³¹¹⁴ While at Gobere, the plan was to defend the district and attack the mercenaries there, the strategy was that while in their area, nothing could happen to them, they could use their customs and traditional methods to attack them.³¹¹⁵ They stayed for one month in Gobere, going to the second, before they decided to leave.³¹¹⁶ During that month, P-2602 used the time to teach the civilians who did not know how to manage automatic weapons; they were seven militaries with five automatic weapons at the time; later there was one civilian who had an automatic weapon; they taught how to fire, dismantle and assemble the weapon.³¹¹⁷ Dedane decided that they were militaries and should organise themselves, so they organised to control their men so that someone should not misbehave.³¹¹⁸ Yadjoungou's work was to discipline elements, would disarm any Anti-Balaka who was committing exactions and lock him up; he did it in Gobere, where he was working with a military called Watoumba, but in Gobere he could not disarm anyone because they were preparing to go for a war.³¹¹⁹

1157.P-2658 testified that Gobere was a big training place for the Anti-Balaka; Gobere is near Boukatou, in the bush; there were no proper buildings but there were about 17 huts; he saw many people being trained there and he also saw more people coming for training.³¹²⁰ P-2658 did not spend much time in Gobere, the base existed before he was there.³¹²¹ Only subsequently the Anti-Balaka group divided into two, one went to Bouca and the Dedane group, including P-2658, set up in Gbonguere, before they went to Bossangoa.³¹²² Two weeks after P-2658's arrest, Dedane gathered all his men at Gbonguere when he returned from Bossangoa.³¹²³ In Gbonguere, P-2658 saw training; there was a former FACA by the name of Kokofere who had two weapons in his hands, shot and wanted to kill everybody, which created confusion and he was killed.³¹²⁴ The largest base was in Gbonguere.³¹²⁵ They went to Gobere on a regular basis because Dedane was a chief; they might go in the morning and then come back.³¹²⁶ The elements stayed with their leaders and around the main camp of Gobere, meeting at one place during training or for the group meeting; a river called Gobere was running through the camp.³¹²⁷ The training was like a military training; they were divided into two groups, each with a leader or commander, and P-2658 could see them running, walking around; some wore military uniform; after the training, their commander Dedane gave them practical instructions, but P-2658 was too far to know which.³¹²⁸ They were taught how to handle weapons, shown what being a soldier was all about, they did sports.³¹²⁹ P-2658 did hear Dedane give instructions to the elements, mainly those in charge of the training, on how to train them regarding some military tactics and how to attack.³¹³⁰ P-2658 could also see former soldiers – those who wore military uniform during training, staying away from the other elements that were being trained, and seemingly leading other elements – carrying guns.³¹³¹ In Gbonguere, the soldiers gathered in the morning and chat, with P-2658 remaining at a respectful distance.³¹³² As for training, they gathered together, on occasion did some sporting activities and went running together, but P-2658 was not close enough to know exactly what kind of training they were doing.³¹³³

1158.P-2658 explained that Dedane used to communicate on the phone when he was at the hill at Gbonguere, communications during which he would hear three names: Charli, Kommas, Yongo.³¹³⁴ Dedane always complained about the lack of ammunitions, said that his elements and him were ready to get out for the attack; Charli, Kommas, Yongo were putting pressure on Dedane and asked him what he was waiting for; Dedane responded that he wanted to divide his elements into different groups so he could deploy them but he did not have enough ammunitions and weapons; he said he would go to Bossangoa to look for more ammunition and on return would proceed to divide the Anti-Balaka elements into three groups.³¹³⁵

1159.According to P-2658, Dedane went to Bossangoa at least three times.³¹³⁶ The first time he went for ammunition and captured a young person called Cisco who seemingly promised knowing where the ammunition was; the second time he went with Cisco, but they were not successful in getting ammunition.³¹³⁷ It appears that Dedane split the group for purposes of attack after the third trip to Bossangoa.³¹³⁸ Dedane talked about his elements on the phone; he spoke to Andjilo whom he sent to Bouca.³¹³⁹ Dedane transmitted the information about the location of his elements to someone else, village per village.³¹⁴⁰ Dedane provided information to Charli,³¹⁴¹ P-2658 did not know the other people Dedane spoke to.³¹⁴² P-2658 denied that Dedane transmitted lists of elements to someone over the phone, he did not hear him talk about a list.³¹⁴³ According to P-2658, the chiefs who spoke about lists were not next

The Chamber notes in this regard the statement of Josué Nampessa, who indicated that he was the only one in Bossangoa with nickname ‘Yongo’, that he fled from Bossangoa to Bangui after his shop was pillaged by the Seleka, and that he does not personally know Dedane Danboy or Mr Ngaïssona, or anyone by the name of Hissène Abdoulaye aka Hissène Balaka (see D30-4551 Statement, CAR-D30-0021-0001-R01, at 0002-03, paras 7, 9, 12-14). The Chamber considers this information to be incapable of raising doubts as to the information provided by P-2658. P-2658 was clear in hearing the mentioned names in the context of Dedane’s phone communications, clearly did not know these individuals himself, and did not provide any other details regarding them which would allow the Chamber to conclude that P-2658’s evidence is contradicted by that of Josué Nampessa.

to Dedane; in Gbonguere, the team was divided into groups and each group had their own list.³¹⁴⁴

1160. In light of various witnesses mentioning at least Dedane, and some other leaders, being in a position to communicate through telephone, the Chamber disregards P-2251's indication that he did not know if the chiefs in 'Ngobere' communicated with others as he never saw anyone speaking on their phone while they were there.³¹⁴⁵ In any event, the Chamber notes that P-2251 does support other evidence when stating that at 'Ngobere', they organised, with elements from each town sleeping together in their own zone, leaders staying in the centre of the different zones and exchanging ideas and strategies.³¹⁴⁶ P-2251 also recalled some gatherings at 'Ngobere' where they all stood in front of the chiefs such as Konaté, Lebene, Dangba, Dedane and Andjilo, and they spoke to them, telling them to stay calm and not be afraid, that God would help them exit the bush, that they had no choice but to have fled to 'Ngobere' to save themselves, but that a time would come when they would be able to exit the bush and drive the Seleka away.³¹⁴⁷

1161. At Gobere, also plans were made as to how to proceed further. Indeed, P-0975 stated that the plan was for them to go back to their original areas in Oaham/Ouham and Ombella M'Poko to drive out the Seleka and then regroup to revolt in Bangui.³¹⁴⁸ There were no Anti-Balaka in Bangui, they all came from the provinces; the strategy was to control the provinces first and then go to Bangui.³¹⁴⁹

1162. P-2269 stated that the chiefs of the rebellion met to think and discuss what to do, they discussed the Seleka violence and disorder and decided to chase Djotodia from power and restore peace, they decided to go to Bangui.³¹⁵⁰ Informants known as 'B2' had been giving them information from Bangui and they were listening to the radio; they discussed tactics, but P-2269 did not want to provide details.³¹⁵¹ They told people to gather in Gobere, they would call or pass the message in person.³¹⁵² They went to Gobere because it is a big village and they set up a base there; people from Bouca, Bogangolo, Batangafo and nearby villages also joined, each chief came with their own group.³¹⁵³ P-2269 stated that when one is in the rebellion and walking in the bush, one has to be in contact with the other groups and communicate; their 14 groups were constantly in contact with one another.³¹⁵⁴

1163. P-2602 explained that Dedane called for a meeting at which they discussed which localities to attack; Bozando/Bejouane and Maurice led the discussions because they were the elders, with the aim of the meeting seeing how to attack, and they agreed that they were going to attack at the same time, at 05:00, discussing the aim of pushing the mercenaries to Bossangoa.³¹⁵⁵ P-2602 was not in contact with any person in Cameroon or in Zongo, but was in contact with Maxime Mokom, an elder brother from the neighbourhood, though not knowing Mokom's location when the latter was making the call; he had first called Kema, who told him that P-2602 was around Benzambé and passed on his number.³¹⁵⁶

1165. P-2658 testified that he stayed with the Anti-Balaka at Gbonguere for some weeks and during his entire stay there, the elements constantly told him that they did not want the Seleka and Muslims around; they said the Seleka and Muslims were the same and that they want to deal with the Muslims and the Seleka.³¹⁵⁸

ii. Groups mainly based around FACA and/or PG

1166. In addition to self-defence groups centred around civilians forming in the provinces, a number of former FACA and PG elements also gathered individuals around them. Importantly, it is clear from the evidence as outlined that in the same vein as self-defence groups which formed in different localities and eventually pursued the same cause, also these groups, while initially founded separately, communicated and found together on the basis of pursuing one goal. The evidence before the Chamber shows that the various groups operated in conjunction with other groups and were eventually all associated with the Anti-Balaka.

1167. One of these groups was the 'Front de resistance pour l'alternance pour le peuple Centrafricain' (FRAPPE). P-0954 explained in this regard that he started out of a group of around 10 serving FACA in June 2013 with purpose of protecting themselves and the civilians, and many civilians joined them, with P-0954 seeing his obligation to defend his country as also implying to defend its citizens from the attack of foreign Seleka and strangers.³¹⁵⁹ P-0954's evidence suggests that this group evolved and grew over time, including with civilians joining who were part of autonomous self-defence groups,³¹⁶⁰ taking the stated name in November 2013 on the basis of Léopold Bara's idea, after 'the French' had told him that they did not like the name Anti-Balaka since the Anti-Balaka had made too many blunders.³¹⁶¹ The group had a clear structure, with P-0954 communicating clearly that they were to protect the population and not create disorder, and had Bonaventure Guiyegba as secretary-general, Léopold Bara as spokesperson and Lieutenant Kengwa as chief of staff.³¹⁶² P-0954 had gone into the bush with the aim of identifying Seleka and kicking them out of his area, he wanted to protect Bimbo, and as ComZone later, when Djotodia left, he wanted to protect the entire community, including Muslims, and to avoid armed robberies, pillaging, people settling scores.³¹⁶³ P-0954 agreed that he took action because (i) there were still Seleka in the area, (ii) there was still general chaos, and (iii) there were no domestic and not enough international forces to manage these problems.³¹⁶⁴

1168. P-0954 stated that Léopold Bara learned about their activities and contacted them; they met him and he wanted to know if they had weapons, suggesting to raise funds to get weapons to resist properly.³¹⁶⁵ Bara had promised to see if ‘the French’ would help, but in the end ‘the French’ did not give them weapons.³¹⁶⁶ By the end of November 2013, things started to move, Bara told them that ‘the French’ had called upon all Anti-Balaka groups to circle Bangui to build pressure and remove Djotodia, so many Anti-Balaka came from rural areas to Bangui, Mr Yekatom moved to ‘Gnawara school’, and some Anti-Balaka from the rural areas that looked for bases joined Basile Mbomon.³¹⁶⁷

1169. P-0876 rejected the proposition that he would have suggested to Basile Mbomon’s group to launch an attack against Seleka positions to secure weapons, otherwise he would have subscribed to the position of war on the other side and not instead been trying to convince people to join his position.³¹⁶⁸

1170. P-1858 stated that the group was a politico-military organisation created by Basile Mbomon and Léopold Bara-Dessi between the end of March and September 2013, with the objective to overthrow the Djotodia government.³¹⁶⁹ When Bara came to visit, they discussed how the different groups could come together; at that time FRAPPE was not part of the Anti-Balaka yet; they heard about different Anti-Balaka groups but they were all located in different areas; this was during the period between September and November 2013.³¹⁷⁰ P-1858 agreed with the suggestion that the name ‘FRAPPE’ was not known, and everybody from the outside was referring to them as Anti-Balaka.³¹⁷¹ From September to November 2013, they stayed in the bush preparing to overthrow the Seleka; the FACA in the group trained the civilians in combat strategies and on how to use weapons – involving to call them, align them, show them discipline, teach them how to behave, to say ‘on your guard’.³¹⁷² The elements of the group were using traditional weapons while the FACA of the group had automatic weapons, some also had grenades.³¹⁷³ P-1858 agreed with the suggestion that he and others felt an obligation to defend the country.³¹⁷⁴ There was another group that came from Pissa on foot and they set up a base at ‘Yanwara’ school in Boeing; these were the elements of Rombhot, whose ‘full name is Alfred Y[ekatom]’, and ‘real name is Alfred S[aragba]’.³¹⁷⁵ 1171. Another formation discussed by witnesses is the CLPC (‘Combattants pour la libération du peuple Centrafricain’).

1172. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that the initial formation of the ‘Combattants pour la Libération du peuple Centrafricain’ (CLPC) was created by FACA members before December 2013 and they had fled to Zongo; the leader was Lt Abel Denamganai.³¹⁷⁶ The official CLPC was formed after the election of Samba-Panza; they were named Anti-Balaka instead by the end of January or beginning of February 2014 – CLPC and Anti-Balaka were one and the same.³¹⁷⁷ Mr Ngaïssona did not have a role as such in the CLCP, but he was a high-ranking dignitary of the Bozizé regime who was in exile, and since they (‘we’) were hoping for salvation, this was someone who was abroad.³¹⁷⁸ They heard ‘Siriri’ was a group of military persons, but in fact it was FACA who organised themselves, led by Konaté and Abel Denamganai.³¹⁷⁹

1173. The Chamber notes in this regard that the name ‘CLPC’ and ‘Anti-Balaka’ was indeed used in parallel in documents at an earlier stage, but after the attacks of 5 December 2013. Specifically, one document of 9 or 10 January 2014 is entitled ‘Procès Verbal de la Réunion de concertation entre les Responsables du Mouvement des “Combattants de libération du Peuple Centrafricain” (CLPC) dénommé “Antibalaka” relative à la Session extraordinaire des Etats membres de la CEEAC. CEEAC du 09-10 janvier 2014’ and mentions several individuals present, including Sébastien Wenezoui and Charles Ngremangou, further outlined the discussion points broached during this meeting, which led to the following demands: (i) withdrawal of Michel Djotodia, Nicolas Tiangaye, Alexandre Nguendet; (ii) return to constitutional order or transitional college; (iii) either way designation of new leaders for transition in consensual manner; (iv) organisation of free and transparent elections ‘dans un délai de six (5)’.³¹⁸⁰

1174. The Chamber further notes in this regard that Alfred Legrand Ngaya transmitted various CLPC-related documents to Mr Ngaïssona at the end of December 2013, as further discussed below.³¹⁸¹ The abbreviation ‘CLPC’ also appears in later documents attributed to the Anti-Balaka in 2014.³¹⁸²

1175. P-0889 stated that in response to the Seleka violence, young Christians organised self-defence groups in the neighbourhoods and provinces occupied by the Seleka with the goal to defend against the Seleka attacks, not to take power.³¹⁸³ In the beginning, the self-defence groups belonged to the CLPC (‘Combattants pour la Libération du Peuple Centrafricain’), later they called themselves ‘Anti-Balaka’; these self-defence groups were created at different moments, depending on the neighbourhoods or provinces.³¹⁸⁴

1176. Brice Emotion Namsio stated that at some point the Seleka started tracking down the FACA and to save their lives, these were obliged to join the Balaka they had heard of, and Balaka leaders gave them also gris-gris to protect themselves and the peaceful population.³¹⁸⁵ This was a tight collaboration, with armed forces being under control of either Captain Gremangou or of Lieutenant Konaté who was more in the hinterland and for the advance to Bangui – they organised in collaboration.³¹⁸⁶ The FACA soldiers within the Anti-Balaka would wait for orders from Gremangou or also civilian leaders before acting.³¹⁸⁷ Brice Emotion Namsio stated that CLPC (‘Combattants de libération du peuple centrafricain’) was the name of the movement before it was called Anti-Balaka, it was initiated by Maxime Mokom from Zongo, and after the attack the leaders met and had from then on talk of Anti-Balaka rather than CLPC: Maxime Mokom had called Andjilo from Zongo, somewhere in December, January, and told him they should work under the name CLPC.³¹⁸⁸ The witness stated that Konaté had also said he was spokesperson of the ‘Siriri’, meaning peace, and that he and his elements were leaving Bangassou to move to Bangui to liberate the Central African people.³¹⁸⁹ Others were called ‘Anti-Balaka’ from the hinterland, before the Bangui Attack was the CLPC was demanded by Maxime Mokom, and after that attack, ‘they’ insisted to change the name from Anti-Balaka to CLPC, but that did not work, so it was dropped and they continued under the name Anti-Balaka.³¹⁹⁰

1177. In addition to these groupings which appeared before 5 December 2013, P-0974 also testified about, thereafter, taking control of a disorganised Anti-Balaka group north of the airport, near Damala, with former FACA members, civilians from the provinces, the 8th arrondissement, Combattants, roughly a few hundred people with P-0974 and sous-lieutenant ‘Doze’ being the only officers.³¹⁹¹ P-0974 took the decision to lead the group which they divided people into sections like in the army with about 50-60 men each, with a former FACA as leader of which section and a civilian who had proven himself capable of fighting as his deputy, and each section organising its own training, including in the use of weapons, how to take cover, how to behave, led by a lower level former FACA elements.³¹⁹²

They made their base at the OCRB in Damala which they took over from the Seleka.³¹⁹³ Their objective was to prevent the Seleka from making excursions into their area; they could attack from north and west through exits to PK12, so they put military outposts at all the exits.³¹⁹⁴ P-0974's role as 'ComZone' was to defend his zone, each Anti-Balaka group defended their own zone, in a defensive, not offensive, role.³¹⁹⁵ P-0974's men did not patrol outside their zone as they would have gotten in trouble for that with the other zone, if they needed to go into another zone, they would tell the ComZone before and enter without weapons.³¹⁹⁶ They obtained weapons and ammunition in the context of fighting – according to P-0974, senior officials of the Seleka had many arms and ammunition stocked at their residences, which they had pillaged from arms depots.³¹⁹⁷ When the Anti-Balaka entered Bangui, they attacked houses belonging to Muslims and who were of the Seleka, who had fled and abandoned their weapons and ammunition – there was no other way to obtain ammunition for P-0974's group.³¹⁹⁸ According to P-0974, they tried not to communicate via mobile phones at the time because they knew they were tapped, so they sent messages through people.³¹⁹⁹ Not all ComZones worked this way; for example, in the 8th arrondissement, the Anti-Balaka from Boy-Rabe and from Combattants attacked at different times, believing that the Seleka chiefs who lived there hid weapons in their homes.³²⁰⁰ P-0974 in his zone gathered their men and told them not to attack the population, not to use weapons against those without weapons, and that an investigation would follow if they did.³²⁰¹ If someone broke the rules, they were whipped; P-0974 did not have to use more severe punishment as his group was very disciplined.³²⁰² They were not waiting for instructions from another individual to apply disciplinary measures in their group.³²⁰³ If a soldier misbehaved, he could be put into prison; another type of sanction was to make them stay at a guard post for an indefinite period of time.³²⁰⁴

1178. In addition to the above description of concrete groupings, the Chamber has also received information on involvement of FACA members more generally, including on the role of Charles Ngremangou more specifically, as outlined below.

1179. P-0884 testified he was not in the field to know how Mr Ngaïssona, Maxime Mokom and Bernard Mokom organised combat in the field, but the person coordinating attacks was Maxime Mokom, and P-0884 knew they were advancing.³²⁰⁵ Captain Ngremangou was the head of the military in the Anti-Balaka, they used to call him chief of staff.³²⁰⁶

1180. The Chamber has before it an email from ‘Charles Ngremangou’ to ‘simeonerica’ of 29 May 2013, which appears to include an attachment called ‘liste provisoire des éléments des FACA du quartier Boeing et Katin’.³²⁰⁷ The text of the email states that this is hopefully sending the last list updated on that day, that he did not contact Lieutenant Ngbonga Mbongo, so the name would need to be deleted, and further asks whether the addressee can send the list which was sent to help in the verification and deleting of certain doubtful elements, and how they can have ‘les matos’.³²⁰⁸ In a typed document entitled ‘Liste définitive des éléments des FACA du quartier Boeing’ including also a list entitled ‘Éléments Katin’, the names include inter alia Ngremangou Charles, Feikeram Guy Mathurin, Mokpem Guy, ‘Yekatom’, several Danboy, in total 170 for Boeing, and 52 for ‘Katin’.³²⁰⁹

1181. Another email of 19 July 2013 from ‘Charles Ngremangou’ to ‘yambetesteve’ appears to include an attachment called ‘Expresssion [sic] de besoins’, and states that sending in attachment the ‘needs’, further informs that the tension in town seems to be related to an attempted coup by Nourredine, and that ‘[n]ous sommes toujours dans l’attente d’une éventuelle Instruction de l’Autorité’.³²¹⁰ A typed document entitled ‘Expresssion [sic] de

1182. According to P-2841, 'Commander' Ngremangou played a very big role in the idea of the FACA joining the civilian Anti-Balaka, and the FACA chiefs and Anti-Balaka chiefs had telephone contact to organise the resistance, though P-2841 did not know how they organised everything practically speaking.³²¹² In each zone there was a commander, such as Kema, Andjilo, Douze Puissances; from Bangui, Ngremangou would have been in contact with the Anti-Balaka chiefs.³²¹³ Regrouping took place where the military had means available, but finally they failed; this officer did play a role in the mobilisation of the military in that particular fight.³²¹⁴ Soldiers are trained, organised, disciplined, but the Anti-Balaka were mostly people who relied on mystical powers with gris-gris.³²¹⁵ P-2841 agreed with the suggestion that from the perspective of the FACA, it was necessary to protect the population.³²¹⁶ According to P-2841, in 2013 the Anti-Balaka were all mixed up and not very well structured, but used mystical powers and in a way were more powerful than the military and often led, instead of being led by, the military men amongst them.³²¹⁷ There were various groups and each one tried to defend itself as best it could, but within each group there was some hierarchy – but it was the coordination at the general level which did not exist.³²¹⁸ P-2841 stated that it was clear that officers may have been mobilising people, but at the same time foot soldiers had fled Bangui and it was easy for them to join the traditional Anti-Balaka groups which were already beginning to be active in the villages; looking at the Anti-Balaka who fought on the ground, liberating villages, these were the villagers themselves who were then subsequently joined by foot and rank soldiers and not officers; that is why the officers were involved in some other kind of development.³²¹⁹

1183. Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that he first became aware of the Anti-Balaka becoming operational in terms of military capacity around the months of June, July 2013.³²²⁰ He had an informant known as Pabandji who was in contact with Ngaikosset in DRC and also had some informants in Cameroon who provided them with information – Jean-Jacques Demafouth was convinced that the Anti-Balaka were putting in place a military-type structure for the purpose of recapturing power; all the soldiers at Camp M’Poko and FACA soldiers close to François Bozizé had left, were no longer visible, and the understanding was that they had gathered at a location to reorganise themselves.³²²¹

1184. P-2602 stated that the movement of the military started in light of the Seleka advance and takeover, the name was first ‘Armée du Territoire blindé’, created because the Seleka killed military.³²²² Those from the Ouham area agreed to go back to protect their area, including Dedane, Selewone, Watoumba, Mandago, Feindiri, seven of them went into the bush.³²²³ P-2602 briefly joined the Seleka, went to Paoua and stole a vehicle and weapons, which was how they got some materiel, then going to meet those who were waiting for him in the bush; Kema was part of the plan but got arrested and was detained for two weeks, after which he escaped and joined them; Matthias Deguerre was also part of this plan.³²²⁴ The plan of the group was to chase away the mercenaries because they killed a lot of militaries, they never had a plan to take over the country; when people say they were killing their brother Muslims, it is not true.³²²⁵ When their weapons were taken, they thought of attacking them in the capital, but saw that they were equipped, so they withdrew back in the Ouham area and started chasing them from that area.³²²⁶

1185. The report of P-2926 concluded that some self-defence groups were organised and coordinated by FACA members to march to Bangui and engage in the attack of 5 December 2013, some soldiers infiltrated the west of the CAR from Cameroon and emerged as Anti-Balaka fighters at the beginning of 2014.³²²⁷

iii. Links between self-defence groups and members of regular forces

1186. It is clear from the above discussion that various self-defence groups in different localities, including in Gobere, were also joined by or integrated with members of the FACA or PG who led, trained and helped developing organisational structures. The Chamber has received additional evidence in this regard, which is outlined below.

1187. For instance, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that as head of the transition government, she received information that the Anti-Balaka were at some point structured by the FACA members who joined the movement, and most of the army members who fled the military during ‘the events’ went back and joined the Anti-Balaka, training and structuring them, making their organisation more logical.³²²⁸

1188. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that the Anti-Balaka included FACA members, in particular in Boy-Rabe and Boeing and some also in the provinces, including Lt Yvon Konaté, Lt Herve, Corporal Lucien Kossi, Guy Mazimbelet, all in Boy-Rabe, led by Herve and Kossi, while Mr Yekatom and his elements were on the Mbaïki axis.³²²⁹ He further stated that the FACA members who joined the Anti-Balaka were all of the regime of Bozizé, who is from Bossangoa – a region from which several FACA members were from.³²³⁰

1189. P-0306 testified that the delegation of intermediaries from Bangui included soldiers who were fleeing the Seleka as well as civilians; both Konaté and ‘Major’ were accompanied by military and civilians.³²³¹ When Mr Ngaïssona introduced people at the meeting at his residence, P-0306 also got to know Cpt Denamgai, Gbangouma and other officers, he said that those were the people he sent Konaté to the villages to bring them back to Bangui.³²³² P-0306 met 'Mokom' for the first time at the meeting that was convened by Mr Ngaïssona at his residence.³²³³

1190. P-2232 explained that Ngaikosset was taken to Kinshasa after 'DGM' discovered that he organised the distribution of leaflets against the Seleka violence, and Ngaikosset contacted 'Mokom' from there; during the advance of the movement, 'Mokom' was coordinator of operations, Dedane, who was 'the core or the beginning', was still in town and they sometimes communicated, and 'Rambo' carried out manoeuvres from his side until and up to 5 December 2013.³²³⁴ When Andjilo and 'the others' got together, they made Maxime Mokom coordinator, some people got to know Maxime through Dedane, and thereafter Mokom organised everything, though P-2232 was not with him then and did not know details.³²³⁵ Whenever Dedane heard that a group had been formed in a village, he would try to contact their leader to organise the members and link them up with Mokom.³²³⁶ People such as 'Abel Dingan', Emtanou Euzebe, his younger brother Edya all crossed the river and linked up with the teams on the hill; these career soldiers were there to train the civilians with a view to winning the battle.³²³⁷ Other FACA members who were never in Zongo also joined the movement, including Corporal Inga, Dedane, Andjizékané Tchakpa Blaise.³²³⁸ At some point the Seleka were looking for soldiers; these soldiers fled and joined the movement in Damara and wherever else possible, some crossing the river and later returning to Bangui to join.³²³⁹ The soldiers took their own weapons and were taken in as leaders when joining the movement.³²⁴⁰

news about an ambush against the Seleka in Ouham-Bac, close to Bossangoa according to Maxime Mokom.³²⁴² Maxime Mokom said that he would find out who was behind the ambush and get in contact to help them, and he called relatives from Bossangoa to find out what was happening.³²⁴³ As Maxime Mokom found out that those behind the ambush were civilians, he asked the witness as military officer to advise them on how to progress and set up a military ambush.³²⁴⁴ Maxime Mokom came to Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda's house and asked on behalf of the civilians that staged the ambush for advice, and what they could do to help 'the children'.³²⁴⁵ As they were following the situation in the country through the news, Maxime Mokom sought more advice from the witness.³²⁴⁶ Maxime Mokom told the witness when they were in Zongo that he was in contact with the leaders of the groups, Kemba in Bossangoa, Andjilo in Bouca, 'Douze-Puissance' in Bokangolo.³²⁴⁷ According to Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda, Maxime Mokom was also looking for contact details of military in Bangui willing to join the Anti-Balaka groups in the provinces, whom Mokom would introduce so the military would not be attacked by the groups; the witness only knew Konaté as an example.³²⁴⁸ The witness did not know by which means Yvon Konaté was in contact with all these people.³²⁴⁹ Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda described how, after the military from Bangui joined the movement, Maxime Mokom no longer sought his advice, which the witness thought was because the military that joined the different groups could lead and advise them.³²⁵⁰ Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda inquired with Maxime Mokom about how things were progressing, and he told the witness about particular attacks that had taken place and particular Seleka positions they would be attacking, but the witness did not recall which attacks were mentioned.³²⁵¹

Berbérati and sometimes went to Carnot.³²⁵² P-0974 heard that when the Seleka arrived, some of the FACA elements had gone to Bangui, some hid around Bouar and joined the Anti-Balaka, working with Ndale, others like the PG went to Cameroon.³²⁵³ P-0974 testified that FACA elements spread across the country started joining the forming Anti-Balaka movement which started in the provinces, and that he also joined through his own motivation.³²⁵⁴

1193. P-1847 testified that Achille Godonam told him that he had been in contact with Bernard Mokom who was going to take over all the activities in the area to counter-attack the Seleka.³²⁵⁵ He went to meet Mokom and later also went with the Anti-Balaka coordinator Ndale to Bouar to meet Danzoumi.³²⁵⁶ On their way back, Ndale stopped by and told P-1847 that they had been given a little bit of money and he was going back to see how things would be organised in Ngaoundaye, Bozoum, to sensitise the Anti-Balaka who were in the area so that they could start the attacks; Achille came back to Garam-Boulai, the base, and they informed P-1847 that Col Daz and his troops were now dealing directly with ‘Rambo’, former FACA on the other side of the river towards Zongo, and that they were getting ready to attack the Seleka.³²⁵⁷ The former PG who were in Bossangoa and Bouar were under the command of Dedane, P-1847’s cousin; his cousin contacted him and told him that they had received orders from François Bozizé to descend on Bangui and attack, and that was how they started to attack the towns from Bossangoa, then Ndjo, Bossembélé and other locations.³²⁵⁸

1194. The Chamber recalls its observations regarding the prior recorded testimony of P-1847, introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules,³²⁵⁹ and has considered P-1847’s evidence on this topic in the context of the other evidence before it. P-1847 stated that certain FACA officers, in particular of the PG in Bossangoa, joined the Anti-Balaka, for example Florent

Kema, Bama Clément, Dedane.³²⁶⁰ He stated that there were FACA officers in Douala, Anatole Ngaya and Lamtague, with the Anti-Balaka financed by Marcelin, they participated in the meetings with Marius and Yvon Songuet, with the aim of supporting the Anti-Balaka on the ground; Marcelin talked about them to P-1847.³²⁶¹ P-1847 heard from Tchikaya, who was close to Pascal Koyagbele, that the latter held meetings with Anatole Ngaya and some young FACA elements who were in Douala, bought food and provisions for the Anti-Balaka in Bozoum, and Tchikaya also accompanied a woman who said she was the sister of Martin Ziguélé to the border to bring supplies.³²⁶² The meetings in Douala took place at restaurant Balet or the Meridien hotel where Yvon Songuet, Marius and Goke Boston usually stayed.³²⁶³

1195. Barthélémy Namsenmo stated that since the Seleka treated FACA, gendarmerie, police as their enemies and wanted to kill them, these were forced to follow the civilians and take the ‘remède’ to defend their property, while wise men from the village would recruit youth to initiate them.³²⁶⁴ FACA, gendarmerie, police in Carnot all fled from death and entered Carnot thanks to the Anti-Balaka.³²⁶⁵ Seregaza, a FACA, was an Anti-Balaka ComZone, he followed Rocca Mokom who was also FACA in Amadagaza and going to Abba, ‘Gamboula’, because Rocca knew the border area well and led the fighting against the Seleka fleeing towards Cameroon.³²⁶⁶

1196. P-2841 stated that on the one hand, military who were humiliated by the Seleka and forced to flee the country were organising themselves to take back control, while on the other hand people such as those in previously existing self-defence groups could no longer stand the Seleka violence and tried to defend themselves – and later, the two groups began working together.³²⁶⁷ However, the organisation of the military around that time, mid-July 2013, was an issue and nothing was really happening yet.³²⁶⁸ P-2841 further testified that Anti-Balaka and military, against whom the Seleka also committed violence, joined together to drive out their common enemy.³²⁶⁹ According to P-2841, the military had to establish order, save their honour, and to do that, they had to fight the Seleka; at the same time a ‘willingness to take over’, could not be excluded.³²⁷⁰ P-2841 did not know when and how the decision to join the Anti-Balaka was made, but the Anti-Balaka were already resisting at the level of villages and towns and as they were progressing, the idea of chasing out the Seleka was taking shape, even within the army; naturally, the two had a common enemy and coming together was not a very difficult proposition.³²⁷¹

1197. Adrien Poussou testified that the self-defence groups started to become organised by former soldiers of the PG and FACA, and he concluded that as long as François Bozizé and his supporters had not decided to regain power through violence, the self-defence groups did not have sophisticated weapons, but from the moment there was this idea of regaining power through violence, professional soldiers started leading them.³²⁷² Adrien Poussou specified that he knew this because he was part of FROCCA, and it was public knowledge in the CAR that Koudemon Olivier alias Gbangouna, Semdiro and others, who were said to be leading the Anti-Balaka, were close to Bozizé.³²⁷³ Adrien Poussou did not know how they procured weapons³²⁷⁴ or anything about contacts between people close to François Bozizé and any of the self-defence groups in the time frame of April, summer 2013.³²⁷⁵ Adrien Poussou explained that in her interview, Ghislaine Dupont had put a question on Eugène Ngaikosset, one of François Bozizé’s close entourage and former officer of the PG, who had found refuge on the other side of the river, and that might have led people to believe that those close to Bozizé were on the other side of the river.³²⁷⁶

1198. Adrien Poussou testified that after his return to France, he was in constant contact with Socrate Bozizé and in touch with Joachim Kokaté, and between his stay in Yaoundé and the arrival of François Bozizé in France, the Anti-Balaka came into being.³²⁷⁷ According to Adrien Poussou, Levy Yakété, Mr Ngaïssona, Joachim Kokaté were very close and spoke to each other on a regular basis, so he supposed they had been in contact.³²⁷⁸ According to Adrien Poussou, he did not take very seriously what Kokaté was telling him, due to his ‘tendency to tell lies and fabulate’, but Kokaté claimed he was heading an organisation by the name of free officers who were ‘hell-bent’, had enough equipment to launch an attack and only lacked financial means to pay for things like food.³²⁷⁹ Socrate Bozizé did not discuss military matters with Adrien Poussou; as Socrate was not a military man himself, the witness thought he was not associated with anything of that, and military matters were also not very interesting for Adrien Poussou as he was in favour of a political process.³²⁸⁰

1199. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that he knew FACA members such as Konaté, Mazimbelet and Herve Ganazoui were among the Anti-Balaka, but apart from that he did not know the connection between FACA and Anti-Balaka.³²⁸¹ ‘Major Gremandou’ did not appear in the organisational structure of the Anti-Balaka, but was very influential in their operations and reported directly to Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom.³²⁸² Alfred Legrand Ngaya agreed with the suggestion that ‘one of the preoccupations and motivations for FACA’ to join the popular movement of self-defence was that they had been ‘persecuted and humiliated by the Seleka’; adding that FACA were ‘particularly targeted’.³²⁸³

³²⁸⁴ P-0291 Statement, CAR-OTP-2024-0036-R05, at 0044, para. 48. The Chamber notes in this regard the evidence of P-2027, who stated that there were some FACA who were commanded by civilians in the Anti-Balaka groups, but

1201. The Chamber notes that outside observers also concluded on links between (former) members of regular forces and self-defence groups. For instance, the CAR Panel heard from multiple sources, including Anti-Balaka and institutional contacts, that FACA members and gendarmes loyal to François Bozizé were recruiting youths from local communities from the Baya area (Ouham and Ombella-M'Poko provinces), some of whom were already part of hunting groups or self-defence militias called 'archers', as well as in the region of 'Garoua Boulai' and Zongo.³²⁸⁵ Similarly, an NGO report concluded that soldiers from the former army quickly joined the Anti-Balaka, bringing military skills and weapons, and that the Anti-Balaka professionalised and acquired more advanced weapons.³²⁸⁶ When P-1577 was travelling within the CAR in early November 2013, he heard about members of the FACA or PG being involved with local Anti-Balaka groups, saw people in military clothes, some carrying Kalashnikovs, and heard on several occasions that the groups that were attacking were mixed, some including personnel that were identified as having a history with FACA.³²⁸⁷

iv. Emergence of the Anti-Balaka

1202. The Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence's argument that rather than being a 'top-down organisation', the Anti-Balaka was a 'myriad of self-defence groups that spontaneously rose out of the Seleka's heinous and continues crimes against the civilian population'.³²⁸⁸

1203. In this regard, the Chamber further notes that the CAR Panel concluded at the time of its 2014 interim report that the Anti-Balaka was not an armed group with a centralised structure and effective command and control over its elements, but a 'myriad [of] different militias that Vianin Semdiro, Lieutenant Betikoudou and Lieutenant Tribunal were 'also' neutral FACA members who never got involved in anything (see P-2027 Statement, CAR-OTP-2078-0059-R03, at 0083, para. 143; see also at 0086-87, paras 163-170). Bearing in mind its assessment of P-2027's credibility, and also considering the evidence available on Ngaïkosset's and Olivier Koudemon's activities, the Chamber does not consider this part of P-2027's evidence reliable.

that either identify themselves as part of the movement or are or were associated to it by default'.³²⁸⁹

1204. However, Aurélien Llorca explained that while this was the starting point, it gradually, through the use of emissaries, formed into some structure.³²⁹⁰ Indeed, as the 2014 interim report also made clear: 'The re-emergence in the second half of 2013 of what was initially a self-defence group with the aim of protecting civilians and communities against the perceived State-sponsored oppression of non-Muslims culminated in a wider, better-structured and organised movement against the Séléka. It also gave an opportunity to former elements of the Central African armed forces to take much-awaited revenge against those who had defeated them during the March 2013 coup'.³²⁹¹

1205. Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that the resistance he heard about already had a structure which could be used: the first what they called self-defence in the hinterland, young people, usually KNK militants, recruited by mayors of local communes, with first mobilisation started by those in the prefecture in Ouham, M'Poko, Ouham-Pendé and Lobaye, who would then be joined by COCORA militia and Bozizé's PG who would flee Bangui on foot to join them.³²⁹² They started to have meetings in Cameroon with others who had joined him there or were already outside the country, and he started to set up an organisation.³²⁹³ Ngaikosset fled to the DRC and set up a structure of military nature there, and also in Landja, a place in Central Africa a bit upstream, they started to set up a structure and create the command links between them.³²⁹⁴ Some people that Jean-Jacques Demafouth spoke with at Camp M'Poko after the coup and that had been contacted to join the organisation talked to him about the organisational parts.³²⁹⁵ The witness's understanding from the information he received while at M'Poko was that the organisation of the Anti-Balaka started shortly after the coup.³²⁹⁶ When Jean-Jacques Demafouth heard talk about it, the priority was to recuperate weapons, wherever they were, go to the training centres, and try to find a way of feeding the troops, meaning the Anti-Balaka.³²⁹⁷

1206. The report of P-2926 concluded that initially a self-defence reaction of Gbaya from the Bossangoa area armed with a mixture of makeshift arms and arms recovered during combat, the Anti-Balaka knew a long history of self-defence and popular resistance, not escaping the traditional political and popular violence instrumentalisation.³²⁹⁸ According to this report, the first Anti-Balaka combatant groups were formed by victims of Seleka attacks against Gbaya villages, such as ‘colonel 12 puissance’.³²⁹⁹ Young rural victims were soon organised by village sorcerers and soldiers close to Bozizé that had fled the Seleka advance to the west of the CAR and Cameroon, with the former providing amulets and initiation, and the latter training the youth in handling weapons.³³⁰⁰

1207. The Chamber is of the view that the illustration of the Anti-Balaka as ‘myriad’ of different groups is only partially accurate. Indeed, the Chamber agrees, as the evidence above and below also shows, that self-defence groups were formed in various localities across the CAR. The Chamber further agrees that their objectives included rising against the atrocities committed by the Seleka and removing Michel Djotodia as well as the Seleka from power, and that such objectives evolved over time. The Chamber notes in this regard also its discussion on the efforts to structure the Anti-Balaka as a whole further following the attacks of 5 December 2013.³³⁰¹

1208. However, the Chamber disagrees that the various self-defence groups pursued their objectives in isolation and without coordination. The Chamber also disagrees with the suggestion that the Anti-Balaka would have been divided into separate ‘clusters’.³³⁰² The evidence before the Chamber clearly shows that self-defence groups in various localities communicated, with each other and also with individuals in other localities in the CAR and abroad, and coordinated with a view to descending towards Bangui and eventually launching the coordinated attacks against Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013. Further, in the Chamber's view, and as is also clear from a holistic assessment of the evidence before it, the fact that groups initially started out separately does not exclude their coordinated action thereafter. On the contrary, the evidence on record is unequivocal in showing that these various groups, in sharing a common enemy, set aside whatever individual motivation may have existed – whether of political, financial, or otherwise opportunistic nature – and through coordinated efforts acted towards the same goals.

1209. As discussed in detail below, this is further exemplified by the various super-imposed interests coming into play especially following the resignation of Michel Djotodia in early January 2014: while such interests informed the discussions and activities as well as tussles for leadership when it came to being considered by the transitional government, in the end, the various streams within the Anti-Balaka continued to cooperate, coordinate and align during the period relevant to the charges.

5. Objectives and policies of the Anti-Balaka

The self-defence groups initially forming in the provinces aimed at defending against the abuses and violence committed by the Seleka, within which framework some considered necessary to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power. Due to the religious and ethnic commonalities between the Muslims in the CAR and the Seleka, the Anti-Balaka perceived the former as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka. On this basis, as the Anti-Balaka emerged and coalesced in pursuit of its core objective, its elements targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, killing and dislocating them.

The implementation and execution of the Anti-Balaka's core objective was primed by anti-foreign sentiments and inflammatory rhetoric openly expressed by François Bozizé and others, which incited vigilance against those perceived to support the Seleka, in particular Muslim civilians.

Such rhetoric was reflected in meetings of François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others in Cameroon and repeated in a radio statement issued by FROCCA on 5 December 2013 in relation to the attack on Bangui, which referred to the attack as '[l]e rétablissement de l'ordre fonctionnel’ and further stated that the Anti-Balaka ‘sont des Centrafricains pour aller libérer leur pays des jougs des djihadistes venus du D[arfour], du T[chad], du S[oudan]’.

Mr Yekatom knew that the Anti-Balaka perceived, and himself perceived, the Muslims in the CAR as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka and that the Anti-Balaka targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, on this basis.

Mr Ngaïssona knew that the Anti-Balaka perceived, and himself perceived, the Muslims in the CAR as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka and that the Anti-Balaka targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, on this basis. Mr Ngaïssona made his contributions fully aware that the Anti-Balaka would violently target the Muslim civilian population in the west of the CAR, committing the widespread attack that ultimately took place from September 2013 through February 2014, including the seminal coordinated Anti-Balaka attacks of Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.

1210. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined above shows that the Anti-Balaka emerged from self-defence groups that formed with a view to defending against the Seleka violence, and started coordinating and organising in order to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power.³³⁰³ Individuals like François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others instrumentalised these Anti-Balaka groups to ensure that the removal of the Seleka from power would be followed by the return of François Bozizé to power.³³⁰⁴

1212. In assessing the objectives and policies of the Anti-Balaka, the Chamber has examined factors that cumulatively played a role in its evolution. This includes events of the end of 2012 and early 2013 which, in the view of the Chamber, set the stage on which the Anti-Balaka objectives and policies could exist and be implemented at least as of September 2013. These factors are discussed below.

1214. It appears from the evidence that while the above were among the initial motives, this did not include, in the early stages, advocating for the return of François Bozizé to power, or indeed having wider political ambitions. For example, P-1193 explained that after the collapse of the ‘Seleka government’, the population expected a change, a return to peace, to constitutional order.³³¹⁰ Vivien Beina stated that initially, the goal was to get rid of the Seleka, they had no political ambition and the idea of taking Bangui came later.³³¹¹ Similarly, P-2841 stated that the Anti-Balaka was not created to ‘take power’, it was a spontaneous self-defence movement at first, politics came later.³³¹² Alfred Legrand Ngaya confirmed that the objective of the Anti-Balaka groups was to defend themselves against the Seleka and that these groups were not set up with the aim of bringing Bozizé back to power – indicating that, at that moment, they were not thinking of Bozizé because he had ‘abandoned’ them.³³¹³ D30-4848 testified that the Seleka was a danger for the country and that it was necessary for them to leave, so everyone was making efforts to ‘drive them out by all means possible’.³³¹⁴

1215. At the same time, and as outlined above, the Chamber received evidence according to which individuals, especially those gathered in Cameroon, started using the self-defence groups forming in the provinces with a view to pursuing a super-imposed political goal, in particular the ‘return of the constitutional order’, meaning the return of François Bozizé to power, by all means.³³¹⁵

1216. The Chamber is of the view that it is immaterial for purposes of its determinations whether the reinstatement into power of François Bozizé was the agreed aim of some or all Anti-Balaka groups, at one time or another. Indeed, as stated below, the Chamber does not consider that the Anti-Balaka had to be a monolithic entity and/or ideologically homogeneous at any stage of the events. It remains that the express and overriding aim upon which all the self-defence groups that then coalesced as the Anti-Balaka were united was the expulsion of Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power in the CAR.

1217. In the view of the Chamber, of crucial importance for the current discussion is how this aim was understood and implemented in practice. On the basis of the evidence before it, as outlined below, the Chamber concludes that, against the backdrop of the violence committed by the Seleka in particular against the non-Muslim population and the perceptions this created, the Anti-Balaka equated the Muslim civilian population with the Seleka and its actions, and targeted it accordingly.

1218. At the outset, the Chamber recalls its discussion of the violence committed by the Seleka, in particular against the non-Muslim population, of the composition of the Seleka, which included Chadian and Sudanese mercenaries, and of the perceptions the aforementioned created among the non-Muslim population.³³¹⁶ The Chamber considered this as one of the factors that cumulatively played into the evolution of the Anti-Balaka and its objectives and policies. Concretely, the Chamber considers that the abuses and violence committed by the Seleka following its coup not only confirmed the fears forewarned by François Bozizé, as discussed below, but also reinforced communal distrust, grief and feelings of revenge among the common population against the at that stage known ‘enemy’, the Seleka.

1219. As the evidence outlined below shows, several witnesses testified as to how, within this context, the Anti-Balaka started targeting the Muslim civilian population, describing how the latter were seen as accomplices of the Seleka and responsible for the violence and human rights abuses reportedly perpetrated by the Seleka. In this overall framework of Seleka violence and resulting perceptions, the Anti-Balaka equated the Muslim civilian population with the Seleka and its acts, targeting it accordingly.³³¹⁷ This was another factor considered by the Chamber that cumulatively played into the evolution of the Anti-Balaka and its objectives and policies.

1220. Catherine Samba-Panza testified that ‘generally speaking, [the Anti-Balaka] wanted retaliation, reprisals against the Seleka and those in favour of the Seleka, and the Muslims who had helped the Seleka to take power and those who had committed all those crimes which we all deplore’, testifying that ‘the majority of the Anti-Balaka, they were moved in this spirit of revenge’ and ‘above all’ wanted to ensure that the Seleka, who were responsible for crimes, would no longer hold power.³³¹⁸ She also stated that the Peuhls were targeted by the Anti-Balaka because the Anti-Balaka considered the Muslim civilian population to have welcomed and helped the Seleka and that they were also accomplices in some of the violence, describing the situation as revenge on the population.³³¹⁹

1221. Catherine Samba-Panza explained further that ‘[g]enerally, there was an assimilation of all Muslim populations to the Seleka, so the attacks [of the Anti-Balaka] weren’t just directed against the combatants of the Seleka, but against the Muslim and Peuhl population’.³³²⁰ The witness stated that the population ‘thought that the Chadians, the Muslims were all one’,³³²¹ and that the Anti-Balaka committed acts ‘against the civilian population which was meant to have supported the Seleka, or having protected the Seleka or having been close to the Seleka regime’.³³²²

1222. Several witnesses who were elements of, or associated with, the Anti-Balaka at the relevant time testified accordingly. Specifically, P-2232, who was in Zongo with Maxime Mokom at the time, testified that during this period, ‘people were scared. We were frightened of our Muslim brothers who were in our country. And therefore everybody was suspicious of our Muslim brothers. So the youth increased their vigilance as regards their Muslim brothers because it is through them that the Seleka elements were able to enter the town of

Bangui’.³³²³ He further stated that ‘it is when the Seleka started killing and committing acts of violence that hatred set in, because the Seleka used their Muslim identity to attack the population’.³³²⁴ P-2232 explained that ‘the Seleka perpetrated violence against the population’, so ‘the instinct of the Anti-Balaka is to kill the Muslim’ and ‘[m]any people joined the Anti-Balaka movement in order to exact revenge and so whenever they met a Muslim, even a child, their reflex action was to kill that Muslim’, ‘during operations [Anti-Balaka] always wanted to try and neutralise or kill them’, for which reason there were many civilian deaths.³³²⁵

1223. Similarly, P-2027 stated that the violent acts of the Seleka resulted in a spirit of revenge and ‘Muslim civilians were killed in this spirit of revenge’.³³²⁶ P-2027 even spoke of a sense of foreboding at the beginning of the crisis, stating that the Anti-Balaka ‘were mixing everyone’ together, and were guided by a spirit of revenge and lacked control.³³²⁷

1224. P-0965 stated that in the context of the Anti-Balaka’s advance through the provinces, they mainly attacked Muslims with a view to killing them, stating that the Seleka, being majority Muslims, whether it was a Seleka soldier or a civilian Muslim, to those that were chasing a Muslim is a Muslim, so they did not make a difference between them (‘les Seleka étant en majorité musulman que ce soit un soldat Seleka ou un musulman civil, pour ceux qui les pourchassaient, un musulman est un musulman, donc il [sic] faisaient pas de différence entre les soldats et les civils musulmans’).³³²⁸ He continued that the general advice in the atmosphere was to kill ‘the Arabs’ (‘les arabes’), saying that ‘an Arab is an Arab, he had to be killed’ (‘un arabe est un arabe, il fallait le tuer’).³³²⁹ P-0965 said that he did not see Andjilo punish the Anti-Balaka for harming Muslim civilians, on the contrary, he would punish Anti-Balaka elements if he heard they had let a Muslim, Seleka or civilian, go or helped them to be saved.³³³⁰

1225. P-2269 stated that the Seleka started killing and the Anti-Balaka were then angry and wanted revenge.³³³¹ He explained that '[w]e [the Anti-Balaka] didn't differentiate between Muslim civilians or Seleka, they were all the same. So if the Anti-Balaka entered a place and saw Muslims, we would consider them all as Seleka, it didn't matter if they were children, women or elderly, they were all Seleka. We all thought the same within the Anti-Balaka'.³³³² P-2269 said that it was the same for the Seleka, they would consider all Christians as Anti-Balaka.³³³³

1226. This was echoed by P-2841, who stated that the retaliatory violence by the Anti-Balaka against Muslim civilians emanated from the idea that Muslims were responsible for the atrocities committed by the Seleka and that the Anti-Balaka 'confused the Seleka and Muslim civilians in their minds, and the enemy became all Muslims'.³³³⁴ P-2841 stated that once the Anti-Balaka had been initiated into the group they would become enraged and 'direct that rage' at civilians if they did not encounter military personnel.³³³⁵

1227. Similarly, P-2673 stated that the aim of Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom father was to fight off the Seleka and they gave money to soldiers in Cameroon so they would join the Anti-Balaka and help them fight the Seleka, with 'Seleka' meaning the soldiers who came from Chad and Sudan as well as the local Muslims who supported them.³³³⁶

1228. The Chamber considers that this is clearly reflected in the hostilities that occurred from September 2013 onwards and eventually culminated in the coordinated attacks on Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013. This further featured in each of the events charged, and continued thereafter in the hostilities until the end of February 2014. The Chamber refers in this regard to its discussion in the context of hostilities during the advance of Anti-Balaka groups through the provinces,³³³⁷ and of events in Bangui on 5 and 24 December 2013,³³³⁸ on the PK9-Mbaïki axis in January and February 2014 where Anti-Balaka elements, including from Mr Yekatom's group, are seen expressing Anti-Muslim sentiment,³³³⁹ as well as concerning the hostilities in January and February 2014.³³⁴⁰

1229. That the Anti-Balaka groups sought revenge in their advance and attacks was also known at the time the Anti-Balaka structure became more formalised in 2014. Indeed, Alfred Legrand Ngaya, while averring that Muslims were not targeted 'as such', testified that for months the population had been persecuted by the Seleka, which had accomplices among the Muslim population, and this created vengeance in them.³³⁴¹ Similarly, various documents issued in the name of the Anti-Balaka in 2014 referred to this 'spirit of revenge' driving the Anti-Balaka against the Seleka and 'Muslim subjects' supporting the Seleka.³³⁴²

1230. Witnesses who were not within the Anti-Balaka testified similarly. For example, P-0475, a Muslim civilian from Bangui, stated that the Seleka's brutal attacks against non-Muslims led to the Anti-Balaka forming and taking revenge,³³⁴³ specifying that '[t]he Anti-Balaka and many CAR Christians at the time would confuse Muslims with Arabs', which he heard in discussions, general conversations with colleagues and friends, that they 'did and do not distinguish between Arabs and Muslims', and that he himself was 'attacked' by friends and even within his family for being an 'Arab'.³³⁴⁴

were considered to have caused the political and military conflict’, and that since ‘the Chadians and Sudanese were Muslims, all Muslims were persecuted after the Seleka lost power’.³³⁴⁶ He said further that some of the Anti-Balaka elements he spoke to in Bossangoa at the time ‘called all the Muslims, even civilians, Seleka’, and for them ‘it was enough to be a Muslim to be equated to a Seleka’.³³⁴⁷

1232. Jean-Jacques Demafouth also testified that when information on targeted attacks by the Anti-Balaka was received, it was verified with community and religious leaders, and all the information received confirmed that systematically as of January 2014, Muslim houses and property were being destroyed, Muslims being ‘hunted down’, which in the witness’s view was becoming ‘really systematic and methodical’, and coming from all the zones under the control of the Anti-Balaka.³³⁴⁸

1233. The above was put to the point by Aurélien Llorca, member of the CAR Panel, who stated that whilst the Anti-Balaka’s objectives was to chase the Seleka out of the CAR, due to the association made by the Anti-Balaka ‘between Seleka, Sudanese, Chadians and “foreigners” they would group them all together as their enemy’, leading to a ‘simplified idea’ of who the enemy was ‘lower down in the chain of Anti-Balaka command’, in that in the ‘lower ranks’ in the Anti-Balaka, ‘the perceived enemy simply became “Muslims in general”’.³³⁴⁹ Aurélien Llorca testified that he heard this from different Anti-Balaka elements in different places in different positions, as well as from the general population, stating that it was ‘as though there was a simplified message circulating that all the Muslims needed to be chased out’.³³⁵⁰ The witness, who in his capacity interviewed many Anti-Balaka elements at various level of the hierarchy, noted a ‘difference in language’ used to express the same idea, with Anti-Balaka subordinates wanting ‘to chase out all Muslims’, while the leadership made reference to chasing out the Seleka ‘in order to avoid any amalgamation of issues based on religion’.³³⁵¹ Aurélien Llorca stated that the link made between the Seleka and Muslims by the Anti-

Balaka on the ground was ‘public and common knowledge’, on the roads and in official media.³³⁵² The panel concluded that by the time of the attack on Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013, ‘Muslims were already being equated with Séléka elements, foreigners, Chadians and jihadis’.³³⁵³

1234. The Chamber is of the view that the conflict in the CAR in 2012 to 2014 was not in its origins, or at the outset, of a religious nature.³³⁵⁴ However, it is clear from the evidence as outlined that the Muslim religion became an indicator as to who the enemy, perceived or real, of the Anti-Balaka was.

1235. The evidence before the Chamber shows that the level of education across the elements of the Anti-Balaka played into how the Anti-Balaka perceived the Muslim civilian population. Specifically, P-0965 testified that the Anti-Balaka ‘movement’ was poorly informed and educated, which meant that ‘almost all of those who made up the movement were in fact illiterate’,³³⁵⁵ and this, in relation to those coming from Gobere, was common knowledge to those in charge.³³⁵⁶ P-0965 opined that whilst an illiterate person has the capacity to carry out instructions, they may act differently to a person who has been educated or trained and who knows their rights and the law.³³⁵⁷

1236. Similarly, P-2841 stated that ‘60% to 70% of people in CAR cannot read or write so it was difficult to change people’s mentality’, when asked about any attempts of the leaders to ‘prevent the violence against Muslim civilians or change the mindset’.³³⁵⁸ He said that the way in which the conflict unfolded and was conducted by the Anti-Balaka was not a surprise as ‘most of these Anti-Balaka were not educated, and the violence came from the idea that the Muslims were responsible’.³³⁵⁹

1237. P-0876 testified that, in this context, ‘it was necessary’ to reach out to Anti-Balaka elements ‘to explain to them that a Muslim is not necessarily always Seleka’.³³⁶⁰ Similarly, P-1193 stated that having heard about Muslims being killed in the north of the country, he reached out to Mr Yekatom’s group positioned at the PK9 bridge because he wanted to make them understand that not all Muslims were ‘wrong’ and that they should distinguish between Muslims and mercenaries.³³⁶¹ This was at a time when Muslims had already been evacuated by the Chadians.³³⁶²

1238. Other witnesses testified in a similar way. Specifically, Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that it was difficult to get educated people to join the Anti-Balaka as intellectuals feared the ICC.³³⁶³ Aurélien Llorca stated that ComZones were usually more educated, better dressed and better spoken than ‘foot soldiers’, although there were exceptions like Andjilo,³³⁶⁴ while Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that literate and illiterate ComZones did not function in the same way.³³⁶⁵

1239. In light of the evidence before the Chamber, in particular also regarding Mr Ngaïssona’s contacts with various individuals in 2013³³⁶⁶ and bearing in mind Mr Yekatom’s control over his own group at the relevant time,³³⁶⁷ the Chamber is of the view that this was known to, and instrumentalised by, François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others in their actions.

1240. It is in this context that the Chamber has considered the evidence before it, as outlined below, regarding the rhetoric used by François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others in particular in the lead-up to the Seleka coup in March 2013, but also thereafter.

1241. First, the Chamber has examined the speeches of François Bozizé from December 2012 to early 2013 that primed the CAR population to distinguish between ‘real’ and ‘foreign’ Central Africans and set the tone of the environment of distrust by demanding constant ‘vigilance’ from ‘real’ Central Africans and identifying threats from those living in ‘fenced compounds’, a clear reference to Muslims in the CAR, which was also understood as such.

1242. The Chamber notes in this regard the conclusion of the CAR Panel, which stated that the high number of human rights violations committed by the Seleka on non-Muslim communities ‘exacerbated dormant resentments that were opportunistically channelled, for political purposes, through the anti-balaka’,³³⁶⁸ and that political activism, including by ‘Bozizé’s camp’, contributed to the emergence of an anti-foreign discourse which motivated the killing of Muslims in areas controlled by the Anti-Balaka.³³⁶⁹

1243. More specifically in this context as regards the rhetoric used, the UN International Commission of Inquiry on the CAR concluded that ‘[t]owards the end of the Bozizé Government, there was a sudden surge in the number and strength of hate messages emanating from the members of the government’, directed at ‘minority groups, such as people from the Peuhl ethnic group, as well as other Muslims’.³³⁷⁰ According to this commission, ‘[s]taunch supporters of the Bozizé Government used the national radio, and especially popular programmes, to defend the government and call for its opponents and others accused of conniving with the Séléka to be attacked’.³³⁷¹

1244. Of particular importance in this regard is the speech given by François Bozizé on 27 December 2012 at PK0 in Bangui,³³⁷² at a time when the Seleka forces had started their advance towards Bangui and attacks in various localities in earnest.³³⁷³

1245. The Prosecution argues that this speech of Bozizé is set within the context of Bozizé and members of his government and the KNK, including Mr Ngaïssona, ‘stepping up efforts to mobilise support for the regime, resorting to nationalistic appeals discriminating against, and targeting Muslims’,³³⁷⁴ with the speech at PK0 ‘stok[ing] fear and engender[ing] ethno-religious animus toward the country’s Muslim population, falsely portraying his political opponents as the product of a foreign Muslim invasion’.³³⁷⁵

1246. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that there was nothing untoward in this speech which called for peaceful protest and correctly labelled the Seleka as largely foreigners, and that François Bozizé did not conflate the Seleka with CAR Muslims.³³⁷⁶ The Ngaïssona Defence argues more generally that ‘there is no evidence of a plan, design, pattern, or coordinated collective mobilisation against the Muslim population that may be inferred from the public statements’ made by François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others prior to the coup, as rather these statements ‘convey [a] concern for the peace and security of [the] CAR, in response to the Seleka invasion unfolding on its territory’.³³⁷⁷

1247. In the Chamber’s view, the content of the speeches and how they were understood, as outlined below, cannot be interpreted in the manner suggested by the Ngaïssona Defence. Instead, it is clear from the statements discussed that François Bozizé meant to mobilise the population into a state of preparedness to fight, if necessary, against ‘foreigners’, including those living, at that time, in ‘fenced compounds’ within the CAR.

1248. Speaking at the rally on 27 December 2012, François Bozizé called on the support of France and the US for assistance in pushing back the Seleka to their former positions and for continued dialogue in Libreville.³³⁷⁸ François Bozizé warned those at the rally of the precarious situation the country was in, referring to the approaching Seleka as being comprised of foreigners and stressing the differences between the CAR population and Seleka rebels, stating that the latter did not speak Sango or French, included Janjaweed and ‘Toroboro’, and sought to take over power in the CAR, exploit the country’s resources, and kill Central Africans:

Des étrangers cherchent à s’accaparer de notre pays;³³⁷⁹

1249. François Bozizé entreated people to remain vigilant or watchful in respect of foreigners who lived in ‘fenced’ houses or compounds, in which people intending to harm the Central African population were hiding or being hidden, making reference to particular neighbourhoods, and called on the population to turn suspicious people in to the police or gendarmerie:

Soyez vigilants dans les différents quartiers; surveillez surtout les étrangers qui vivent dans des concessions clôturées. Ils ont l’habitude de cacher des gens dans leurs

1250. François Bozizé called upon people to demonstrate peacefully against the impending coup and not to harm people or foreigners.³³⁸⁴ At the same time, however, François Bozizé insistently asked whether anyone in 'the youth' was ready to fight and whether people were ready for war, hardly veiled by his statement that 'war' would need to be fought according to rules and by not touching 'foreigners', and called upon Central Africans to get ready to resist and to arm themselves with bows and knives and not to flee should the time come to fight to defend the country:

N'y a-t-il personne au sein de la jeunesse pour lutter ? N'y a-t-il personne au sein de la jeunesse pour lutter ? Est-ce qu'il y en a ? Est-ce qu'il y en a ? Est-ce qu'il y en a ? 1251. Levy Yakété also addressed the crowd during this rally, saying that COCORA cells would be set up in all villages of the CAR, and stressing that they were surrounded by traitors and that foreigners would never take power in the CAR, concluding: 'la patrie ou la mort, nous vaincrons'.³³⁸⁷

1253. For instance, P-0889 stated that not solely Muslims lived in fenced compounds and that Bozizé referred to keeping a watchful eye over the foreigners who were coming, thus targeting the Seleka, as the majority of them were not Central Africans and did not speak the national language,³³⁸⁸ with 'Janjaweed' not referring to CAR Muslims, but to foreigners from Chad or Sudan.³³⁸⁹ According to P-0889, the purpose of the speech was to warn people about the Seleka's advance and that the Seleka were already hidden in houses in Bangui.³³⁹⁰

1254. Similarly, P-1847 testified that in his speech, François Bozizé was referring to the enemies of the CAR who were not Central Africans but foreigners who did not speak French or Sango and would be regarded as belonging to the Seleka, with 'Janjaweed' being mercenaries from Sudan.³³⁹¹ P-1847 stated that he said vigilance was to be exercised towards the foreign

Seleka rebels who were already in Bangui, hiding within the walls of Muslims houses,³³⁹² as at the end of 2012, the Seleka had covertly entered Bangui, so the aim of the roadblocks erected by COCORA was to find the hidden Seleka and their accomplices, and those targeted as accomplices of the Seleka at the roadblocks were Runga, Muslims and Gula.³³⁹³ According to P-1847, at the time of the speech the CAR population experienced the advance of the Seleka as ‘foreign invasion’, with the complicity of certain Central Africans, and there was fear that the country would be destroyed.³³⁹⁴

1255.D30-4720, a Muslim civilian, testified that François Bozizé was advocating vigilance in general and referred to foreigners who had entered the country to destabilise it, with the mention of fenced compounds not being a reference to Muslims in particular.³³⁹⁵ The witness testified that the areas mentioned in the speech, Mongoumba in the south and Mboko to the east, were not known to be Muslim areas, but the gates of entry to Bangui.³³⁹⁶ According to D30-4720, the Muslims did not become a target after Bozizé’s request that the population remain vigilant, she visited PK5 frequently and never heard that Muslims were targeted.³³⁹⁷

1257.Indeed, the evidence shows that the Muslim community in particular understood the speech accordingly, including that the reference to ‘fenced compounds’ referred to Muslims. For example, P-0967, a Muslim civilian, testified that Bozizé led people to understand that the enemy was fast approaching and was not from the CAR, but foreign, and therefore the citizens of the CAR had to be alert and vigilant.³³⁹⁹ According to P-0967, after this speech the people's understanding of the country changed, in that the population thought that the rebellion was managed by the Muslims and were disappointed vis-à-vis the Muslims.³⁴⁰⁰

1258. Similarly, P-0475 understood the speech to refer to being alert to Muslim compounds because jihadists would enter those compounds.³⁴⁰¹ P-0475 understood the reference to fenced compounds in the speech to be covertly referring to Muslims because they 'usually live in houses with compounds', and this is what immediately comes to the minds of Central Africans.³⁴⁰² P-0475 agreed that also non-Muslims lived in fenced compounds, but explained that in the beginning it was only Muslims.³⁴⁰³ He stated that '[Bozizé] asked the Central Africans to be vigilant so that there would be no attack by the Muslims. And everyone knew about this and everybody was preparing themselves psychologically for attack by the Muslims. It wasn't a secret'.³⁴⁰⁴ At the same time, P-0475 testified that there was no spirit of hatred in the speech and it was not Bozizé's intention to request the population to react negatively towards the Muslims, rather the subsequent events were the issue, leading to an amalgamation during which 'one would be considered to be a foreigner as long as one bore a Muslim name'.³⁴⁰⁵ P-0475 testified that the statements by Bozizé were further propagated by his supporters.³⁴⁰⁶

1259. Another Muslim civilian, P-0461, heard the speech broadcast on Radio Centrafrique and understood it as saying that the Muslims wanted to enter Bangui and take over the country, that Muslims had weapons in their compounds, and that Christians should enter the Muslim compounds and take the weapons.³⁴⁰⁷ According to P-0461, Christians started to rebel, particularly after this speech; when the Seleka attacked Bangui, people realised that François Bozizé was right.³⁴⁰⁸

1260. P-2232 testified that he understood Bozizé to be referring to Muslims when he warned of people in fenced houses, the reason being that ‘in Bangui, in most of the cases it is Muslims who live in those fenced compounds. And amongst the Seleka, most of the Seleka elements were Muslims’.³⁴⁰⁹ P-2232 testified that ‘Bozizé did not talk about Muslims. He was talking about the Seleka and those who were working with the Seleka’.³⁴¹⁰ According to P-2232, it was realised later that Bozizé was ‘right’, namely that ‘all the Muslims living inside fenced compounds had weapons and they were using them to fight’, that the Seleka elements were able to enter Bangui through the Muslim population.³⁴¹¹ P-2232 stated that the speech reflected a feeling of fear amongst the CAR population of the advancing Seleka, made up of foreigners from Chad and Sudan and seen as attacking the CAR, thus reflecting a more general fear or suspicion of the Muslim population in the CAR.³⁴¹² P-2232 noted that in calling for vigilance, Bozizé did not direct that anyone be maltreated or harmed, and advocated for non-violent protest by handing over ‘suspicious individuals’ to the police.³⁴¹³

1261. Further, Adrien Poussou, a journalist, later participant in meetings in Cameroon and member of the FROCCA, published in media at the time that after the speech ‘there was something that resembled psychosis in the Muslim community’, recalling that also in the Christian community, the speech was criticised and branded a ‘dangerous speech that would shake up the very foundations of national cohesion’.³⁴¹⁴ The witness testified that this perceived danger to public cohesion was also discussed and criticised publicly in the media.³⁴¹⁵

1262. In light of the above, the Chamber considers this speech of François Bozizé a clear call for vigilance of ‘Central Africans’ towards all ‘foreigners’, which, on its face and in the words used by François Bozizé, included individuals ‘living’ in ‘fenced compounds’ within the CAR.³⁴¹⁶ The speech played on and heightened an already prevailing climate of fear and suspicion and was meant to mobilise the population into supporting his regime. Far from being a mere innocent call for peaceful demonstrations, as suggested by the Ngaïssona

Defence, the Chamber is of the view that this speech was meant to set the tone of preparedness for the possibility of ‘real’ Central Africans fighting, to their death, against anyone who was considered to be ‘foreigner’. This speech was made in full knowledge of the Seleka, in their essence, having come to the fore through a coalition of Central African groups opposed to the Bozizé administration,³⁴¹⁷ and in this knowledge falsely claimed that the Seleka included exclusively ‘foreigners’, and not a single Central African.³⁴¹⁸

1263. The Chamber notes that this speech did not directly refer to Muslims within the CAR in general, and that this speech, on its own, did not make Muslims out to be the enemy.³⁴¹⁹ However, the Chamber recalls how the speech and in particular the reference to ‘fenced compounds’ was understood and considers that it primed its audience, setting the tone with references to ‘foreigners’ to include also those considered ‘foreign’ within the CAR who would support the Seleka. This is not negated by François Bozizé also calling, at that stage of the conflict, for peaceful protest.

1264. The speech of François Bozizé held on 27 December 2012 was not the only address to the population in the context of the advancing Seleka. The Chamber considered in this context as a further cumulative factor that François Bozizé’s message was widely known and drew sectarian lines well before the coup and the events in the latter half of 2013 because of its repetition by others and its dissemination prior to the Seleka coup in March 2013, including the support expressed by Mr Ngaïssona as outlined below. The Chamber considered as an additional cumulative factor that certain youth organisations took on François Bozizé’s appeal to vigilance by setting up roadblocks and checkpoints ‘to find hidden Seleka and their accomplices’, targeting Muslims and CAR ethnicities associated with Muslims.

1265. In this context, the Chamber refers to Levy Yakété, two days after François Bozizé’s speech at PK0, calling in a radio broadcast³⁴²⁰ on the youth to redouble their vigilance efforts and keep a watchful eye, particularly in Bangui, Bimbo and Begoua, as illegal activities and other ³⁴¹⁹ The Chamber notes in this regard also a speech given by François Bozizé given on occasion of the 54-year anniversary of the CAR, seemingly in early December 2012, meaning at a time when the Seleka existed and advanced, but had not yet carried out its first main attack (see P-0889: T-108, p. 56, lines 1-21 referring to Speech, CAR-OTP-2100-0540, at 0544; see also section IV.A.1.ii above).

suspicious behaviour were occurring, stating that unknown people should be handed over to the police and gendarmerie, reminding not to use any violence in carrying out these actions and calling for a multiplication of checkpoints on all arterial roads in Bangui.³⁴²¹

1266.The Chamber further recalls in this regard its discussion of the activities of COCORA and COAC at checkpoints in Bangui prior to the Seleka coup.³⁴²²

1267.This was followed by François Bozizé's address to the people on 31 December 2012 on occasion of the New Year,³⁴²³ which referred to the crisis in the country and stated, inter alia, that the CAR was divided, having become two countries with one belonging to the 'Janjaweed' and the other to the 'real' Central Africans.³⁴²⁴ Bozizé reiterated his call for Central Africans to remain vigilant:

Tout ce que je vous demande, c'est d'être vigilants, veillez tout le temps, tout le temps. Les jeunes, soyez vigilants, les femmes, soyez vigilantes, les préfets, soyez vigilants, les sous-préfets, soyez vigilants, les maires, soyez vigilants, les chefs de quartier, soyez vigilants, les chefs de groupe, soyez vigilants, ne laissez pas tomber le pays, ne laissez pas tomber la R[epublique] C[entrafricaine].³⁴²⁵

1268.He concluded by saying that

[L]'année 2013 s'approche, vigilance, vigilance! Surveillez, laissez tomber la peur. Tout est dans tes mains, Centrafricain, ce n'est qu'avec tes mains que tu seras capable de te battre, de te battre jusqu'à la victoire, la victoire, la victoire!³⁴²⁶

1269.Further, in early January 2013, Javon Zama Papa called on the radio,³⁴²⁷ on behalf of Mr Ngaïssona, for a peace march, speaking of how the enemies of the nation had decided to create unrest by bringing in Sharia law with the aim of preventing the various religious denominations from carrying out their normal activities, and he maintained that certain people wanted to use Islam to destroy the country and terminate all the positive initiatives that had been taken by the government for the well-being of the citizens and for the development of the country.³⁴²⁸

1270. Shortly thereafter, on 6 January 2013,³⁴²⁹ Mr Ngaïssona called on people to attend a march in Bangui he was coordinating, distinguishing between CAR citizens and the foreigners in the Seleka who he stated had perpetrated crimes against Central Africans, and stating that everyone must fight for the return to peace:

Ces gens qui sont venus ne représentent pas tous les Centrafricains, ils ne sont pas non plus soutenus par tous les Centrafricains. Les nombreux étrangers qui sont avec eux ont perpétré des actes terribles qui ont infligé de grandes souffrances au peuple centrafricain. C'est pour cela qu'après avoir réfléchi, nous nous sommes dit en tant que combattants de la paix que nous devons nous battre pour que la paix revienne dans notre pays. Voilà pourquoi je viens [...] lancer ce communiqué à tous les Centrafricains. Que tu fasses partie d'une confession religieuse, que tu sois membre du gouvernement, syndicaliste, commerçant ou commerçante, élève, étudiant, je pense que ce communiqué nous concerne tous.³⁴³⁰

Ce ne sont pas les Centrafricains qui ont fait ces choses là. Je pense c'est les étrangers qui s'y mélangent au milieu des Centrafricains pour venir revendiquer. C'est eux qui ont détruit tout sur leur passage.³⁴³¹

1271. Additionally, Mr Ngaïssona rejected civil war and called upon the Central African population to support the Libreville peace process.³⁴³²

1272. In a radio broadcast press conference on 9 January 2013 regarding the Libreville negotiations,³⁴³³ François Bozizé continued to refer to the Seleka as made up of ‘Janjaweed’, foreigners who did not speak Sango, French or English, and stated that the Seleka had been obliged to recruit Janjaweed and Toroboro who wished to exploit and destroy the CAR.³⁴³⁴ He further asked whether the people would leave the CAR to foreigners and whether they would want to be slaves, stating that if people were not vigilant, they would be slaughtered.³⁴³⁵

1273. Following the march announced by Javon Zama Papa and Mr Ngaïssona, in a radio broadcast on 11 January 2013, Mr Ngaïssona thanked those who had responded to the call of the coordination fighting for peace, stating ‘c’est une manière de brandir haut et fort que la R[épublique] C[entrafricaine] ne doit pas être envahie par les étrangers’, and further that the Central African people could not be divided as it rose up as one to say no to civil war and bloodbath, and thanked the people for their support of Bozizé.³⁴³⁶

1274. Also Steve Yambété, KNK member and head of COAC,³⁴³⁷ stated on the radio in early January 2013 that in order to help the security situation, the gendarmerie and police should be alerted to suspected criminals at checkpoints.³⁴³⁸ In further radio statements in January 2013, Steve Yambété said that (i) COAC’s aim was to identify who was ‘with’ the head of state at day and ‘Janjaweed’ at night;³⁴³⁹ (ii) he had called upon the youth to mobilise, which had responded positively by erecting roadblocks along routes and stopped ill-intentioned people, calling upon the youth to be vigilant, monitor the security in their country, and control the roadblocks;³⁴⁴⁰ and (iii) those who resisted at checkpoints were accomplices of the Seleka, the youths manning the checkpoints were disciplined, unarmed and non-violent, and would call the military when they encountered a dangerous person to be transferred to the police and the gendarmerie.³⁴⁴¹

1275. On occasion of the International Women's Day on 8 March 2013, François Bozizé spoke on the issue of the crisis, questioning whether the young people who had joined the Seleka were really Central Africans, considering the destructive actions,³⁴⁴² and calling specifically on women not to be afraid, warning them that the country would otherwise be destroyed and they ('we') would become slaves.³⁴⁴³

1276. Only a week later, at a rally on 15 March 2013 to celebrate François Bozizé's ten years in power,³⁴⁴⁴ François Bozizé reiterated his urge to the crowd to remain vigilant,³⁴⁴⁵ in a 'call to vigilance, national unity and assembly'.³⁴⁴⁶ Mr Ngaïssona, attending in his capacity as minister of youth, sports, arts and culture, pledged to François Bozizé the support of the Central African youth in 'defending their endangered homeland'.³⁴⁴⁷

1277. On the same day,³⁴⁴⁸ François Bozizé protested about the Seleka's lack of respect for the Libreville agreement and stated that '[c]ertains enfants du pays' were being manipulated by foreigners who wished to exploit the country.³⁴⁴⁹ Bozizé again urged the youth to be vigilant and to defend the country if they were 'authentic' Central Africans and unless they wanted to become slaves.³⁴⁵⁰ He reiterated that police or gendarmerie should be called to deal with suspicious people and that no violence should be used,³⁴⁵¹ and said that they had been unable to organise themselves due to, inter alia, infiltration by the Seleka.³⁴⁵² Importantly, François Bozizé also further defined who 'the youth' was to be vigilant about and defend against:

1278. The evidence before the Chamber shows that Muslims in the CAR were generally seen as traders.³⁴⁵⁴ The Chamber thus considers that the reference to individuals coming into the CAR with 'marchandises' served as further identifier not only for the Seleka as the 'enemy', but by its nature also included Muslim civilians in the CAR.

1279. The Chamber considers this to be underscored by then-ambassador of the CAR to Cameroon Louis Oguéré who, on the same day, stated that the war of occupation that the country was experiencing had been predictable, because foreigners had installed themselves in the country, fraudulently becoming Central Africans and, due to the resources of the CAR, were interested in gaining political power, and that the people in question had been welcomed but now wanted to take the country.³⁴⁵⁵

1280. The Chamber concludes that the context given by the then-ambassador, who also participated in meetings with François Bozizé and Mr Ngaïssona in Cameroon after the Seleka coup,³⁴⁵⁶ makes clear that he was not merely referring to foreign elements of the Seleka, but in fact to those considered 'foreigners' in their own country, the CAR.

Jeunesse de Centrafrique, moi, ton frère, Mike Steve Yambété, chargé de mission au ministère de la Jeunesse, Sports, Arts et Culture, je suis venu représenter mon ministre empêché pour te dire de ne pas te laisser manipuler par les racontars. Au moment où je te parle, sois sereine. Ton pays n’est pas inquiété. Attends au moment où on va te dire que ta vie est menacée, c’est à ce moment-là que tu peux faire tout ce que tu veux. Mais pour l’instant, ta vie n’est pas menacée, raison pour laquelle le ministre de la Jeunesse, des Sports, des Arts et de la Culture, m’a chargé de venir te livrer ce message, de ne pas avoir peur. Reste tranquille là où tu es. Dès que le besoin se fait sentir, on te fera appel.³⁴⁵⁷

1282. The Chamber notes the Ngaïssona Defence’s argument that there is no evidence that Mr Ngaïssona instructed Steve Yambété to make an address on his behalf and that, in any event, this address was a call for appeasement and not violence.³⁴⁵⁸ The Chamber agrees that there is no evidence on the record indicating that Mr Ngaïssona instructed Steve Yambété to make the above radio statement. At the same time, the Chamber notes that Steve Yambété clearly indicated in this address that he was giving it on behalf of ‘[his] minister’ and thus, in the least, wanted the audience to think that this was the case. Further, the evidence pointed to by the Ngaïssona Defence in this regard is inconclusive. P-1847 testified that Mr Ngaïssona did not issue any messages himself, but that Steve Yambété did, and further indicated that he had not heard of the specific message of Steve Yambété reflected above.³⁴⁵⁹

(Translation from French to English by the Registry) ‘Young people of the Central African Republic, I, your brother, Mike Steve Yambété, chargé de mission at the Ministry of Youth, Sport, Arts and Culture, I have come here to represent my minister, who is occupied elsewhere, to tell you not to allow yourselves to be manipulated by storytellers. Right now as I speak to you, you need to be calm. Your country is not in danger. Wait for the moment when you will be told that your life is at risk, and that is when you can do what you want. However, for the time being, your life is not at risk, and that is why the Minister of Youth, Sport, Arts and Culture has tasked me to come and convey this message to you: to not be afraid. You should stay calm where you are. As soon as the need arises, you shall be called upon.’

The indication by the witness that Steve Yambété and Mr Ngaïssona ‘didn’t really have very close relationships’ and that Steve Yambété went to the presidency to relay his messages, not via a minister (see P-1847: T-023-ENG, p. 13, lines 8-17), is similarly inconclusive in relation to this specific message.

Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that Mr Ngaïssona was not present in the CAR at the time of the Seleka coup,³⁴⁶⁰ as did P-2232, who added that those mobilising or organising the young people in Bangui were Levy Yakété and Steve Yambété, among others.³⁴⁶¹

1283. In any event, the Chamber disagrees that the message delivered by Steve Yambété was merely a call for peace. While telling the ‘youth of the CAR’ to remain calm, the message continued to state that once they would be told that their lives are in danger ‘tu peux faire tout ce que tu veux’ and that ‘[d]ès que le besoin se fait sentir, on te fera appel’.³⁴⁶² In the view of the Chamber, far from being a simple appeasing call, this message implied a state of alert, and that the youth could – and would – be called on as needed.

1284. More generally, Adrien Poussou considered that ‘the rhetoric of the government was to get Christian Central Africans to understand that foreigners were coming and taking their country away from them [and] if [they] allowed the Seleka rebellion to enter Bangui, it would mean that the foreigners, the Chadians and the Sudanese, would come and take control of the country’, a rhetoric which resonated with the population given that ten years earlier, Bozizé had orchestrated a coup with the support of the Chadian army, that brutalised people in the 2013 to 2014 crisis, ‘behaving as an occupying force’.³⁴⁶³

1287. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the speeches and radio statements made in December 2012 and March 2013 by François Bozizé and others, including the broadcasts of the radio show mentioned above, merely denounced the Seleka violence, encouraged dialogue, and discouraged violence.³⁴⁶⁶

1288. In the view of the Chamber, this is an overly trivialised reading of the messages given. While it is clear that calls for peaceful demonstrations and refraining from violence such as throwing stones against individuals or people were made, all of the above also unequivocally called for ‘vigilance’ of the addressees, thereby maintaining the Central African population in a state of alert against ‘foreigners’. The references to ‘foreigners’ have to be seen in the context of the Seleka not being in fact a ‘foreign invasion’, even though it used combatants from Chad and Sudan, as well as in light of the fact that they were made in direct connection to ‘foreigners’ living in the CAR and supporting the Seleka, in contrast with ‘real’ or ‘authentic’ Central Africans.

1289. The Chamber furthermore notes as another cumulative factor its discussion of the creation and activities of FROCCA, which marshalled support against the Seleka regime with express pleas to return to ‘the constitutional order’, signifying François Bozizé’s return to power.³⁴⁶⁷ Adrien Poussou testified that within FROCCA, the prevailing rhetoric was that Christian Central Africans ‘were being robbed of [their] own country by Muslim invaders. And it just so happens that the Seleka regime was made up of [their] fellow citizens of the Muslim faith’, and that this was sort of language was also being used by Mr Ngaïssona.³⁴⁶⁸ According to this witness, FROCCA used ‘hate speech or hateful language’ in its communications with the goal of spreading incendiary information, such as the alleged planned ‘Islamisation’ of the CAR, to ‘step up the antagonism between Christians and Muslims [...] to push Christians to defend their country against the invaders, to resist by violent means’.³⁴⁶⁹

1290. In this context, the Chamber recalls its discussion of the FROCCA ‘protocol agreement’³⁴⁷⁰ and notes that this document refers to the enemies of the nation collaborating with ‘mercenaires islamistes’ to humiliate and violate the human rights of the CAR people, and to the harm inflicted by ‘envahisseurs islamistes sans foi ni loi’.³⁴⁷¹

1291. The press releases issued by FROCCA employed a similar rhetoric. The first release of 5 August 2013 stated that the Seleka’s takeover and human rights violations were ‘l’heure du triomphe des commanditaires extérieurs et leurs complices locaux [sic]’.³⁴⁷² In a release in response to the Seleka raids in Boy-Rabe in August 2013, FROCCA explained that the Seleka had a hidden agenda, which was ethnic and religious cleansing with a view to imposing Islam in the CAR.³⁴⁷³ Lin Banoukepa was reported as stating in that same interview at the time that the coup had been carried out with ‘la participation très active des mercenaires islamistes de confession musulmane [...] du Tchad et du Soudan’.³⁴⁷⁴ FROCCA further denounced the Seleka raids and criminal acts of the Seleka in general, referring to the transitional regime as anti-democratic and Islamic.³⁴⁷⁵ FROCCA continued to decry alleged plans for a forceful Islamisation of the CAR, calling on the international community ‘to see the genocide that is under way’,³⁴⁷⁶ and requesting the unconditional withdrawal of the Seleka from power and the CAR territory.³⁴⁷⁷ Lin Banoukepa was further reported as calling on the Central African people to rise up and drive out Islamists and jihadist terrorists who came with the aim of ‘Islamising’ the CAR.³⁴⁷⁸

1292. Adrien Poussou testified that members of FROCCA, including Mr Ngaïssona, subscribed to the position that Banoukepa took in the press releases, as they allowed them to be published³⁴⁷⁹ or at least did not, to his knowledge, voice any objections to the language used.³⁴⁸⁰ The witness explained that there was a mailing list, Lin Banoukepa wrote the drafts which he sent to the mailing list, of which Mr Ngaïssona was part, and the witness would automatically react with criticism – the others did not object, so he concluded that the close circle of François Bozizé agreed with the drafts of Lin Banoukepa.³⁴⁸¹ Adrien Poussou further stated that the prevailing rhetoric within the inner circle of Bozizé of Christians being robbed of the country by Muslim invaders³⁴⁸² was also used by the supporters of Bozizé in meetings held in Cameroon in 2013.³⁴⁸³

1293. Importantly in this regard, the Chamber notes that on 5 December 2013, day of the coordinated attacks in Bangui and Bossangoa, Lin Banoukepa spoke of the Anti-Balaka Central Africans liberating the CAR from the yoke of the jihadists originating from Sudan and Chad, and called upon all Central Africans to rise up that day and eject the invading and criminal foreign Islamic component, and support the liberating action of the Anti-Balaka, describing it as ‘[l]e rétablissement de l’ordre fonctionnel’:

1294. Contemporaneously, other media reported that a 'movement allied to' François Bozizé claimed responsibility for attacks around the capital, with Lin Banoukepa reported as stating that fighters were attempting to oust the rebels who toppled François Bozizé from power and that the Anti-Balaka wanted to free the country of jihadists from Chad and Sudan.³⁴⁸⁵

1295. Adrien Poussou recognised the voice of Lin Banoukepa in the radio broadcast and stated that he understood the announcement as FROCCA claiming responsibility for the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013.³⁴⁸⁶ D30-4720 stated that there were no fighters within FROCCA itself, and that the broadcast called upon the people to rise up, and that FROCCA would stand behind them.³⁴⁸⁷

1296. In the view of the Chamber, this statement of Lin Banoukepa on behalf of FROCCA is a good illustration of how matters unfolded at the time: the Anti-Balaka groups fought on the ground, with political ambitions and frameworks, such as FROCCA, making use of these actions to further their motives.

1297. Overall, the evidence before the Chamber shows that the Anti-Balaka groups which engaged in hostilities against the Seleka in earnest from September 2013 onwards equated the Seleka with the Muslim civilian population in general, perceiving Muslim civilians, due to their religious or ethnic affiliation, as collectively responsible for the crimes committed by the Seleka, or as complicit with, or supportive of, the Seleka.

1298. The evidence before the Chamber also shows that this was widely known, including to the Anti-Balaka leadership and Mr Ngaïssona therein. The Chamber thus considered as a last cumulative factor that each stage of the evolution of the Anti-Balaka objectives and policies was public knowledge, and that it was instrumentalised by François Bozizé, Mr Ngaïssona and others to further their political or personal agenda.

1299. As outlined below, the Chamber is of the view that Mr Ngaïssona was aware of the context and how it developed already through the meetings he participated in while in Cameroon, and at the latest in discussions concerning FROCCA. Further, Mr Ngaïssona was informed of the attacks taking place as from September 2013. Similarly, Mr Yekatom, given his own history with the Seleka and flight to Zongo, knew about the context and how members of his group, irrespective whether they were trained FACA members or not, did not distinguish between Muslim civilians and the Seleka. Yet, Mr Yekatom as leader of his group did not demand or emphasise the need for such distinction when instructing his elements in preparation of the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, in Yamwara, or when his group advanced along the PK9-Mbaïki axis.

1300. Importantly, in a very public visit to Mbaïki on 12 February 2014, following the dislocation of Muslims therefrom,³⁴⁸⁸ Catherine Samba-Panza, then-transition president of the CAR, denounced the violence and killings committed by the Anti-Balaka, warning the group it would pay should it continue.³⁴⁸⁹ This had been prefaced by a statement of the commander of the Sangaris, Francisco Soriano, who declared that the Anti-Balaka were ‘enemies of peace’.³⁴⁹⁰ This was followed by the Anti-Balaka coordination, under lead of Mr Ngaïssona, complaining about the characterisation of the group in what it called ‘incendiary declarations’, while at the same time acceding that inquiries needed to be made within the movement to find those responsible for possible violence.³⁴⁹¹

1301. It is clear from the evidence before the Chamber that Mr Ngaïssona was fully aware of the anti-foreign discourse employed by François Bozizé and the individuals supporting him at the time, and engaged therein himself as outlined above, knowing that the reference to ‘foreigners’ would be understood to also encompass CAR nationals, specifically Muslim civilians.

1302. Specifically, Mr Ngaïssona participated in meetings in Cameroon in which the anti-foreign and indeed anti-Muslim discourse was repeated,³⁴⁹² and was aware of the rhetoric employed by FROCCA.³⁴⁹³

1303. Moreover, this rhetoric did not stop there. Indeed, in a document dated 11 February 2014 issued under Mr Ngaïssona’s name, the background to the conflict is recalled by stating that ‘la population, victime des exactions des S[eleka] à travers la Centrafrique depuis le 10 décembre 2012, a regagné les rangs des Antibalaka avec un esprit de vengeance [sic] envers les ex-Séléka est [sic] les sujets musulmans qui ont soutenu les Séléka durant leur occupation de la RCA’.³⁴⁹⁴ Similarly, a press statement of the same day appears to criticise that ‘Muslims’, in general, were speaking up against the Anti-Balaka, who are described as ‘dignes fils du pays’ which engaged in an ‘œuvre salvatrice’.³⁴⁹⁵ In an interview later in February 2014, Mr Ngaïssona stated: ‘We cannot accept the attacks by the Muslims’.³⁴⁹⁶ Even later in 2014, Mr Ngaïssona continued using rhetoric similar to that used by François Bozizé in mid-March 2013, when stating: ‘Un étranger qui vient dans notre pays, pour faire de l’occupation, prendre des armes et tuer les enfants du pays, nous ne pouvons pas accepter

cela et voir les enfants du pays souffrir’ (emphasis added).³⁴⁹⁷ In another interview at a time of general peace efforts, in which he stated that he was against violence,³⁴⁹⁸ Mr Ngaïssona also reiterated, against his better knowledge, that at least 90% of the Seleka were foreigners from Chad and Sudan,³⁴⁹⁹ and that the Seleka’s goal was to transform the CAR into an Islamic state: ‘Mais nous, on ne peut pas accepter alors que nos frères sont seulement peut-être à 8% de la population qui peuvent prendre toute une 92% de la population en otage’.³⁵⁰⁰

1304. The Chamber is of the view, on the basis of the evidence as outlined above, as well as below in relation to the hostilities Anti-Balaka groups engaged in as of September 2013,³⁵⁰¹ that the lack of distinction between Seleka members and Muslim civilians was so widespread by this time that Mr Ngaïssona was aware of it. And indeed, Mr Ngaïssona used rhetoric reflecting this lack of distinction himself, and well into 2014, while he continued to support and worked with the Anti-Balaka, becoming its general coordinator, with this knowledge, and at a time when further Anti-Balaka attacks against Muslim civilians in the west of the CAR took place.³⁵⁰²

1305. This lack of distinction was equally present within Mr Yekatom’s group. Indeed, as outlined below, Mr Yekatom must have been aware of the statements against Muslims, in general, made by elements and leaders of his group under his command, and, when giving instructions to his group, himself did not draw an appropriate distinction between targeting Seleka members or individuals belonging to the Muslim civilian population.³⁵⁰³ In fact, the evidence before the Chamber indicates that Mr Yekatom himself expressly instructed the elements under his command to attack Muslim civilians, in the context of events relating to crimes as charged in this case.³⁵⁰⁴ Mr Yekatom not only issued such instructions to elements under his command, but also personally participated in related attacks which targeted not only Seleka members, but also Muslim civilians. Further, leaders in Mr Yekatom's group under his command echoed his instructions to the elements of the group, while elements of the group participated in the targeting of Muslim civilians.³⁵⁰⁵ Mr Yekatom must have known that, as a consequence of his specific instructions resulting in the targeting and killing of Muslim civilians, the latter would flee the attacked areas.³⁵⁰⁶

The Anti-Balaka groups, which had formed in the provinces and in part gathered together at Gobre, started their advance towards Bangui, with the ultimate objective to attack the capital in order to remove Michel Djotodia from power and oust the Seleka from the CAR. In this advance, various Anti-Balaka groups started engaging in attacks against the Seleka from September 2013 onwards. Such attacks were not limited to Seleka forces, but included attacking localities with Muslim civilians.

These groups going into different localities communicated with each other and individuals abroad, including Maxime Mokom, with a view to coordinating such attacks.

Attacks were launched around Bossangoa and in Bouca (Ouham prefecture), in Ndjo, Bossembélé, Boali and Gaga (Ombella-M'Poko prefecture), as well as in Bouar (Nana-Mambéré prefecture). As part of these attacks, Anti-Balaka elements attacked Bossangoa on 17 September 2013.

Throughout the advance and during these attacks, Anti-Balaka groups targeted Muslim civilians. This information was widely known across the CAR and abroad, including in Cameroon.

The advance of the Anti-Balaka groups and hostilities on the way culminated in coordinated attacks in Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.

From his involvement in coordinating his own group's advance through the provinces towards Bangui for purposes of the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, Mr Yekatom knew of the advance of the Anti-Balaka groups through the provinces towards Bangui, including the hostilities, as well as killings and dislocation of Muslim civilians, taking place in this context.

Mr Ngaïssona knew and was informed of the advance of the groups towards Bangui as well as of the hostilities during this advance, including the killings and dislocation of Muslim civilians from the locations mentioned above.

i. Distribution of groups, strategy and start of the advance

1306. As further outlined below, various Anti-Balaka elements who had joined the groups in Govere and the wider Bossangoa area explained how these groups were assigned to attack different locations in the context of their advance towards Bossangoa and Bangui. As is apparent from the objectives of the groups that were advancing through the provinces towards Bangui, hostilities within the wider CAR regions were not the ultimate aim: indeed, as discussed in further detail below, the hostilities in the CAR provinces eventually culminated in the coordinated attacks on Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.³⁵⁰⁷ The Chamber notes that around the same time as the advance of the Anti-Balaka groups towards Bangui started in earnest, the Seleka coalition was dissolved by Michel Djotodia.³⁵⁰⁸

1307. For example, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana explained that before they set out to attack villages, they were given instructions of which villages and when to attack, and they had an overall time plan to keep to;³⁵⁰⁹ they could not attack in just any way, but attacked villages or localities with checkpoints or Seleka bases, never villages with only civilians, since the attacks were targeted to ‘get rid’ of the Seleka and ‘chase them’ (‘déloger’) from their posts.³⁵¹⁰

1308. As regards who was giving instructions to the groups, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that they came from those who were commanding, for example Dedane, Ndangba, Romain; and if there were calls and they asked to fight the Seleka bases, they would go.³⁵¹¹

1309. As regards who came up with the strategy, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that it was ‘Danboy and other soldiers’ who came together to prepare the strategy of conquering small localities before heading towards Bossangoa and ultimately finishing in Bangui, to free both.³⁵¹² Those present when coming up with this strategy were Dedane, Kema, Romain, Feikouma, Houronti, Mandago Alexis, Ndangba, ‘Rambo’, ‘Bad Boy’, and Kpa Thibaut; they also talked to the ‘modibo’ who was there.³⁵¹³

1310. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that Dedane, who was in charge of communications, left the group to make calls and came back with instructions; they were told that those calls were to people on the other side of the river, in particular Maxime Mokom; and the soldiers gathered their elements per group and disseminated the orders.³⁵¹⁴

1311. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that their objective was to ‘take Bossangoa and then to march towards the capital to recapture it’ and not ‘to go to other areas or locations’.³⁵¹⁵ P-0666 noted that there were other groups that went to Gobere afterwards to look for fetishes and they were asked to capture other locations.³⁵¹⁶

1312. According to Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, their strategy was to ‘target little villages’ occupied by the Seleka around Bossangoa to defeat smaller Seleka groups and seize their weapons, to become strong enough to attack Bossangoa where the Seleka were numerous.³⁵¹⁷ They did not have weapons, just stones, wooden sticks, makeshift firearms, 12 calibre bullets and fetishes; seizing weapons from the Seleka when they could, though their automatic weapons were too complicated to operate.³⁵¹⁸

reinforcements, while ‘in the middle’, Bossangoa, they would not have the chance.³⁵¹⁹ P-2602 said that they split into groups when ‘pushing’; there were groups pushing them ‘towards Bouca’, ‘towards [...] Batangafo’ ‘towards Zere’; they were to push them ‘towards Bossangoa’ so that the Seleka would all be gathered there; and at Bossangoa, former forces would intervene and separate them from the civilians, whereas, in the small villages, the local population would be exposed with nobody to help.³⁵²⁰

1314. P-2269 also stated that when he left Gobere to go to Bangui, they fought the Seleka on their way.³⁵²¹ P-2269’s group went from Gobere taking the road from Bogangolo, where they engaged with the Seleka and then took the location,³⁵²² to Damara and then Bangui; all the groups took different routes as it was part of their strategy; the aim was to arrive in Bangui for the attack on 5 December 2013.³⁵²³ In Gobere, they had divided themselves into 14 groups, each with their own chief, and they took different routes to go to Bangui; some groups went to other towns to attack areas controlled by the Seleka, like Bouca and Bossangoa, and not every group went to Bangui; some people stayed behind at the Gobere base and in Bossangoa; the deputies would remain behind.³⁵²⁴

1315. Providing more details on how the advance unfolded, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana explained that one company led by Andjilo was the first to leave Gobere and sent to attack Bouca, another company was sent to Ouham-Bac, another between Gbade and Dadacouta 1 and 2, yet another to Lere.³⁵²⁵ Andjilo was selected for Bouca because it was his locality and he knew the area, had men with whom he came from Bouca – selection was done according to the origin of each chief because they knew their regions.³⁵²⁶ Two or three companies could be sent to the same town, and Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana's company, the last to leave, was sent to Benzambé with the group of 'John Rombhot'.³⁵²⁷

1316. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that, when they arrived near a village, they would send someone in the night to do 'reconnaissance' to determine how many 'Seleka' were present, confirm if people had fled to the bush and whether there were women or not.³⁵²⁸ The witness further stated that they searched houses and mosques for weapons to determine if a house was a Seleka house, they had to enter and look for weapons.³⁵²⁹ According to Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, it was easy to identify Seleka houses as they usually lived together in a group fenced off from the rest.³⁵³⁰

1317. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana considered that if a Muslim man was found in a house and had not fled, he was 'a Seleka'; they did not think all Muslims were Seleka, the religion was not linked to Seleka.³⁵³¹ When asked about what would happen if a Muslim person was found in a house, the witness said that there were no Muslims in the small villages, and if they found them, they would 'put them together' and send someone to 'come and get them'; he recalled that some were taken to the border with Chad, others sent to Bangui, and they also set up camp for displaced people and put Muslims there, for example in Yaloké.³⁵³² According to Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, those who did not fight had to be put together in a 'safe place'.³⁵³³

1318. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana reiterated that their only goal was to protect their country because 'foreigners' had come to 'destroy' it, it was also their duty to defend the people of the CAR and that is 'why' they brought the Muslims together 'to protect them and help them get out of there'.³⁵³⁴

The witness clarified that this was a person different to Mr Yekatom, his full name was Nambo Zuina and P-0966 carried out manoeuvres with him and advanced in the area around Bossangoa (see P-0966: T-117, p. 37, line 22 – p. 38, line 15; T-118, p. 55, line 23 – p. 56, line 6). 1319. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that to avoid being shot by a Seleka hiding in a house, one had to ‘destroy all houses’.³⁵³⁵ He recalled that they found weapons hidden in mosques, in the floor boards under praying carpets (tapis), and they destroyed those mosques.³⁵³⁶ According to the witness, they did not touch State schools, women and children, they only chased away men and destroyed ‘Seleka houses’;³⁵³⁷ they could not destroy ‘everything’ because they wanted the population to be able to return and continue with their lives and also wanted to be able to stay and cohabite with villagers without any problems.³⁵³⁸ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana recalled that each chief had ‘his own personal strategy of attack and of combat’.³⁵³⁹ When they ‘freed’ a village, they would take control of it for as long as a week, otherwise the Seleka would come back; and they would encourage the civilians to return.³⁵⁴⁰

1320. The Chamber is of the view that the evidence of Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana as outlined above has to be seen against the background of the overarching policy exhibited by Anti-Balaka groups at the time.³⁵⁴¹ This is indeed underscored by how the witness framed the description of their activities himself: while averring that not all Muslims were considered Seleka, the witness also stated that those who did not fight had to be put together in a ‘safe place’, without specifying for which reason he considered this necessary if such individuals were civilians. Similarly in this context, in his view Muslims needed to be ‘help[ed] to get out of there’. In addition, while stating that they could not destroy ‘everything’ because they wanted the population to return, he also stated that to avoid being shot by a Seleka, all ‘Seleka’ houses were destroyed, with such houses for search for weapons being identified on the basis of the assumption that ‘Seleka’ usually lived in a group fenced off from the rest. The Chamber is of the view that the activities of Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana’s group, even as described by the witness himself, were clearly not informed by a genuine distinction between actual adversaries, i.e. members of the Seleka or individuals engaged in hostilities in case there were any, but rather focused on what, in the group’s perception, a ‘Seleka’ would be.

1321. Similarly to Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, P-0975, who was himself leading a group of about 20 to 30 elements and reporting ultimately to Andjilo,³⁵⁴² described that the Anti-Balaka marched through the Ouham and Ombella-M'Poko prefectures with the objective to 'prevent the Seleka from killing civilians and to drive the Seleka out'.³⁵⁴³ P-0975 recalled the villages they 'freed from the Seleka' were Zere, Ndjo, Bobala, Boban, Boganli, Bogoin and others; other battalions went to other locations and some villages did not have any Seleka in them.³⁵⁴⁴ As regards the route, P-0975 recalled that they moved from Ndjo to Bogangolo to Gbozo to Damara and finally to Bangui; P-0975's section with the battalions under 'ComZone Andjilo' freed the villages together.³⁵⁴⁵

1322. P-0975 explained that they would first find out from local informants where in a village Seleka were located, then fought them with 'saguets' and machetes, leading to some Seleka and civilians being killed, and many fleeing.³⁵⁴⁶ According to P-0975, they did not go into homes or mosques or schools³⁵⁴⁷ and did not take any Seleka captives as they were their 'enemies' and had 'killed our families'.³⁵⁴⁸

1323. P-0975 said that after freeing a village from the Seleka, the Anti-Balaka asked local youngsters to protect and 'take control' of the village who usually had hunting rifles and ammunition; some villages chiefs would still lead the villages and the youngsters had to follow them; while in other villages, where the chiefs refused to support the Anti-Balaka so they worked with the youngsters instead.³⁵⁴⁹

1324. In a video, an individual identified as ‘Modibo’,³⁵⁵⁰ and who was present in Gobere,³⁵⁵¹ talks about his joining the Anti-Balaka in the bush, and walking from Bossangoa through the bush towards Bangui.³⁵⁵²

1325. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli, who was in Bangui during this time, had general information on the advance of the Anti-Balaka groups, stating that there were attacks in Bossangoa, Zere, Benzambe, and that certain ComZones played a crucial and strategic role in the fight for resistance, such as Florent Kema in Bossangoa, Ndangba, Alexis Mandago and Kossi in the Bossangoa region – further stating that all these ComZones had good relations and kept each other informed.³⁵⁵³ The witness also knew about there being attacks in Bouca, Ndjo, Bossembélé, Bogangolo and Damara.³⁵⁵⁴

1326. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli further explained that gradually the Anti-Balaka started organising themselves to come to Bangui walking up to 300 kilometres through the bush, some from across the river from Zongo.³⁵⁵⁵ The rest of the Anti-Balaka, including the witness, who had remained in Boy-Rabe, like Emmanuel Rekhbohanam, Antoine Kenga, and many others, were in contact with the people coming from Bozoum and the provinces.³⁵⁵⁶ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that the people from the provinces arrived first and information was given to the people from across the river Oubangui to join; he recalled that the leaders of the youth from the provinces were two brothers with last name ‘Ndangba’ from Bossangoa, the younger of the two a soldier; there was Yvon Konaté, a FACA who was close to François Bozizé and had gone to Bossangoa; there were also people from Ombella-M’Poko going towards Lobaye who were from the ‘forest area’.³⁵⁵⁷ The witness stated that ‘Rambo’ led the

ii. Bossangoa and surroundings, including Bouca (Ouham prefecture)

1327. The Prosecution submits that by September 2013, the Anti-Balaka had become an organised armed group engaged in a sustained and intense armed conflict against the Seleka in western CAR.³⁵⁶² It submits that between '6-9 September 2013', the Anti-Balaka attacked several villages in the Bossangoa area, including Bossangoa, Zere, Bowaye, Benzambé, and Bouca, targeting not only the Seleka but equally Muslim civilians whom they associated with the Seleka.³⁵⁶³ The Prosecution argues that Anti-Balaka ComZones like Thierry Lebene, Florent Kema, Ndangba, and Andjilo were among those that participated in the attacks, led by Dedane, who was Maxime Mokom's deputy.³⁵⁶⁴

1328. The evidence as discussed further below shows that in early September 2013, Anti-Balaka groups launched several coordinated attacks in the surroundings of Bossangoa, followed by an attack against Bossangoa itself on 17 September 2013.

1329. As regards Mr Ngaïssona's involvement, the Prosecution argues that he was in communication with the 'Gobere chiefs', including Dedane and was aware of Maxime

Mokom's coordinating role, directly and through Bernard Mokom.³⁵⁶⁵ It submits that Mr Ngaïssona provided funds, weapons and other supplies to the 'Gobere group'.³⁵⁶⁶

1330. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that Mr Ngaïssona had no role in funding the 'Gobere group' and that the evidence concerning Mr Ngaïssona's provision of weapons and other supplies to this group is not convincing.³⁵⁶⁷

1331. In what follows, the Chamber has first assessed the Anti-Balaka organisation, strategy and movement, including the attacks in localities around Bossangoa and Bouca in September 2013, before turning to Mr Ngaïssona's involvement with respect to these groups during this time.

a. Attacks in localities around Bossangoa and in Bouca in early September 2013

1332. In line with the strategy of attacking smaller locations in the Bossangoa area and Ouham prefecture more generally, as outlined above, the evidence further outlined below shows that in early September 2013, Anti-Balaka groups launched several coordinated attacks in the surroundings of Bossangoa, followed by an attack against Bossangoa itself on 17 September 2013.

1333. As set out below, witnesses specifically talked of attacks taking place simultaneously in several villages in the Bossangoa area, including in Bowaye,³⁵⁶⁸ Zere, Benzambé, Ouham-Bac and Koro-M'Poko.

1334. P-2453 mentioned simultaneous attacks on Bowaye, Zere, Benzambe, and Ouham-Bac on 6 September 2013, the first of which he was a victim to, the other two of which he heard about.³⁵⁶⁹ P-2453 also heard later at the 'École Liberté' in Bossangoa from people from Bowaye, Benzambé and Koro-M'Poko that attacks had occurred on the same day.³⁵⁷⁰

Similarly, P-2049 testified to attacks on Bowaye, Zere and Benzambé on 6 September 2013.³⁵⁷¹ P-2462 also heard from people at the École de la Liberté at Bossangoa who were from villages such as Zere, Benzambé, Ouham-Bac and Koro-M'Poko that they had fled from the Anti-Balaka in September 2013.³⁵⁷² P-2453 heard that mainly Muslim civilians were killed in Bowaye, Zere and Benzambé,³⁵⁷³ and that after the attacks, Muslims did not stay in Zere and the Anti-Balaka controlled the town and location.³⁵⁷⁴ P-2200 heard that between August and October 2013, the Anti-Balaka attacked several villages in the Bossangoa area at the same time, on a Friday, killing numerous Muslims in each village, including Benzambé,³⁵⁷⁵ Boue, Zere, 'Karamboko', Sajo, '15Km' and 'Ouham-Bac 45Km'.³⁵⁷⁶

1335. P-2658 did not know of any other attacks by the Anti-Balaka in the Bossangoa area; he only received information relating to Bouca, Bowai and Bossangoa.³⁵⁷⁷ P-2658 thought the attacks in Bouca, Benzambé and Bowai were not conducted simultaneously, he heard about the attack in Bouca because Dedane showed how happy he was about it over the telephone, but he did not know about the dates of the other attacks.³⁵⁷⁸

1336. Turning to the attacks, the Chamber notes that P-2602, one of the Anti-Balaka group chiefs who was also in Gobere, stated that after they had trained the civilians in Gobere, divided into groups and agreed on groups attacking different locations, they attacked at the same time at 05:00, with P-2602 going to Benzambé centre, other groups going to Zere, Bowaye, Koro-M'Poko, Ouham-Bac, Bouca and Bossangoa.³⁵⁷⁹

1337. As regards their objective, P-2602 stated that they were to chase away the ‘mercenaries’; ‘[i]f they kill a member of your family and you get angry, you join us’.³⁵⁸⁰ They knew the ‘mercenaries’ were in Kabo, Batangafo, Kambakota and others.³⁵⁸¹

1339. P-2658 testified that when Dedane returned from Bossangoa, around four months after the Seleka arrived there, he divided the Anti-Balaka into three groups; one group composed of Dedane would lead the attack on Bossangoa and asked ‘12 Puissances’ and Dangba was to remain with him;³⁵⁸² another group led by Andjilo was to go to Bouca and attack;³⁵⁸³ and a third group led by Chagata, a civilian, was designated to attack Bowai.³⁵⁸⁴ P-2658 recalled that Dedane insisted that the attack should start at the same time.³⁵⁸⁵ The latter two groups went to their destinations two days after this meeting led by Dedane,³⁵⁸⁶ and Dedane’s group did not attack any other locality before that, they had stayed in Gobere.³⁵⁸⁷

1340. P-2602 stated that the Zere attack was led by Mokpem who was together with ‘KPA’; the attack on Bouca was led by Andjilo; P-2602 led the Benzambé attack with Maurice called ‘MBA’; Bowaye was led by Dieudonne Horounti, Kema and Fekouma; Ouham-Bac was led by Mandago Alexis.³⁵⁸⁸ He further stated that only those who attacked Bouca withdrew and took over the town the next day, because at that time the leader of the group was not a military; the other groups were successful on the same day; they had the same tactics because the various military in the groups received the same training and had the capacity to take over the towns.³⁵⁸⁹

1341. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana recalled that the selection of the chiefs of these groups was done according to the origin of each chief because they knew their regions.³⁵⁹⁰

1342. A statement seemingly issued by the CAR government on 11 September 2013 mentions that Beboura, Bohong and Ngaoundaye in the Ouham-Pendé prefecture and Bossangoa, Bouca, Benzambe, Lere and ‘Bowaie’ in the Ouham prefecture were theatre of violent clashes between Seleka elements and ‘gangs’ presented either as ‘archers’, as Anti-Balaka organised in self-defence groups, or as supporters of François Bozizé, leading to the death of Muslim families, houses and granaries burnt, and civilian population fleeing to the bush.³⁵⁹¹ The CAR Panel concluded in its 2014 interim report that a group of Anti-Balaka carried out the military offensive on the front line in the area of Benzambé, in particular in Bouca, alongside a group commanded by Andjilo Ngaïbona alias ‘Angelo’, and in Dékoa, with reinforcements from Bozoum and Bossembélé, clashing on a regular basis with the forces of Alkhatim Mahamat, appointed in Ndélé as deputy chief of staff of the ‘new’ Seleka.³⁵⁹²

The Chamber also notes in this regard the testimony of P-1577, who travelled to Benzambé, Ouham-Bac and Zere on 3 and 4 November 2013, with members of the Anti-Balaka he encountered on these trips claiming to him that the people living in Ouham-Bac and Zere had helped the Seleka identify non-Muslim neighbourhoods and villages (see P-1577 First Statement, CAR-OTP-2081-0769-R01, at 0773, para. 18, at 0775, para. 27, at 0778, para. 36). The witness took pictures in Zere which show burnt and seemingly abandoned structures, including the burnt remains of a Catholic church following a series of attacks over several months, and of a damaged structure identified to P-1577 as the mosque of Zere (see Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0741; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0742; CAR-OTP-2085-2433; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0751; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0752; CAR-OTP-2085-2436; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0761; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0762; CAR-OTP-2085-2439; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0771; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0772; CAR-OTP-2085-2442; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0781; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0782; CAR-OTP-2085-2445; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0791; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0792; CAR-OTP-2085-2448; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0801; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0802; CAR-OTP-2085-2453; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0811; Metadata, CAR-OTP-2085-0812; CAR-OTP-2085-2458; Photograph, CAR-OTP-2085-0821; Metadata, CAR-OTP-1343. In the following, the Chamber outlines the attacks on various locations in the wider Bossangoa area, and related movements of different Anti-Balaka groups that were coordinating their activities.

i. Bowaye

1345. P-2453 stated that the vehicle he was in was fired at when crossing a large group of people with weapons and a man with a traditional rifle and gris-gris tried to stop the vehicle, which then broke down some kilometres after.³⁵⁹³ Hiding behind a tree, P-2453 saw the group, which he later learned were the Anti-Balaka, some in civilian clothes and others in a mixture of military and civilian clothes, taking all goods from the vehicle, after which they went back in the direction of Bowaye.³⁵⁹⁴ P-2453 and a female passenger on the vehicle, Fane Ahmat, who was wearing a Muslim attire, were eventually found by a group of seven Anti-Balaka, armed with traditional rifles and machetes, also called ‘balaka’, and asked if P-2453 was a

The Chamber considers this not to be impaired by the otherwise unsupported claim of D30-4608, who thought it an ‘impossibility’ that weekly markets would have taken place north of Bossangoa in autumn of 2013 (see D30-4608: T-291, p. 48, line 24 – p. 49, line 3).

Muslim; these Anti-Balaka checked P-2453's feet and ankles for prayer marks, following which the woman was taken to the bush; the Anti-Balaka undressed P-2453 to his underwear and tied his hands; and during a discussion among the Anti-Balaka, one of them said that 'Caporal Florent K[ema]', their 'chief', had said that 'all Muslims had to be killed'.³⁵⁹⁵

1346. When P-2453 could not answer questions about the Seleka, he was beaten and fell unconscious; after some days, he was found by people in Muslim gowns who said that after the incident in Bowaye had been reported to the Seleka in Nana-Bakassa, the Seleka had sent to look for people who had fled, taking P-2453 with them.³⁵⁹⁶ P-2453 heard that the other vehicle travelling with them was attacked in Bowaye and that the Seleka found the bodies of all male Muslims passengers, and he later confirmed with the families in Bossangoa that Bagana Adj, Ibrahim Aboubakar, Amine Annour, Malam Hory, Ahmat Alkali, Mahamat Abdelkarim aka '222', Bilama, Oumar Charoui and Bourou Hassane – all Muslim civilians, not involved with the Seleka and not armed that day – were killed.³⁵⁹⁷ P-2453 stated that local Muslims in Bowaye fled when they heard of the attack on these vehicles; P-2453 later heard from another woman that the Anti-Balaka forced Fane Ahmat into sexual intercourse.³⁵⁹⁸

1347. In turn, P-2658 was in the Anti-Balaka group that was to attack Bowai (Bowaye), which also included Richard, Dolpig and Chagata.³⁵⁹⁹ P-2658 said that Bowai is not far from Bossangoa and Dedane said to his elements that after attacking there, the elements should continue to Bossangoa.³⁶⁰⁰ P-2658 saw two trucks that had been attacked in Bowai and in Kaboro, just before Bowai,³⁶⁰¹ and some of the village inhabitants told Dedane that five people were killed in the first truck and that some Muslims and Seleka elements buried the bodies at the site of the attack.³⁶⁰² The same villagers from Kaboro told them that another truck was attacked by the Anti-Balaka which then retreated after they encountered the Seleka of Bowai, and that the driver, Rachid Mouzambil, and the owner of the truck, were captured by the Anti-Balaka but the passengers fled; they also said that later the Seleka took the truck to Nana-Bakassa.³⁶⁰³ P-2658's group took goods and some engine oil, diesel fuel from the truck which Dedane said they would use to clean their guns.³⁶⁰⁴ They heard that the Anti-Balaka that went to Bowai continued to Ndorombouli, hence Dedane, P-2658 and Dedane's aides-de-camp returned to about 17 kilometres from Bossangoa where Dedane had positioned his elements.³⁶⁰⁵

1348. P-2049 heard from two women who were passengers that in the second of two vehicles that left Bossangoa for Bowaye for the weekly market, some were killed.³⁶⁰⁶ According to P-2049, Kema Florent known as 'Kema Kema' was in Bowaye, supervising the attacks on the ground.³⁶⁰⁷

1349. In light of the above, the Chamber finds that Bowaye was attacked on 6 September 2013 by an Anti-Balaka group on Dedane's instructions.

ii. Zere

1350. Moving further to Zere, the Chamber heard from P-2658, P-2049, D30-4608, and P-0475, as set out below, who spoke about an attack taking place there shortly after the attack on Bowaye in September 2013. As regards their respective sources of information, the Chamber notes that P-2658 was with Dedane in the Anti-Balaka group that participated in the events at Zere; whereas P-2049 was noting down information being reported to him at the time, including by people who had displaced from Zere to Bossangoa.

1351.P-2658 described how at some point after the events in Bowaye, the Anti-Balaka clashed with the Seleka somewhere in the bush near Bossangoa, leading to some Seleka and Anti-Balaka members being killed.³⁶⁰⁸

1352.P-2049 had information on the following persons being killed in Zere: Abdoulaye Abakar, Koursi Mamat, Djouli Djibrila with wife Mariam Babari and six children, Malam Djouli, Bouba Bouson ‘and children’, Issa Amadou, Bouba Gaye ‘and children’, Halidou Bouba and Mana Bouba, Amat Ali, Amat Bore, Youssoufa Bouba, Saleh Bouba, Adamou and Zenabou.³⁶⁰⁹ P-2049 heard from the wife of Bouba Gaye that people leading the attack included Djibert Cauchon, and he also heard of Andjilo, Claude Zamolengue, Simon, Eva, Enock alias Langa, Eric, Damsio, Simon, Bodayo.³⁶¹⁰ P-2049 did not see all the 90 people that were said to have been killed, but this concerned civilians; while the clashes were between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka, those casualties that he heard about did not concern the Anti-Balaka and Seleka combatants.³⁶¹¹ As regards the source of his information, the Chamber notes that, for the various events, P-2049 testified that the information reported by

³⁶⁰⁹ P-2049: T-100, p. 35, line 23 – p. 36, line 4, p. 37, line 17, p. 39, line 9 – p. 40, line 12. The Chamber does not consider this information to be diminished by Screening note, CAR-OTP-2078-0132-R01, at 0134, or Compilation, CAR-OTP-2088-1673-R01, at 1704, which suggest that there were less than 10 victims during this attack (see P-2049: T-102, p. 33, line 2 – p. 36, line 6). The first provides information of an individual that also does not seem to have been in Zere at the time of the attack, without providing a source for the information, while the second is a compilation of anonymous ‘statements’, with the specific ‘statement’ in question not providing any source for the information and in fact being unclear on whether it even relates to the same event. P-2049, due to his position at the time and contacts with the imam, as well as talking to individuals at the École de la Liberté, had more immediate, even if still indirect, information on the victims of the attack. Similarly, the Chamber does not consider the information impacted by the suggestion that a video, which is not available to the Chamber and that according to P-2049 shows the burning of Djouli Djibrila, would have been taken in March 2011 (see T-102, p. 40, lines 6-17; Ngaïssona Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2736-AnxA-Corr-Red, para. 318, n. 1113 referring to Metadata, CAR-D30-0008-0087). Indeed, P-2049 made clear that he did not record the video but received it from someone else, that he knows Djouli, visible on that video and burned on the street during the events in Zere, and that at the time of his testimony, he was in the same camp as Djouli’s brothers and other members of his family (see P-2049: T-102, p. 38, line 8 – p. 42, line 7). The Chamber similarly cannot conclude whether the event described in Report, CAR-OTP-2110-0915, at 0920, para. 31 is the same as that depicted on video, as the identity of the victim supposedly shown on the video described is redacted and identified by persons as imam or village head. In relation to the latter report, the Chamber further notes that the Defence argued lack of relevance and probative value in a different context (see Annex 1 to Defence Response to the Prosecution’s “Request for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table regarding the Prevalence of Sexual and Gender Based Violence”, ICC-01/14-01/18-1278-Conf-Anx1, pp. 74-75; Annex A to Yekatom Defence Response to the Prosecution’s “Request for the Submission of Evidence from the Bar Table regarding the Prevalence of Sexual and Gender Based Violence”, 4 January 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1233, ICC-01/14-01/18-1279-Conf-AnxA, pp. 20-21). As the Chamber has only examined this report in the context of specific witness testimony, and not relied on it in the context of its evidentiary analysis, the Chamber does not consider necessary to address these arguments further.

individuals that came to see the imam was noted down.³⁶¹² Based on what the ‘displaced’ people from Zere who went to Bossangoa said, the Seleka had set up their base at the Zere school, and the Anti-Balaka had chased them out and captured Zere.³⁶¹³

1353. In light of this evidence, including from witnesses within the Anti-Balaka participating in the advance and in attacks, the Chamber considers irrelevant that there may also have been retaliatory actions by Seleka forces.³⁶¹⁴ Similarly, the above evidence is not negated by D30-4608’s testimony that he would not have heard of Muslim victims in Zere.³⁶¹⁵ The Chamber notes in this regard in particular that P-0475 seems to have mentioned the same visit to Zere as D30-4608,³⁶¹⁶ with P-0475 describing it as an attempt to persuade the young people to put down their weapons, during which he saw people who were adamant and determined about going to Bangui, taking over governmental power and wanting to overthrow the Seleka.³⁶¹⁷ According to P-0475, there was tension because of him being Muslim.³⁶¹⁸

iii. Bouca

1355. Turning to the attack on Bouca, the Chamber heard from Jo-Brice Ouabi Dana, P-2658, P-2041, P-2251 and P-0306, as set out below, who spoke about an attack taking place there in early September 2013. As regards their respective sources of information, the Chamber notes that Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana was in Gobere when Andjilo's group was sent to attack Bouca; P-0306 and P-2251 were in the Anti-Balaka group that attacked Bouca. It further notes that P-2658, as stated above, was in Dedane's group at the time observing Dedane and Andjilo communicating regularly about their respective locations and needs for materiel. P-2041 received information on the Muslim victims of the attack from his relatives.

1356. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that a company led by Andjilo was the first to leave Gobere and sent to attack Bouca.³⁶¹⁹ Andjilo was selected for Bouca because it was his locality and he knew the area, had men with whom he came from Bouca.³⁶²⁰

1357. P-2658 recalled that the attack on Bouca took place at a different time than the attack on Bowai (Bowaye).³⁶²¹ P-2658 said that he and Dedane were there when people attacked Bowai, and did not find the Anti-Balaka group that had attacked Bowai; it was two or three days after they returned that Andjilo called Dedane to say that they had attacked Bouca.³⁶²² P-2658 recalled that Dedane had called Andjilo, telling him to hurry up and attack Bouca; Dedane and Andjilo communicated regularly, and Andjilo said he was waiting for reinforcements and ammunition before attacking Bouca.³⁶²³

1358. P-0306 testified that while in Bouca, he was not in contact with Mr Ngaïssona, at the time he did not know what a telephone was.³⁶²⁴ P-0306 stated that when he left Bouca to go to Bangui, and then returned to Bouca, he did not see the Seleka attack.³⁶²⁵

1359. The Chamber notes that also P-2251 provided details on how the Bouca attack unfolded, stating that after retreating from Bossangoa, everyone went to attack Bouca, and they were instructed to do the same thing there, to ‘shout loudly to drive the Seleka out’.³⁶²⁶ P-2251 stated that they retreated when the Seleka shot at them, were joined by many others, and attacked Bouca a second time one day later, this time successfully going into the town centre.³⁶²⁷ In Bouca, P-2251’s chief had also been part of the attack on Bossangoa.³⁶²⁸ P-2251 recalled that some Anti-Balaka members died during the attack but did not know if any Seleka died.³⁶²⁹ In this regard, the Chamber also notes that P-2251 stated not seeing any Muslims in Bouca and not knowing where they were.³⁶³⁰ Bearing in mind its credibility assessment of this witness,³⁶³¹ as well as the evidence outlined below indicating the presence of Muslim civilians during the attack, the Chamber has not relied on this part of P-2251’s evidence. This is underscored by P-2251 himself stating that in places like Bossangoa, Bouca and Bogangolo, Muslims ‘associated with’ the Seleka were killed.³⁶³²

1360. P-2041 stated that he heard on 9 September 2013 from his deceased’s wife family living in Bouca that the Anti-Balaka were attacking Bouca, killing many Muslims and burning the houses.³⁶³³ He was told that before the attack there were rumours that the Anti-Balaka were 10 kilometres away in a village called Bambia, planning an attack on Bouca.³⁶³⁴

1363. P-2041 added that approximately one month after the attack on Bouca, his relatives fled, the herders went into the bush and others fled to Cameroon and Chad, because they feared for their lives at the hands of the Anti-Balaka – they told him that their neighbours had been killed and they were scared and wanted to leave as well.³⁶³⁸ P-2041 said that after the Muslims fled their houses and went to the town hall, where there were still some Seleka and it was the only protected place for Muslims, the Anti-Balaka destroyed the houses of the Muslims.³⁶³⁹ P-2041 heard on RFI about two weeks later that the Anti-Balaka also attacked Bossangoa, where they apparently attacked the Seleka and civilians.³⁶⁴⁰

1364. Michel Ningando, a Catholic priest in the Bossangoa region, who gathered information from those present in Bouca at the time, stated there were attacks in Bouca in October 2013,³⁶⁴¹ when the local Muslims attacked the local Christians and pointed out to the Seleka where in the bush ‘the Christians’ were hiding, following which the self-defence groups retaliated and attacked Bouca, but they were not strong enough and were ‘driven away’ by the Seleka.³⁶⁴² Michel Ningando recalled that the imam of Bouca was killed, the Seleka retaliated by attacking the surrounding villages, and people from Batangafo and other small villages on the route from Batangafo to Bouca gathered in the Catholic mission in Bouca.³⁶⁴³ When the witness arrived in Bouca, the Muslims had already fled to Batangafo and Kabo, and only the Christians were left in Bouca.³⁶⁴⁴ From the information he gathered, he sent a report according to which there were about 70 deaths in Bouca, ‘all Christians’.³⁶⁴⁵

³⁶⁴¹ The Chamber notes that Michel Ningando recalled the events as having taken place in October 2013, which does not comport with the fact that other witnesses recall the Bouca attack having taken place in September 2013. The Chamber further notes that the witness received information from people who were present in Bouca at the time and that he himself did not claim to have firsthand information about the Bouca attack. Bearing this in mind, the Chamber does not consider that this witness’s recollection of these events taking in place October 2013 to be a material inconsistency.

1365. P-2673 confirmed in relation to an exchange on Facebook he had at the time with Rod Larry Martial Gallaut that ‘nos gars’ who they heard had attacked Bouca were Anti-Balaka and worked for Mr Ngaïssona.³⁶⁴⁶ P-2673 stated that the Anti-Balaka in Bouar, Bossangoa, Bouca are people who worked together with Mr Ngaïssona.³⁶⁴⁷ P-2673 did not hear anything about weapons being provided to the Anti-Balaka; the military had hidden their weapons in the CAR to use on return; P-2673 heard this in Bertoua from many Gbaya soldiers close to Bozizé.³⁶⁴⁸ P-2673 confirmed that he never saw Mr Ngaïssona distributing any weapon, ammunition or Thuraya, but he ‘knew’ that the information received was true.³⁶⁴⁹

1366. The Chamber notes that a press article on ‘afriquenewsinfo.wordpress.com’, dated 9 September 2013, open source Radio Ndeke Luka that mentioned that Guy Simplicie Kodégué, spokesperson of presidency, had said that Lin Banoukepa, spokesperson of François Bozizé in Paris, Joachim Kokaté and Lévy Yakité all claimed (‘revendiqué’) the attack on Bouca.³⁶⁵⁰ The Chamber recalls that Lin Banoukepa was executive director of FROCCA at the time.³⁶⁵¹ Joachim Kokaté, when asked about this article, preferred not to answer the question whether he remembered making a claim, either in the name of the Anti-Balaka or his own, in respect of the attacks carried out by the Anti-Balaka on Bossangoa and Bouca on 9 September 2013.³⁶⁵²

1367. Having regard to the above, the Chamber finds that the Anti-Balaka attacked Bouca on 9 September 2013 resulting in the killing of the Imam of Bouca and other Muslim civilians, resulting in the Muslim population fleeing their houses to other villages, and to neighbouring countries. The clashes between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka also led to the death of Christian inhabitants of Bouca.

iv. Benzambé

1368. Considering further the events in Benzambé, the Chamber heard from P-2602, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, P-2049, Nestor Wiabona, D30-4608, P-1577 and V44-0001, as set out below, who spoke about an attack taking place there in early September 2013. The Chamber notes that P-2602 and Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana were part of the Anti-Balaka group that attacked Benzambé, whereas P-2049 and D30-4608 received information from direct victims of the attack. Nestor Wiabona was present in Benzambé during the attack. P-1577 was a photojournalist who travelled to Benzambé in November 2013.

1369. P-2602 stated that in Benzambé, the Seleka were ‘bothering the population’, killing, taking things, burning houses; they chased them away and progressed to go to Bossangoa, that was the plan for the others as well because they were to chase all of them to Bossangoa centre.³⁶⁵³ Some stayed in Bossangoa, others from the Anti-Balaka group progressed following the Seleka towards Bangui.³⁶⁵⁴

1370. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that his company was composed of 715 elements at the time they attacked Benzambé; 67 of his original men were sent to Gbozo; the witness kept 10 with him and they joined another group which moved to Benzambé.³⁶⁵⁵ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that when attacking Benzambé, they sent trade girls to warn those in the village who were not Seleka to go to the bush before the attack; and provided further details of the attack.³⁶⁵⁶ In time, the witness placed the attack on Benzambé before the first attack on Bossangoa that took place in September 2013.³⁶⁵⁷

1371. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana confirmed that the Anti-Balaka ‘spared’ the imam who had defended the Christians and opposed the Seleka actions, and handed him over to the priest in Bossangoa to show that they were targeting the Seleka, not Muslim populations.³⁶⁵⁸ The

P-2602 stated that they captured the Imam and his family, and sent for the bishop to collect him (see P-2602 Interview Transcript, CAR-OTP-2118-9737-R01, at 9751-54, lines 471-572). witness insisted that the imam was not killed.³⁶⁵⁹ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana considered that they had a very strict chief, Ndangba, and no element of his stole or took anything, no child, woman was killed, and the target were the Seleka elements.³⁶⁶⁰ According to the witness, in the group that attacked Benzambé, there were Danboy, Nabozina, Delmas, Bad Boy.³⁶⁶¹

1372. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that when they attacked Benzambé, they had to attack Ouham-Bac on the same day, if they had left the locality, the Seleka would have come back immediately and attacked them.³⁶⁶²

1373. P-2049 stated that the victims in Benzambé included Defala Bourham, Bashir, Abdelkarim aka Shacks, Yaya Zakaria, Abou Khiress (village head), Deré ‘with wife and children’, Bashru ‘with wife and children’, Yaya Djito, Ibrahim Adey, Aladi Mahamat, Naga Adamou, Douka and his children Doya Douka and Harouna Douka, Dolé ‘with wife and children’, Salma Idrissa and nine children (between 32 and 4 years old), Mariam Adamou and children Adamou Seidou, Kartouma Seidou, Ashta Seidou, Mahamat Zain Seidou, Amadou Seidou.³⁶⁶³ P-2049 said that he spoke to two people, Machoutou Djabire and Deré Seidou, who escaped and saw their wives and children being killed.³⁶⁶⁴ P-2049 clarified that Deré Seidou’s wife and children were not killed in Benzambé centre, they were fleeing towards Bossangoa when they were attacked.³⁶⁶⁵ P-2049 also said that it was Dedane that supervised the Benzambé attack.³⁶⁶⁶

1374. The Chamber notes in this regard that Nestor Wiabona stated that (i) Abou Khiress was ‘with the Seleka’ and not killed during the attack;³⁶⁶⁷ (ii) he saw Zakaria participate in the attack with a weapon, firing, fleeing and not dying;³⁶⁶⁸ and (iii) the following individuals did not die during the attack: Ibrahim Adey (in Chad, child still in Bezambé), Aladjji (in Chad), Yaya Djito (in Bossangoa), Naga Adamou, Salma Idrissa and Harouna Douka (in Bossangoa; were not in Benzambé during attack), Joël Feissonangai aka Dolé (seeing him in daily life), Seidou Deré (sold weapons) and wife Mariame Adamou (killed in Bongame while carrying a weapon by local youth because she had said that Christians would be the slaves of Muslims).³⁶⁶⁹ The Chamber further notes that P-2049 insisted that (i) Abou Khiress did not die in Chad in 2004;³⁶⁷⁰ (ii) Yaya Zakaria did die during the attack;³⁶⁷¹ (iii) other information on Defala Bourham, Abdelkarim Sair, Aladi Mahamat, Dolé and ‘wife and children’ not dying during this attack was incorrect.³⁶⁷² The Chamber notes that the source of Nestor Wiabona’s information is unclear, whereas P-2049 specified how he received information on victims of various attacks. Therefore, the Chamber considers P-2049’s evidence on victims killed during the attacks mentioned that he heard about from others, as reliable, while it considers Nestor Wiabona’s evidence insufficient to refute it.

1375. Nestor Wiabona stated that the Anti-Balaka entered Benzambé in September 2013 because they had heard from youth in the town, some of whom understood Arabic, that the Seleka were planning to barricade people (‘us’) in their houses and burn them in the night of 5 September 2013.³⁶⁷³ The witness stated that the attack by the Anti-Balaka started at 04:00 and during this period, they (‘we’) knew that Muslim civilians had taken weapons so most of them were already with the Seleka.³⁶⁷⁴ Nestor Wiabona was present during this attack and saw the Anti-Balaka entering the town, and recalled that they had traditional weapons; during the attack, they took some weapons from the Seleka they killed; they won the battle ‘par la force de dieu’.³⁶⁷⁵ The witness stated that, after this clash, the Anti-Balaka went towards Bossangoa, where the Seleka were,³⁶⁷⁶ And that there were some deaths on that day, following the clashes.³⁶⁷⁷

1376. D30-4608 heard of an attack in Benzambé from a young girl who said that the Seleka had attacked and the youth had then attacked in reprisal; because the young ‘autochtones’ were in the majority, the Muslims fled into the bush; the young girl walked all the way to Bossangoa to tell D30-4608 about this.³⁶⁷⁸

1377.P-1577 travelled to Benzambé, Ouham-Bac and Zere on 3 and 4 November 2013.³⁶⁷⁹ In Bossangoa a few days earlier, P-1577 took the picture of an individual who claimed to be a Muslim trader and said that he had fled from Benzambé to Bossangoa after Anti-Balaka forces attacked Muslim homes in the Benzambé area.³⁶⁸⁰

1378.The Chamber notes that Achta Moussa Animer testified that her husband, Ajdo Ibrahim Moussa also known as Mahamt Abdel Karim, did not return when one Thursday, which the witness thought was a month before the 5 December 2013 attack in Bangui, he went with his vehicle to take people to Benzambé for a weekly market despite a warning from neighbours not to do it because the ‘malefactors’, which to the witness were the Anti-Balaka, were around in that locality.³⁶⁸¹ Achta Moussa Animer later learned that her husband’s vehicle, which transported Christians and Muslims, was stopped, after which she fled with her family, with the help of some neighbours, to Sibut and then Bangui.³⁶⁸² The witness did not know what happened to her husband’s remains or what happened to the bodies and vehicle.³⁶⁸³ While the witness was unable to provide further details in relation to the death of her husband, the Chamber concludes from the general context provided that this concerned events in Benzambé taking place during the advance of Anti-Balaka groups through the provinces.

1379.Having regard to the above, the Chamber finds that the Anti-Balaka attacked Benzambé in early September 2013, resulting in the killing of Muslim civilians and fleeing of Muslim population to other locations.

v. Koro-M'Poko

1380. In relation to an attack in Koro-M'Poko, the Chamber heard from P-2453 and P-2049, who spoke about an attack taking place there on 11 September 2013.

1381. P-2049 said that Koro Mpoko is 50 kilometres and Sadjo 40 kilometres from Bossangoa, between Bossangoa and Bossembélé.³⁶⁸⁴

1382. Both P-2453 and P-2049 heard of an Anti-Balaka attack in Koro-M'Poko on 11 September 2013, leading to the death of, inter alia, Al-hadji Idriss Adef (or Adeif), Zakaria Ibrahim, Oumar Idriss, Boussadi Saoudi, Chaibou Hissene (or Hissein) Waddai.³⁶⁸⁵ P-2453 additionally mentioned Hissene Waddai, Hassane Adim and Aladji Boubaline among the victims,³⁶⁸⁶ while P-2049 also mentioned Hassan Ibrahim, Hassana Daboura, Bouba Bi Lire, and Kourgue Bi Bouba, stating that overall some 60 Muslims were killed and 39 heads of cattle lost in this attack.³⁶⁸⁷

1383. As regards the Anti-Balaka involved, P-2049 heard from people at the École de la Liberté that the individuals engaged in the attack included Yakossi, Kouzou known as Al-Habo from Kana, Ngaodji Bandoro, Charles Yonbondji and Kadacho Yafaro.³⁶⁸⁸ P-2049 specified that on the same day, an attack in Sadjo took place, where 40 Muslims were killed, 41 heads of cattle lost, and all houses of Muslims burnt.³⁶⁸⁹

When P-2453 was later staying at the École Liberté in Bossangoa, he met Mahamat Idriss Adef, son of Al-hadji Idriss Adef, who told him about the attack, saying that the MISCA soldiers found survivors and brought them to École Liberté in Bossangoa where Peuhls from Zere and other Muslims from neighbouring areas had already sought refuge (see P-2453 Statement, CAR-OTP-2111-0415-R04, at 0425, para. 46). b. Attack on Bossangoa in September 2013

1385. At the outset, the Chamber notes the evidence of witnesses who were involved in the Anti-Balaka moving about and engaging in attacks in the wider Bossangoa area, as discussed above, and who described their movements and re-grouping before the attack on Bossangoa in September 2013. Specifically, following the attacks in Bowaye, Zere, Benzamble, and Bouca, the Chamber notes that Dedane's group continued planning a further attack in Bossangoa.

1386. P-2658 said that Dedane's group remained in the bush near Bossangoa for three days after the Zere attack, during which Dedane went to Bossangoa, bringing back ammunition and weapons.³⁶⁹⁰ P-2658 said that Dedane said they should wait for Andjilo, adding that Andjilo would finish attacking Bouca and come to Bossangoa; Dedane and his men wanted to join him so that they could attack Bossangoa together.³⁶⁹¹ Dedane told the group that he was speaking with Andjilo on the phone.³⁶⁹² P-2658 said that, after Zere, they went to a place around 12 kilometres from Bossangoa where they waited to hear from Andjilo, who, following Dedane's instructions, took the direction of Zere from Bouca.³⁶⁹³ Dedane told Andjilo to wait for his instruction in Zere because he was going to look for the group that had attacked Bowaye, and on finding them he returned and said they had 'all arrived to attack Bossangoa'.³⁶⁹⁴

1387. Continuing with their advance, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that after they controlled Benzambé, they marched towards Ouham-Bac, meeting Dedane and Douze Puissances on the way when they were coming back from Bossangoa where they had bought ammunitions for hunting rifles.³⁶⁹⁵ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana did not know where the money to buy ammunition came from, the ‘modibos’ were selling fetishes and they borrowed money from them to purchase cartridges, with acknowledgements of debt and the understanding that upon arrival in Bangui, they would be ‘reimbursed’ – it had been talked about in the meetings they had with ‘the coordinator’.³⁶⁹⁶

1388. As regards materiel, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that the ammunition for hunting or artisanal weapons came from the other side of the river, Zongo, passed through the capital, and was transported in vehicles travelling to Bossangoa.³⁶⁹⁷ Ndangba, Danboy and Dandouzima were at the head of the 8th company, received the ammunition and distributed it to the various elements bearing hunting weapons.³⁶⁹⁸ The witness stated that when they attacked Benzambé and were advancing towards M’Poko, they met a young man known as Ngaikosset, referred to as the son of Eugène Ngaikosset, very much respected because of that name.³⁶⁹⁹

1389. P-2602 explained that the group that was in Zere split into two, one coming towards Bossangoa and another going towards Koro-M’Poko, while the group that left Bouca stopped at Bogangolo, and the Ouham-Bac group went straight to Bossangoa centre.³⁷⁰⁰ When P-2602 was coming from Bossangoa to go to Bossembélé, he stopped in Koro-M’Poko to give instructions before they could leave, that they should not take people’s things by force and only fight with someone who was armed, and that the person among them stealing would be killed.³⁷⁰¹

1390. P-2602 headed to Bossembélé twice because he knew that weapons were stored there, and he was in contact with people from whom he could get some; they recovered 30 AK-47s, which they worked with in the field; they also had ‘DKM’, RPG, mortars which they retrieved from Seleka after combat; these weapons were handed back during the transition;

Ougalas and some natives went to Bozoum for ammunition.³⁷⁰² Oupoutou, 12 Puissances, Dadama, Houronti, Bama had gone to Bossembélé to get the ammunition and then called P-2602 collect it, after which they continued towards Bangui.³⁷⁰³ From Bogangolo, P-2602 went back to Bowaye after Benzambe, because there were some militaries who went only from Bangui to go and meet them in order to lead and direct them.³⁷⁰⁴

1392. P-2658 was among the fighters when the fighting took place³⁷⁰⁵ and provided a detailed account of the attack. P-2658 said that the plan was to attack Bossangoa at 05:00, but P-2658 did not know the date on which the attack took place.³⁷⁰⁶ The chiefs participating in the Bossangoa attack included, inter alia, 12 Puissances, Nambozouina, corporal Dangba and Dedane.³⁷⁰⁷ P-2658 denied Kema participating in this attack.³⁷⁰⁸

1393. P-2658 said that, a day prior to the attack, they took the Benzambe axis and were about 12 kilometres from Bossangoa that night, then moved in columns until the bridge about five kilometres from Bossangoa where they spent the night.³⁷⁰⁹ P-2658 was not aware of the instructions given by the chiefs, who were in front, to the elements, as he was in the back of the column.³⁷¹⁰

1394. P-2658 said that the attack started at 04:00 and the fights took place at the entrance and Seleka were killed.³⁷¹¹ The Seleka elements that were around attacked them, and Dedane and his elements retaliated and one Seleka element was killed; they then continued and entered Bossangoa.³⁷¹² When they entered Bossangoa, Dedane put the militaries (FACA) behind and instructed the elements who were not FACA not to run away because if they did, they would be killed by the militaries.³⁷¹³

1395.P-2658 said that the Anti-Balaka fought intensively against the Seleka at the entry of Bossangoa, and the attack lasted until 16:00.³⁷¹⁴ At a certain moment, all the Anti-Balaka retreated and started running in different directions, many Anti-Balaka and Seleka were killed during the attack; P-2658 hid in the bush and went into the city the following morning.³⁷¹⁵ In Bossangoa, when he got there, P-2658 saw more than 10 bodies, houses destroyed and pillaged; he recognised some of the victims, mainly the Anti-Balaka elements; some victims were killed by machete, others with weapons.³⁷¹⁶

1396.Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, who had joined the Anti-Balaka in Gobere and was in the group that had previously attacked Benzambe,³⁷¹⁷ said that on their way to Bossangoa, 12 kilometres from town centre, some companies fell into a Seleka ambush.³⁷¹⁸ Other companies were supposed to attack Bossangoa but did not receive the message, so Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana's company attacked Bossangoa alone, with only 17 bullets for hunting rifles, one AK-47 and one automatic weapon which did not function properly; the Seleka were heavily armed so they retreated and went to Ouham-Bac.³⁷¹⁹ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that they were joined by other companies but separated when the Seleka sandwiched them between Bossangoa and Bozoum, so they crossed the river to Mbang and started their way to Bangui.³⁷²⁰ The witness recalled that Marabout Mauri, also known as 'General Mauri', was travelling with them.³⁷²¹ The witness stated that during this first attack, they did not fight against women or other civilians;³⁷²² he thought his attack was against the Seleka bearing arms, but other than that he could not know who was military or civilian, he fought all individuals bearing arms.³⁷²³

1398. According to P-2200, he knew the Anti-Balaka wanted to go after Muslims because he knew Christians who were members of the Anti-Balaka and refused to attack the Muslims as ordered, and because when entering Bossangoa, the Anti-Balaka first attacked residential areas and not Seleka positions.³⁷²⁷ P-2200 saw individuals progressing through the neighbourhood on foot, some in military attire, most in civilian clothes, which he knew were Anti-Balaka because they had red bands around their heads; he saw gris-gris on the bodies of dead Anti-Balaka.³⁷²⁸ There was a lot of firing with the Seleka responding to the attack, and P-2200 was told that nine Seleka were killed.³⁷²⁹

1399. D30-4608, Odette Namsona and Faustin Ngamesse were also present in Bossangoa at the time of the attack, but provided more general information.

1400. D30-4608 mentioned that the attack at Katanga on 17 September 2013 claimed Muslim civilian victims, who were 'indicators' for the Seleka, also claiming that Muslim civilians were armed.³⁷³⁰ D30-4608 stated, at the same time, that civilians were not attacked.³⁷³¹ D30-

4608 thought the clashes were limited to the exit of the town towards Katanga, and he did not know of an attack by youth from the north to attack Boro.³⁷³² Odette Namsona stated it was chaos as from 8 September 2013, that the Anti-Balaka grouped in the bush to reflect on a counterattack, and that a lot of houses were set on fire, including when going towards Boro church.³⁷³³ Faustin Ngamesse fled to the bishopric on 10 September 2013 for fear of Seleka reprisals after their marabout was killed,³⁷³⁴ and one morning while there, they were informed that the Balaka and Seleka were fighting, that the Seleka killed people and set houses on fire in Sembé, while it was said that the Balaka entered Boro and Muslim civilians fled towards 'École Liberté'.³⁷³⁵ According to Faustin Ngamesse, the dead that day were all Christians.³⁷³⁶

1401. Witnesses within Bossangoa town also received information on who participated in the attack on the side of the Anti-Balaka.

1402. For example, P-2049 heard that among those who led the attack were some who came from the provinces, including Dedane, Rocky, Charlie, Jeannot, Ndangba who was in the PG and participated in several attacks such as in Benzambé, and others from small areas, young people from the locality, and Charlie, whose real name is Tola.³⁷³⁷

1403. Similarly, P-2453 heard from Ali and Ousman that they saw the following Anti-Balaka take part in the attack: Charly Tola-Ngaya, a FACA from Benzambé based in Bossangoa, Rocky Dimanche, a transporter based in Bossangoa, Enock Dokafei from Sembe, Ange-Evariste Gbei from Bossangoa centre, Ermane from Fulbe, Emmanuel Kete alias 'Emma' from Arabe, Lakoitene, Akim who used to be a driver for '222'.³⁷³⁸ P-2453 also heard from Hissene, who had been held captive by the Anti-Balaka in September and managed to escape as they were about to attack Bossangoa on 17 September 2013, that his kidnappers were the

Anti-Balaka group of Benzambé led by corporal Dedane who was, in the days before the attack, regularly on the phone with Florent Kema, in charge of the Anti-Balaka group of Bowaye, discussing the strategy to attack Bossangoa and agreeing to split to enter the town from different directions, with the attack to be led by Charly Tola; these Anti-Balaka were armed with traditional rifles, a few Kalashnikovs and machetes.³⁷³⁹

1404. As regards individuals killed during the attack, P-2200 stated that seven Muslim civilians from Boro and Arabe neighbourhoods were killed and four injured.³⁷⁴⁰ Ali Mahamat was also injured by a bullet, in Boro.³⁷⁴¹ Adjaro Gara was injured by a bullet in Arabe and brought to the Bossangoa hospital, but died from complications.³⁷⁴² P-2462 heard from her brother that her elder brother Adjara Gara and one of their neighbours came onto an ambush and were shot by the Anti-Balaka when going to the imam's house.³⁷⁴³ P-2049 provided additional details, stating that his younger brother was shot in the abdomen when fleeing from his girlfriend's house in Bornou neighbourhood, brought to the hospital and operated, but died thereafter.³⁷⁴⁴ P-2453 later learned that Youssouf Hamdan, Ali Issa, Adjaro Gara (son of Khadidja Adjaro and brother of Fadil Gara), Abdoulaye Oumarou, Ahamat, Bachir, and Koulssoumi Adjé were killed; Ousman was shot in the thigh and Ali Mahamat in the stomach, both badly injured; none of the victims were involved with the Seleka and no weapon was found on their bodies.³⁷⁴⁵

1405. It was suggested that Adjaro Gara would have been part of a Muslim self-defence group who was killed in battle.³⁷⁴⁶ The Chamber notes in this regard that the related information was taken from an unsigned screening note of an individual who did not testify before the Chamber. Considering further P-2049's insistence that this suggestion was incorrect, his family relation with Adjaro Gara, and given his evidence that he had information only about civilians,³⁷⁴⁷ the Chamber relies on P-2049's evidence in relation to this person that he was not a member of a self-defence group and was killed by the Anti-Balaka.

1406. Following the attack, individuals went to the 'École Liberté', where they felt safer because it was protected by the FOMAC Congolese contingent.³⁷⁴⁸ P-2453 stated they had very limited resources at the school, so MSF and UNICEF provided some basic hygiene amenities, water and medical care.³⁷⁴⁹ Individuals also went to the house of the imam.³⁷⁵⁰ P-2200 stated that four days after the attack, the Seleka came to him to say that order had returned and the conflict had moved in direction of Karanboko; P-2200 heard that some Anti-Balaka had withdrawn to the bush and others to the Catholic mission; calm returned to Bossangoa, but the Anti-Balaka and Seleka continued to fight in the neighbouring villages.³⁷⁵¹

1407. On the basis of the above, the Chamber finds that on 17 September 2013, Anti-Balaka groups attacked Bossangoa, causing the death of Muslim civilians and leading to the dislocation from their homes of others.

1408. The Chamber notes the information before it according to which retaliatory violence by the Seleka was committed against the non-Muslim population in Bossangoa after the attack.³⁷⁵² It is clear that large-spread violence and abuses were committed by the Seleka, including and in particular against the non-Muslim population.³⁷⁵³ While of significance to understand the overall context, it is not for the Chamber to further pronounce thereon in the context of the current case.

1409. Several witnesses travelled to Bossangoa and surroundings in the aftermath of the attack and described their impressions.

1410. For instance, Michaël Zumstein travelled to Bossangoa on 22 September 2013, where they were told that 25,000 people were gathered around a church in fear of attacks and looting by the Seleka, while an estimated 1,000 Muslim civilians were gathered at the École de la Liberté, fearful of revenge attacks from Christians.³⁷⁵⁴ The witness went again to Bossangoa between 28 and 30 September 2013, seeing looted and destroyed villages on the way, with people telling them that the houses were looted and destroyed by the Seleka.³⁷⁵⁵ Michaël Zumstein noticed Muslims fleeing on trucks in the opposite direction, away from Bossangoa but did not know where they came from.³⁷⁵⁶ Both in Bossangoa and in the small villages around it, the witness's general feeling was that everyone was displaced at the time: Muslim Peuhl herders were being attacked by Christian farmers, Christians were fleeing from the looting Seleka, farmers would sleep in the bush and Peuhl abandon their cattle, Muslims fearing the Anti-Balaka were gathered in the bush or fleeing to Bangui.³⁷⁵⁷ Buses and trucks often belonged to Muslims and would take on fleeing Muslims.³⁷⁵⁸

1411. P-1576 went to Bossangoa in the second half of November 2013, with information circulating that there was a humanitarian crisis and about 40,000 displaced Christians.³⁷⁵⁹ On the route to Bossangoa, some villages had been completely destroyed.³⁷⁶⁰ In Bossangoa itself, 40,000 Christians were in a camp around the cathedral, around 1,500 Muslims who lived in the periphery of the Christian neighbourhood had been displaced to a school; the

Seleka were present in Bossangoa.³⁷⁶¹ On the route towards Bangui on 21 November 2013, between Bossangoa and Bossembélé, they crossed Anti-Balaka elements who said that they were defending their village.³⁷⁶²

1412.P-1577 was similarly present in Bossangoa in November 2013 and observed that the road from Bangui to Bossangoa, normally quite busy, was extremely overgrown, while many of the villages along the way were empty.³⁷⁶³ According to P-1577, villagers had moved into the bush for fear of Seleka travelling in the region and to some extent targeting the population.³⁷⁶⁴ The idea that ‘generalised lawlessness’ had pushed the local population to organise self-defence groups across the country aligned with P-1577’s general impression and the conversations they had with the local population.³⁷⁶⁵

1413.P-1577 said that he heard the term ‘Anti-Balaka’ for the first time during this trip to the CAR in early November 2013.³⁷⁶⁶ When travelling out of Bossangoa on occasion, P-1577 came across individuals that identified themselves as Anti-Balaka, who also said that bridges had been removed so that Seleka vehicles would not be able to travel at speed along the roads and would have to stop.³⁷⁶⁷ P-1577 explained that the number of 40,000 displaced at the Catholic church in Bossangoa was reported by the international community at the time, based on his direct observations he believed the number to be closer to 30,000, which he also heard from people at the church.³⁷⁶⁸ P-1577 talked to some Muslim and Peuhl individuals who said they had experienced various forms of violence by armed ‘non-Muslims’ who they called Anti-Balaka, some had bullet or machete wounds on their legs or other parts of their body.³⁷⁶⁹

1414. Nicolas Tiangaye testified that the Anti-Balaka excesses against the Muslim civilian population in Bossangoa were quite significant and he travelled there on behalf of the government around 17 October 2013 to bring humanitarian assistance to those at the bishop’s residence.³⁷⁷⁰ Nicolas Tiangaye met thousands of displaced persons at the bishop’s residence, living under extremely difficult circumstances, no water, food, health care.³⁷⁷¹ The Muslim population was already suffering reprisals from the Anti-Balaka, but the Seleka were also committing acts of violence against non-Muslims.³⁷⁷² The first victims were those who had come under abuses from the Seleka, and the Anti-Balaka organised themselves to carry out reprisals against the Muslims; the witness did not hear any testimony as such, but he experienced these things personally,³⁷⁷³ he spoke to victims at the bishopric.³⁷⁷⁴ Nicolas

Tiangaye did not have details on the perpetrators of the excesses committed by the Anti-Balaka.³⁷⁷⁵ The witness insisted that he made only one trip to Bossangoa.³⁷⁷⁶

1415. The Chamber notes further in relation to this attack that P-2673 confirmed exchanging Facebook chat messages with user name ‘Rod Larry Martial Gallaut’ on 17 September 2013 concerning an attack in Bossangoa taking place on that day.³⁷⁷⁷ Similarly, P-2841 explained that a young person was monitoring the movements of the Anti-Balaka and informed P-2841 regularly of their advances or progress, a friend who was gendarme came to brief P-2841 in person from time to time, and he had relatives in Bossangoa and since it had been taken by the Anti-Balaka, news spread rather quickly, everyone knew about it.³⁷⁷⁸ Considering the times at which these messages appear to have been exchanged, the Chamber notes that information on the attack seems to have reached individuals also outside of the CAR very close in time to the events happening on the ground.

1416. Indeed, also otherwise information on the Bossangoa attack in September 2013 was generally available. The Chamber also notes in this regard the press statement issued by FROCCA on 18 September 2013.³⁷⁷⁹

1417. For example, P-0567 learned about the Anti-Balaka attacking Bossangoa in September 2013 when reading reports to gain contextual knowledge of the situation in the country, but did not have first-hand knowledge.³⁷⁸⁰ P-0567 stated that the first attack by the Anti-Balaka in Bossangoa in September 2013 led to an imam and his family, including four to five children, being killed; by April 2014 all the Muslims had left from Bossangoa.³⁷⁸¹ According to P-0567, Bossangoa was the first town to be attacked by the Anti-Balaka in September 2013 chronologically; he opined that this was not a fight with the Seleka but rather an attack against Muslim civilians, specifically the imam and his family; before this attack people did not really know about the Anti-Balaka.³⁷⁸² P-0567 knew of a mission to the Bossangoa area between 14 and 16 September 2013 which reported another attack by the Anti-Balaka in Bossangoa against a group of Seleka vehicles.³⁷⁸³

1418.P-0884 said that he was aware of attacks in Bossangoa and Bouca in September 2013; he was not the only one, all Central Africans were aware of the Anti-Balaka attacks in the provincial towns of Bossangoa and others.³⁷⁸⁴

1419.P-1962 stated that from the radio, with people calling in and telling what was happening in Bossangoa, Bossembélé, Bossemptélé, Landi, Bouca, Kaga-Bandoro, he heard prior to 5 December 2013 about the Anti-Balaka forming in Bossangoa and Bouca, that they intended to fight the Seleka to destabilise the government, and that the Anti-Balaka were killing Muslims in Bossangoa and the Muslims then started killing the Christians in PK5 – this was the reason for him to leave PK5.³⁷⁸⁵

1420.Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that he heard about attacks in Bouca, Bossangoa and other locations in September 2013, because at the time there was a colonel of the Central African army called Yacoub who had been proposed to serve as commander of the military region in Bossangoa but refused to take up that position, giving the information that there were too many attacks in Bouca and Bossangoa and that the Anti-Balaka were extremely active in that area, so he could not take that risk.³⁷⁸⁶

1421.P-1847 stated that the Anti-Balaka and young FACA of the PG attacked the positions of the Seleka general Yayah in Bossangoa, following which the Seleka responded.³⁷⁸⁷ He stated that there was a very strong mobilisation of young Anti-Balaka in the Bossangoa zone, supported by young soldiers of the PG that were also part of the Anti-Balaka; they walked towards Bangui with a view to conducting the attack on 5 December 2013.³⁷⁸⁸

1422. P-2416 heard about an attack on Bossangoa by the Anti-Balaka after he had returned from Mecca in October 2013, and in a more recent conversation in Garam-Bouläï, P-2416 heard that the person was present during the attack and that some of his relatives were killed, as were many Muslim civilians, and also the wife and children of a wholesale customer of P-2416.³⁷⁸⁹ P-2416 heard that those Anti-Balaka present in Bossangoa came to Yaloké after this attack.³⁷⁹⁰ In late February 2014, P-2416 talked with three Anti-Balaka from Bossangoa located in Yaloké who told him that they were Anti-Balaka, though P-2416 saw that they were not wearing gris-gris like many of the other Anti-Balaka, and that they had travelled from Bossangoa to Yaloké, had been trained in Rwanda or Uganda to kill people, and they said to P-2416 ‘Nzapa a bata mo, nzapa a bata ala kwé so álá ngbá gé’ (‘God spared you, God spared all of you remaining here’), that ‘Our plan was to kill all Muslims but we came to Yaloké and found you here. Normally we don’t want to see any Muslim but the Christians here told us that you were a good person’; their last sentence to him was ‘Mo gi na I yé ti essence za I hon nzapa lo yeke kota mingi’ (‘Just give us something (money) for the oil for the motor bike. God is really big’).³⁷⁹¹

1423. In light of the evidence as outlined above, illustrating in particular that information on the attack in Bossangoa in September 2013 was widely available at the time, the Chamber concludes that also Mr Ngaïssona must have known about the attack on Bossangoa in September 2013, including the deaths and dislocation of Muslim civilians that took place as a result of the Anti-Balaka attack there.

iii. Attacks between mid-September and December 2013

1424. The evidence shows that, following the attacks in the Bossangoa region in the north, as discussed above, the movement of the Anti-Balaka expanded by October 2013 to other regions of the CAR. This included to Bouar in the west, in Nana-Mambéré prefecture and towards Bangui in the south, through Ndjo, Bossembélé, and Boali in Ombella-M'Poko prefecture. This is exemplified by the attacks that took place in these locations respectively.

1425. P-2926 concluded in his report that the first clashes between Seleka and Anti-Balaka took place in August and September 2013, followed by Anti-Balaka attacks against Seleka in towns in the west, including Bouca, Bouar, Bozoum, Bossembélé,³⁷⁹² expanded by October 2013 into the north-west up to Bouar and south towards Bossembélé and Mbourouba, north of Damara.³⁷⁹³ According to P-2926, while initially directed against the Seleka, the self-defence groups quickly mixed Seleka and rural and urban Muslim communities.³⁷⁹⁴

1426. This is also reflected in P-1847's evidence regarding instructions being received by Dedane, who was coordinating these groups in close communication with them. P-1847, who was Dedane's cousin and receiving information from him at the time, said that the former PG in Bossangoa and Bouar were under Dedane's command and that Dedane contacted P-1847 saying that they had received orders from François Bozizé to descend on Bangui and attack, and that is how they started to attack the towns from Bossangoa, then to Ndjo, Bossembélé, and other locations to come as far as Bossembélé.³⁷⁹⁵ According to P-1847, the attacks of Ndjo and Bossembélé were coordinated by Dedane and Kema, and the attacks in Damara and Bouca by Andjilo.³⁷⁹⁶

1427. As regards the materiel needed for these attacks, Dedane told P-1847 that near the mosque they ran out of ammunition and since they had been promised some ammunition which had not yet arrived, and 'Mokom father' had sent some money which was held up in Bouar, he was now burying about three people in the bush in Bossembélé.³⁷⁹⁷ They got blocked at Bossembélé for about ten days to two weeks, then went up to Boali, and the Andjilo group which was in the Batangafo area attacked as well; at the time, P-1847 had 'permanent contact' with his cousin Dedane who told P-1847 that the weapons they had to counterattack were weapons that were in Bossangoa and ‘Bongofi’³⁷⁹⁸, in Bozizé’s village, along with the hunting weapons that ‘Mokom *fi*ls’ had provided, along with ammunition through the intermediary of a woman whom P-1847 did not know.³⁷⁹⁹ Dedane told P-1847 that he received support from Mokom father and son, the latter sending hunting ammunition from the DRC and the father sending money to the elements on the ground; Dedane divided the ammunition he received from Maxime Mokom with Andjilo.³⁸⁰⁰

1428. P-2251 descended with a group led by Bama Clement aka ‘Flame de Guerre’, taking about four days to walk from Bouca to Bogangolo, through Marali and Bobatoua.³⁸⁰¹ In the bush outside Bogangolo, P-2251 met Lebene, Kolongo, Benjamin and Tex.³⁸⁰² Lebene was the chief of Kolongo, but in turn had chiefs above him who gave him orders that he implemented; these were Kems, Andjilo, Benjamin.³⁸⁰³ P-2251 heard Benjamin telling Lebene that now they had taken back their native village, he should tell his elements to work for peace and send a message to people hiding in the bush to return.³⁸⁰⁴ In Bogangolo, they clashed with Seleka which eventually fled to Ndjo and Bossembélé.³⁸⁰⁵ P-2251 left Lebene and Benjamin in Bogangolo and went with Kolongo to Boban the same day; the Seleka had already left Boban.³⁸⁰⁶ In Bona, another chief called Gaba acted as Kolongo’s deputy; he had been with them in Ngobere, but became a chief only in Bouca.³⁸⁰⁷

1429. In addition to this, these attacks and their chronology show a clear overarching and coordinated movement of Anti-Balaka groups from the Bossangoa region in the direction of Bangui in advance of 5 December 2013. The Chamber has assessed these attacks in turn below.

a. Ndjo

1430. The Chamber notes that Ndjo, which is on the road between Bossangoa and Bossembélé, right at the prefecture lines dividing the Ouham and Ombella-M'Poko prefectures,³⁸⁰⁸ was mentioned by witnesses describing their advance towards Bangui in accordance with the agreed plan and assigned locations.³⁸⁰⁹ It is also one of the locations mentioned in the email sent to Mr Ngaïssona on 7 October 2013, transmitting the needs expressed by Lakouetene and Doguela.³⁸¹⁰

1431. P-2841 stated that around the time of beginning September 2013, there was fighting in various zones and serious clashes between the Seleka and Anti-Balaka in a village named Ndjo, which reinforced the idea and determination to move on to Bangui.³⁸¹¹

1432. Specifically, P-2232 testified that Dedane went north to Bozoum; then Dedane, together with Marabout Leroi, Richard Leroi, and Hippolyte Côme Azounou, deputy chief of staff of the Anti-Balaka started the attack.³⁸¹² P-2232 said that Dedane launched his 'first attack' from Ndjo and 'Maxime' was coordinating it.³⁸¹³ P-2232 said that, after Ndjo, they attacked Gaga, and 'Maxime' succeeded in 'pushing them all the way back to Bangui'.³⁸¹⁴ P-2232 said that the attack in Ndjo was the biggest fight of the Anti-Balaka before the Yaloké attack, it was 'slightly before' the attack of 5 December 2013,³⁸¹⁵ and they attacked the base of the Peuhls in a camp, with women and children who also received serious injuries by 'coupe-coupes' or machetes, as was shown on television.³⁸¹⁶ P-2232 said that 'Mokom' saw the women and children injured in Ndjo on the television, but did not make any comment and only talked about war reprisals.³⁸¹⁷ After the attack, a report was made to 'Mokom' that such and such a locality was attacked with such and such a number of victims and injured, as well as the quantities of equipment seized – as coordinator of the operations, he received reports on the various attacks.³⁸¹⁸ P-2232, asked in relation to ‘Mokom’s reaction to these reports, said that, the ‘essential thing was to achieve the objective’, which was to ‘chase the Seleka from power’ (chasser les Seleka du pouvoir), all attacks were aimed at chasing Seleka out of power ‘so as to take their place’.³⁸¹⁹

1433. P-2232 commented on the significance of the attack on Ndjo. P-2232 said that Dedane started fighting at Ndjo and people heard about it, and as whenever information went around that a group had been formed at a certain level, people wanted to find out; at the beginning, the various groups were known as self-defence groups, and whenever he learnt (il apprenait) that a self-defence group had been set up, he tried to contact the leader (il cherchait à rencontrer le chef), and that is how a chain or a network developed.³⁸²⁰ P-2232 further said that Dedane, after having contacted a chief of a group to organise them, would link them with Mokom and Dedane would do this for each group.³⁸²¹

1434. Similarly, P-0889 stated that ‘12 Puissances’ from Bogangolo started with defending his own village before also descending onto Bangui like the others on the Damara axis; and Ouapoutou Benjamin from Ndjo defended this village before taking the route descending like the others to follow the plan of Maxime, in Yaloké there was Richard Bozando.³⁸²² P-0889 explained that he heard Mokom talk to some people of these areas, he would give the positions of the leaders when talking to other leaders in the CAR.³⁸²³

1435. Michaël Zumstein described how, when travelling from Bossangoa to Bangui in September 2013, in a village called ‘Njoh’ they saw for the first time armed Christian men who presented themselves as ‘groupe d’auto-défense’, which would later be commonly referred to as ‘Anti-Balaka’.³⁸²⁴ Similarly, P-1577 went to inter alia Ndjo on 3 November 2013,³⁸²⁵

b. Bossembélé

1436. Moving further south in the Ombella-M'Poko prefecture to Bossembélé, Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that near the village of Bobala, they received instruction from Dedane to go to Bossembélé, he dispatched Douze Puissances to Gbozo and Dangba to Bobala to give instructions to march towards Bossembélé where Dedane was based due to the working telephone network, but he also sent instructions by a messenger on foot.³⁸²⁷

1437. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that the purpose of going to Bossembélé was to get medicine and reinforce themselves; they all gathered at 'marabout' Lundi's house and spent one week; they were told not to attack the city because there were too many Seleka combatants; while in Bossembélé, the witness became the secretary for chief Alexis Mandago, nickname 'Sol-Sol'.³⁸²⁸ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana explained that as they were leaving Bossembélé, Dedane returned with 'modibo' Lundi, and had a meeting with the soldiers and groups were reallocated: one group was to go to Gbozo and the other to Bossangoa.³⁸²⁹

1438. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, who was not at this meeting, was told by Alexis Mandago that since Kema was originally from Bossangoa, and he and Ndangba were the people with 'rank', they had been chosen to be the ComZone in the Bossangoa localities with Ndangba being Kema's deputy.³⁸³⁰ Alexis Mandago and Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana were in this group and were to go back to Bossangoa; whereas others, including Douze Puissances, were to go to Bogangolo to meet up with Andjilo and join the group for Bogangolo and Gbozo.³⁸³¹

c. Gaga

1439. The Chamber notes that by October 2013, the Anti-Balaka reached the village of Gaga, which is 30-45 kilometres north of Yaloké in the Dawili commune.³⁸³²

1440. P-2416, a Yaloké resident at the time,³⁸³³ heard, while he was in Mecca for the Hadj in October 2013, from another Central African that Gaga had been attacked by Anti-Balaka, and learned more about the attack after returning to Yaloké, including that some civilians were killed.³⁸³⁴

1441. P-1779, an Imam from Gaga,³⁸³⁵ stated that two weeks before the first attack of the Anti-Balaka in Gaga, a Christian gold digger warned the population and advised to evacuate the women and children, which the Christians immediately did.³⁸³⁶ The Muslims did not believe him.³⁸³⁷ The attack took place on a Friday, starting at around 05:00 and continuing until 12:00.³⁸³⁸ P-1779 did not see the attackers, but heard shots and left his property only once to see the body of Yaya, a Muslim,³⁸³⁹ who was lying covered in blood.³⁸⁴⁰ P-1779 knew of three more victims, one Seleka and two more civilians, Adoum, who was killed in the street, and Ibrahim, a Peuhl, killed on the north side of the village where the attack started – all Muslims talked about the deaths of Adoum and Ibrahim.³⁸⁴¹ At around 11:00, still hearing firing, P-1779 left his family property and started looking for means to flee, he heard from a taxi driver, that Ardo Saidou, village chief of Gaga 3, instructed the Muslims to evacuate because the Anti-Balaka outnumbered the Seleka.³⁸⁴² P-1779 stated that the Seleka in Gaga were joined by Muslim youth from the village armed with bow and arrow that usually protected the village against road bandits to counter the Anti-Balaka.³⁸⁴³ P-1779 later saw the village deserted, houses of Muslims burnt, all in Gaga 1 on the north side of the village, where the attack started.³⁸⁴⁴ P-1779 also saw looted shops, while the mosques and churches of the village had not been touched.³⁸⁴⁵ After this attack, the Muslims no longer trusted the Christians who stopped visiting them, and P-1779 was afraid of going about in the village and no longer went out.³⁸⁴⁶

1442. P-2546 stated that in the morning of 7 October 2013, he heard on the news of Radio Ndeke Luka that ‘Gaga was burning’, so he started calling people who were on the ground, who told him that compounds had been burnt, people killed and bodies were lying around.³⁸⁴⁷ P-2546 also met with Rafael Det, mayor of Yaloké, who told him that Gaga had been attacked.³⁸⁴⁸ P-2546 stated that some of the survivors of Gaga also managed to escape to Yaloké, so people in Bangui were receiving a lot of information regarding the incident in Gaga: according to the information P-2546 received, he understood that the Seleka contingent based in Yaloké/Gaga was responsible for the incident.³⁸⁴⁹

1443. Zenaba Oumar, a Muslim resident of Yaloké at the time,³⁸⁵⁰ did not recall when the first attack on Gaga occurred, but it was more than a month prior to the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013.³⁸⁵¹ On the day Gaga was first attacked, the witness was in Yaloké and her cousin Odélon, called Odi, a gold miner working in the Gaga minefields, called the witness and told her that at about 03:00 the Anti-Balaka came from the bush, injured a Seleka that later died, then the Seleka drove the Anti-Balaka back into the bush and commenced killing all Christian civilians in Gaga.³⁸⁵² Having travelled to Gaga the same morning, Zenaba Oumar saw at least 100 dead bodies, men and some children, all appeared to have been shot with the gun, not chopped with machete.³⁸⁵³ The witness was told that many Christian merchants from Bangui were killed by the Seleka during this attack, she was told all the dead were Christians.³⁸⁵⁴ On the way back to Yaloké, on the road from Gaga to Zawa, Zenaba Oumar saw other dead bodies which she later learnt to be the Christians who were fleeing Gaga and were shot and killed by the Seleka; the bodies had not been there when she went to Gaga.³⁸⁵⁵

1444. Having regard to the above, the Chamber finds that the Anti-Balaka attacked Gaga in October 2013 in the early hours of a Friday, clashing with the Seleka there, which resulted in many civilian deaths, both Muslim and Christian, and Muslims fleeing to other locations.

1445. The Chamber now turns to the attack in Bouar in the Nana-Mambéré prefecture. The Prosecution submits that an attack on Bouar took place on 26 October 2013 during which the Anti-Balaka targeted the Muslim population as a whole, resulting in the deaths of at least 20 civilians and the displacement of over 10,000 people.³⁸⁵⁶ It argues that Mr Ngaïssona provided ‘the Bouar group’ with organisational support, funds, ammunition and Thurayas.³⁸⁵⁷ It also argues that P-1847’s testimony establishes that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom ordered the Bouar attack.³⁸⁵⁸

1446. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that there is no credible evidence that Mr Ngaïssona travelled to the border personally to Bouar to prepare and execute attacks against Seleka positions.³⁸⁵⁹ It also argues that Mr Ngaïssona did not instruct or provide money, weapons, ammunition, or any other material for the Bouar attack.³⁸⁶⁰

of whom were present in Bouar during the attack. They recalled information that they received at the time, as discussed in detail below.

1448. Nicolas Tiangaye did not remember what happened in Bouar; there were some soldiers who did not remain in Bangui, elements of the army who were scattered across the country and joined the Anti-Balaka and provided training for them to carry out the counter-attack on Seleka elements.³⁸⁶¹ The witness explained that Bouar is of strategic importance because it was a French military base, with Camp Leclerc; it is some 150 kilometres from the Cameroon border and merchandise coming through the Douala port was taken to the CAR through this route; it is also not too far up north, if going through Bocaranga, which is quite close to Chad; from Bouar one can go to Cameroon through Garam-Boulai and to Chad by passing through Paramba.³⁸⁶²

1449. The Chamber also takes note in this regard of minutes of a meeting of the CAR national security council held on 30 October 2013, in which it was mentioned that in light of the nature of weapons used during the attack on Bouar, namely heavy weapons, rockets, and other military materiel, it was not Anti-Balaka, as suggested by media, but rather career soldiers from the FACA and PG, estimated at about 80.³⁸⁶³

1450. P-0884 knew Adamou Ndale, Bouar ComZone, but got to know him after December 2013.³⁸⁶⁴ Regarding what happened in Bouar, they ('we') were informed over the radio, Radio Ndeke Luka, RFI, and information circulating amongst the public.³⁸⁶⁵

1451. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that there were attacks in Bouar, but he did not recall when, it was before 5 December 2013.³⁸⁶⁶ They followed closely what was happening in Bangui and the hinterland.³⁸⁶⁷ Later, the ComZone in Bouar defected from the movement because he had asked the national coordination for materiel and money but did not get anything.³⁸⁶⁸

1452. Jean-Jacques Demafouth heard that the military camp at Bouar came under attack and that certain convoys were attacked while travelling.³⁸⁶⁹ It was mostly the FACA soldiers who were in the Anti-Balaka who conducted that operation, because they targeted Camp Leclerc and other military targets only; at the time, the intelligence was that the military camp had been attacked by soldiers because they knew the various positions within the camp.³⁸⁷⁰ The witness confirmed that Mokom was in charge of the Anti-Balaka at that time in that region, but he did not recall the names of the soldiers whom he used.³⁸⁷¹

1453. P-2673 testified, asked if the fighting for Bouar was finished on 31 October 2013, that it was ongoing; in Bouar, mainly Christian civilians were doing the fighting and needed the military to reinforce them.³⁸⁷² P-2673 confirmed that he heard that many FACA had joined in Damara on 29 November 2013.³⁸⁷³ P-2673 did not know who organised the event at which the FACA joined in Damara.³⁸⁷⁴ P-2673 confirmed in relation to other messages he received from Martial Wango that ‘Kangara’, mentioned as awaiting ‘le top’ from, referred to Bozizé, while the message overall referred to soldiers that Mr Ngaïssona had sent to Bouar.³⁸⁷⁵

1454. P-2027 was in contact with Adamou Ndale, who was part of the Beloko group, at the time.³⁸⁷⁶ He stated that Ndale and those from Cantonier joined together organised to attack Bouar; P-2027 met Ndale 4 to 5 months before the attack in Bouar.³⁸⁷⁷

1455. The Chamber further notes a press release published on ‘ohchr.org’ on 8 November 2013, which mentions an attack on Bouar on 26 October 2013 by ‘self-defence militias, known as anti-Balaka’, leading to clashes with the Seleka resulting in the death of at least 20 civilians, while other clashes between the two groups led to unknown number of casualties since September 2013 and the large-scale displacement of the population.³⁸⁷⁸

1457. D30-4848 denied that he would have received real-time, contemporaneous information on the attack in Bouar.³⁸⁷⁹ D30-4848 denied having been out on the terrain to coordinate the situation, he was never in the field or fought as soldier, did not know Vidal Maxi Ngaissio and was not in contact with anyone from the ‘so-called Anti-Balaka’ in Bouar.³⁸⁸⁰ D30-4848 maintained that he was never in Bouar and never set anything up whatsoever, there were rumours because ‘people on the other side’ saw him as somebody very dangerous and needed to get rid of him.³⁸⁸¹

1458. D30-4914 testified that the Bouar group around the Ndale family led many combats in Bouar and the surrounding villages, the fighting in Bouar was intense because it was a Seleka logistical base with weapon stocks.³⁸⁸² There were frequent clashes between the Ndale group and the Seleka when D30-4914 was still in Bangui.³⁸⁸³ D30-4914 had a different modus operandi to the Ndale group and they never cooperated or discussed with the Ndale group.³⁸⁸⁴ D30-4914 considered it ‘absolutely wrong’ that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom would have coordinated things from wherever they were to cause an attack in Bouar.³⁸⁸⁵ D30-4914 did not hear of any failed attack on Bouar in October 2013 which would have been prepared by Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom; when he arrived to Beloko in October, the entire zone was under Seleka control, in a much stronger position.³⁸⁸⁶

1459. The above is not borne out by the other evidence on record. Indeed, as regards Mr Ngaïssona’s alleged involvement in the Bouar attack, the Chamber heard from Joachim Kokaté, P-2673 and P-1847.

1460. Joachim Kokaté testified that Mr Ngaïssona described to him on the phone what they had done during the attack on Bouar; he spoke to the witness about it because they were colleagues in government.³⁸⁸⁷ He said that Mr Ngaïssona told him that he had organised the attack on Bouar, but that there was a logistics problem that cropped up and that things were not completely in place, and that is how the Seleka fighters took back Bouar.³⁸⁸⁸

1461. P-2673 stated that while he did not see Mr Ngaïssona speak to the Anti-Balaka in Bouar, Bossangoa, Bouca, or giving money to them, P-2673 was in contact with those in Bouar, Bouca who said it was Mr Ngaïssona who sent the money.³⁸⁸⁹

1462. The Chamber also recalls its discussion regarding P-1847's prior recorded testimony introduced pursuant to Rule 68(2)(d) of the Rules.³⁸⁹⁰ P-1847 stated that Ndale, the Bouar ComZone, had confirmed to him that the attack on Bouar, which was a Seleka base, was prepared following the instructions of Bernard Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona, after their meeting in Yaoundé.³⁸⁹¹ According to P-1847, Mr Ngaïssona was certainly also informed of the attack in Bouar, he was with Mokom father and they supported the fighters at the border; P-1847 could not say if Mr Ngaïssona financed them, but before their divide, Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona were very close.³⁸⁹² P-1847 thought Mr Ngaïssona was aware of the attack in Bouar because he was in constant communication with Godonam and Ndale.³⁸⁹³ Ndale coordinated the attack in Bouar, which P-1847 thought took place before the 5 December 2013 attack.³⁸⁹⁴ Godonam told him several Anti-Balaka were injured; the Anti-Balaka moved towards the Bokaranga route and Ndale told P-1847 that he had tried in vain to reach Mokom father to receive financial means to take care of the injured.³⁸⁹⁵

1463. Bearing in mind the above, the Chamber finds not credible P-1847's claim in court that his prior statement about soldiers preparing to attack Seleka bases in Beloko and up to Bouar under orders of Bernard Mokom, Mr Ngaïssona and Marcelin Yaliminde³⁸⁹⁶ concerned the period 'after' the attack on Bangui in 2013.³⁸⁹⁷ This is especially in light of the witness's indication, given in the same context, that the attacks in Beloko and Bouar were 'somewhere between November and December' 2013, with Bouar taking place 'before' Mr Ngaïssona became coordinator,³⁸⁹⁸ as well as the other evidence as outlined above, which dates the attack in Bouar in late October 2013.

1464. In the same vein, the Chamber notes P-1847's suggestion that his prior statement according to which Ndale told him he was preparing the Bouar attack on instructions of Bernard Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona following a meeting in Yaoundé³⁸⁹⁹ involves 'some small points of confusion'. In the view of the Chamber, and especially considering the witness's attempted explanation for this 'confusion' and the sources of his information, P-1847's evidence indicates that Bernard Mokom, Marcelin Yaliminde, Ndale and François Bozizé were involved in the planning and execution of this attack.³⁹⁰⁰

1465. The Chamber further notes its discussion of the evidence showing that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom travelled to the Cameroon-CAR border with a view to liaising with the groups led by Achille and Ndale.³⁹⁰¹

1466. Bearing in mind the evidence outlined above, the Chamber considers without merit the arguments of the Ngaïssona Defence in relation to Mr Ngaïssona's role in advance of the Bouar attack. Indeed, D30-4914's generalised claim that it is 'absolutely wrong' that Mr Ngaïssona or Bernard Mokom would have coordinated the attack on the basis of them being civilians is inconsequential. Involvement in preparations of an attack in a coordinating role is not excluded by mere virtue of the fact of someone not having a military role or background. Further, the Chamber's conclusions in this regard are based on witnesses with knowledge of the events, rather than solely Facebook messages and witnesses' comments thereon.

1467. Having regard to the above, the Chamber finds that the Anti-Balaka attacked Bouar in late October 2013. Mr Ngaïssona was involved in liaising with the groups executing the attack beforehand, and then informed of this attack.

1468. In their further advance towards Bangui, Anti-Balaka groups reached Boali by December 2013. Boali is located approximately halfway between Bossembélé and Bangui on the Bossembélé-Bangui axis.³⁹⁰²

1469. Nicolas Tiangaye commented on the video footage showing Peuhl victims allegedly of the Boali attack, stating that the events happened on the same day as he went to Paris, the Anti-Balaka had attacked Peuhl Muslims in Boali and Michel Djotodia absolutely wanted Nicolas Tiangaye to visit them.³⁹⁰³ Nicolas Tiangaye talked to some of the victims he saw that day; they told him that they had been attacked; they did not identify the attackers, but it was clear that the attack could only have been carried out by the Anti-Balaka, because he could not imagine the Seleka attacking Peuhl Muslims.³⁹⁰⁴

1470. The Chamber notes that the video footage shows the visit of Nicolas Tiangaye, then-prime minister of the CAR, to individuals, mainly women and children, with bandaged wounds on their heads and/or limbs.³⁹⁰⁵ Another video shows Michel Djotodia visiting the victims, clearly outraged, stating that this is 'pré-génocide', and insisting that the prime minister be found to also see what is happening.³⁹⁰⁶

1471. Several journalists also visited the victims. P-2377 stated that before 5 December 2013, he visited Peuhl victims in the Bangui community hospital which he thought were injured by Anti-Balaka, and he mainly saw machete injuries to the head and men with cuts to the feet.³⁹⁰⁷ Similarly, P-1576 stated that on 3 December 2013 in Bangui they were informed that some Peuhls children had been injured during an attack on their village by the Anti-Balaka, and they were brought to a military barracks to be seen by journalists, a UN investigator and the government authorities before being brought to the hospital.³⁹⁰⁸ P-1576 thought this was a propaganda stunt by the Seleka government, and confirmed that while the children were clearly injured, he was not able to check the veracity of the allegations.³⁹⁰⁹

1472. Another journalist, Michaël Zumstein, travelled on the road to Sibut, a town 100 kilometres from Bangui, on 1 December 2013 and saw a convoy of three Seleka vehicles going in direction of Sibut, with the Seleka all nervous.³⁹¹⁰ Having seen around five wounded Peuhl children at a hospital in Bangui who, they were told, had come from Boali where they were attacked by ‘Christians’,³⁹¹¹ Michaël Zumstein went to Boali; on the road from Bangui to Boali on 4 December 2013, they met both Muslims and Christians, all fearing inter-communitarian violence; for example, they met a Christian at PK47 and met the Muslim community in Bougoula.³⁹¹² The witness stated that, when he returned to Bougoula a month later, there were ‘no Muslims left’; near Bougoula, further down the road to Boali, they met a fleeing Christian, pushing a cart with his families’ belongings, who told them that they had been attacked by Peuhl.³⁹¹³ Michaël Zumstein found several destroyed houses in Boali; they were told that they belonged to Christians; whilst at the Boali mosque, ‘Muslim men’ armed with bows and arrows and machetes were gathered to protect the mosque, fearing that the mosque would be destroyed if they did not guard it.³⁹¹⁴ including some Peuhls armed with homemade bows and arrows and bladed weapons such as knives.³⁹¹⁶ According to what P-2546 knew at the time, the Seleka in Boali were CAR Goula, including some Peuhls, and the non-CAR mercenary branch.³⁹¹⁷ P-2546 said that there had been killings of Peuhls on the outskirts of Boali, which caused tension, and the general Boali population was accused by the Seleka of hiding the Anti-Balaka, putting an ultimatum to identify the Anti-Balaka and people who were hiding them.³⁹¹⁸ According to P-2546, the Seleka used the name 'Anti-Balaka' because the young men who had organised themselves into a group called themselves Anti-Balaka.³⁹¹⁹ P-2546 said that the 'several hundred' Christians who had sought refuge at the church in Boali eventually went back home.³⁹²⁰ The next day, P-2546 learned a 'boy' nicknamed 'Young Man' had been killed by the Seleka because he was believed to be the Anti-Balaka leader in the area, there was general talk that the Seleka suspected him of being Anti-Balaka because he kept on disappearing and re-appearing, and the Seleka thought he was going to the bush to pass information.³⁹²¹ P-2546 went to Bangui and sometime after the 5 December 2013 incident in Bangui saw on France 24 that the situation in Boali had gotten worse and some Peuhls had been killed; the parish priest of Boali, Abbé Arnold Xavier Fagba, also spoke on France 24 and Afrique 24 and said he had taken in some Peuhls and had to stand between them and the Anti-Balaka to stop the Peuhls from being killed.³⁹²²

1474.P-0567 said that on 3 December 2013, five men were killed by the Seleka in Boali, and the Seleka systematically and mostly targeted males considered to have ties to the Anti-Balaka, while the Anti-Balaka killed Muslims indiscriminately.³⁹²³

1475.P-1847 testified he was informed about attacks by his cousin Dedane who coordinated issues around Bossembélé, Bossangoa, and P-1847 confirmed the Boali attack as well, which was rather serious on the Peuhl and the Muslims, so the prime minister had to go there to see what to do.³⁹²⁴ He indicated that Dedane called him to confirm that his group and that of Andjilo had attacked Boali, the Peuhl, and that they had inflicted some damage, there were a few excesses and violence, and shortly thereafter it was announced on France 24 and RFI.³⁹²⁵ P-1847 denied the question whether his knowledge of any crimes that might have been committed by Anti-Balaka went beyond the information he received from public media.³⁹²⁶

1476. In addition to the news in Boali being in the public sphere, the Chamber notes that Mr Ngaïssona was directly informed of Anti-Balaka activities in Boali. In an email of 4 December 2013 sent by ‘Dieudonne Dounia-Ngaba’, the sender mentions that the day before, Anti-Balaka killed 15 Seleka at Boali.³⁹²⁷

1477. P-0965 stated that when the Anti-Balaka descended to Bangui, they took different routes, some came on the Mbaïki road, some on the Damara road, and others came from the Boali road; on the way, they attacked Muslims, including in Boali where also Muslim children were killed.³⁹²⁸ On the Mbaïki road, the leader was ‘Rhambot’, on the Damara road people came from several directions, Bouca, Damara and others; Andjilo also came from Bouca.³⁹²⁹

1478. P-1577 travelled to Boali on 22 and 26 January 2014.³⁹³⁰ There, he found a mixed group of Muslims and Peuhls who were being taken care of by a Catholic priest.³⁹³¹ It was clear from his discussions with them that these people had been there for a few weeks prior to the date, seeking sanctuary from the Anti-Balaka.³⁹³² On the way to Boali, P-1577 came across checkpoints manned by self-identified Anti-Balaka.³⁹³³

1480. Having regard to the above, the Chamber finds that the Anti-Balaka attacked Boali, resulting in the killing of Muslim civilians, especially the Peuhl, and fleeing of these populations to other locations. This attack was widely covered by the media. Mr Ngaïssona was directly informed of this attack and the involvement of the Anti-Balaka in 'killing the Seleka'.

iv. Other general information on hostilities during advance

1481. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined below shows that information on the advance of Anti-Balaka groups towards Bangui, and hostilities they engaged in the course of this advance was generally known and available.

1482. P-1847 thought that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom were informed of the attacks in the area Bossembélé, Ndjo, Bouca, Bossangoa.³⁹³⁶ He stated that Andjilo was very mobile in that zone; Dedane, Bama Clément and Florent Kema were the leaders that coordinated this zone; the attacks in Ndjo and Bossembélé were coordinated by Dedane and Kema, the attacks in Damara and Bouca were coordinated by Andjilo.³⁹³⁷

1483. P-0884 testified that he was aware of attacks in Bouar (26 October 2013), Bossembélé (end October 2013, 5 December 2013), Beloko (November 2013), Boali (2 December 2013),

Yaloké and Gaga (October 2013) from the radio and by the print media; everyone was informed, all Central Africans were aware.³⁹³⁸

1484. P-2673 stated that Mr Ngaïssona was involved with the Anti-Balaka in Bouar, Bossangoa and Bouca; he wanted to be a leader, the goal of his group was also to take power.³⁹³⁹ P-2673 heard that if they took power, Bozizé would be president; Mr Ngaïssona was always in contact with Bozizé and Mokom father.³⁹⁴⁰ P-2673 did not recall the date, but insisted that Mr Ngaïssona was in contact with the Anti-Balaka of Bouar, Bossangoa, Bouca, when he arrived in Bangui, they were together, in contact with each other.³⁹⁴¹ P-2673 did not see Mr Ngaïssona speaking to Anti-Balaka in Bouar, Bossangoa, Bouca, but those in Bouar, Bouca said it was Mr Ngaïssona who sent the money.³⁹⁴² P-2673 thought the Anti-Balaka fought in Baoro and Yaloké, he thought it was civilians, not the military; he did not have contact with anyone in these locations.³⁹⁴³ P-2673 also heard about attacks on Bossempaté and Bossembélé.³⁹⁴⁴

1485. P-2027 stated that the Anti-Balaka groups attacked Bouar, Yaloké, Baoro, Boda, Damara, Bossembélé, Bossempaté, Cantonier, maybe even Berbérati.³⁹⁴⁵

1486. Nicolas Tiangaye explained that the CAR government at the time was aware of non-Muslims organising in a self-defence movement which then also formed a political direction for their coordination, with a structure in place by 30 October 2013, leaders in various zones and some coordination between the various groups, based on the witness's various sources which included elements from the army, gendarmerie, police, FOMAC.³⁹⁴⁶

1487. Adrien Poussou testified that in the public opinion, François Bozizé was considered responsible for attacks like in Benzambé, Bossangoa, Lere, because he and his entourage were seen as instrumentalising, organising, and launching groups to carry out attacks against

Muslims, in addition to calls by FROCCA to defend the country, which could not be done with pieces of wood or words.³⁹⁴⁷ Mr Ngaïssona was someone close to François Bozizé and his inner circle.³⁹⁴⁸ At the time of Adrien Poussou's phone call with Mr Ngaïssona around 30 November 2013 when Adrien Poussou had been appointed minister in the Djotodia administration,³⁹⁴⁹ they knew that the Anti-Balaka were in the regions of Bossangoa in the north, in the Lobaye, in the south close to Bangui, and they also knew that many former FACA and PG had crossed the river and were in Zongo; information about various Anti-Balaka positions was in the public domain since every time the Anti-Balaka attacked or there were clashes, the press talked about it.³⁹⁵⁰

1488. Indeed, several witnesses mentioned being aware of the Anti-Balaka's progression towards Bangui and attacking various locations in that context through media reporting.³⁹⁵¹ Also Stéphane Chrisostome Dawili confirmed that he was aware of the Anti-Balaka coming from Bossangoa killing Muslim civilians on the way down from Bossangoa into Bangui, and confirmed that Muslims in Mbaïki thought they had come to kill them because they had heard about the Anti-Balaka doing the same thing in Bossangoa.³⁹⁵²

1489. The Chamber notes in this regard that various media reported contemporaneously about attacks and clashes in Bossangoa and its surroundings.³⁹⁵³ Further, it recalls the emails exchanged between Mr Ngaïssona and Alfred Legrand Ngaya in September 2013 refer to the situation in Bossangoa, Bouca and other places.³⁹⁵⁴ In the same month, the French president at the time, François Hollande, asked the UN General Assembly to give mandate to an African force to restore security in the CAR, in light of the situation in the country at the time.³⁹⁵⁵ Also Nicolas Tiangaye, then-prime minister of the CAR, referred to the violence in Bossangoa and surrounding areas when addressing the UN General Assembly in September 2013.³⁹⁵⁶

1490. P-2673 stated that he heard from a colleague who was in Bossangoa at the time that the Anti-Balaka were moving from Bossangoa.³⁹⁵⁷ In a similar vein, P-2841 explained that he had information from Prince Lakouetene and Doguela, who had information on the ground, that the Anti-Balaka had already taken a number of towns from the Seleka as they advanced and that the entire country and particularly Bangui had been marked out for an attack, by taking towns one by one, Seleka had to fall back to Bangui mostly and as the Anti-Balaka were moving closer to Bangui, they tried to surround most of the town.³⁹⁵⁸

1491. For his part, Bi Bouba Waziri Housseni sent letters to the CAR and international authorities in September and October 2013 with details on events in Djöbe, Bouca, Bossangoa, Benzambé, Koro-M'Poko, Djöh, Kana, Angouara and Oumara, specifically pointing out the victimisation of Peuhls.³⁹⁵⁹

1492. The CAR Panel concluded in its 2014 interim report that the armed insurgency against the Seleka spread into the districts of Bouca (Ouham), Boali, Bossembélé and Bossemptélé (Ombella-M'Poko) following 'coordinated attacks' in the outskirts of Bossangoa on 6 and 7 September 2013 by militia then described by media as 'pro-Bozizé armed men'.³⁹⁶⁰ An NGO report of May 2014 concluded that 'the Anti-Balaka led their first successful attacks in September and October 2013 on small trade towns and villages outside Bossangoa and other regional capitals in the west', with their primary target being Muslim communities that they identified as allies or members of the Seleka because some Seleka were Muslim.³⁹⁶¹

However, the Chamber has not assessed this item on its own, but in the context of its holistic assessment of all the evidence before it. Therefore, while this statement by itself may not be conclusive as regards the allegations presented by the Prosecution, it has certain probative value when assessed in the context of other evidence.

1493. In the above context, the Chamber consider of lesser significance the assessment of P-2467, who opined that in November 2013, the Anti-Balaka as active group committing acts of violence against Muslims was an ‘emerging phenomenon’ and people closely following such things were aware of it, but it was not necessarily common knowledge all around.³⁹⁶² While P-2467 had seen some press articles on Anti-Balaka violence against Muslims prior to his arrival in the CAR on 30 October 2013, few, if any, of these reports had already been verified by credible organisations.³⁹⁶³ P-2467 did not know if he saw local (CAR) reports on Anti-Balaka violence against Muslims in November 2013.³⁹⁶⁴ Yet, P-2467 himself published information on social media in November 2013 on clashes between Seleka and Anti-Balaka groups, attacks of Seleka against non-Muslim civilians and attacks of Anti-Balaka against Muslim civilians.³⁹⁶⁵

1494. On the basis of this evidence, and further considering Mr Yekatom’s own involvement in coordinating his own group’s advance through the provinces towards Bangui for purposes of the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013,³⁹⁶⁶ the Chamber finds that Mr Yekatom knew of the advance of the Anti-Balaka groups through the provinces towards Bangui, including the hostilities, as well as killings and dislocation of Muslim civilians, taking place in this context.

7. Anti-Balaka in the aftermath of the attacks on 5 December 2013

activities related to the Anti-Balaka, and continued liaising with various individuals in this regard.

i. Lead-up to the resignation of Michel Djotodia

1496. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that following the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013 and with the removal of Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power in reach, various individuals engaged in efforts to re-consolidate Anti-Balaka groups with a view to finally achieving this goal of removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka, and strengthen their position in what would inevitably follow from such change in power.

a. Meetings at Yamwara school at the end of December 2013

1497. In this context, the Yekatom Defence argues that, contrary to the Prosecution's assertions, the evidence does not show that the various Anti-Balaka groups were 'unified, structured, and ideologically homogenous'.³⁹⁶⁷ In support of this argument, the Yekatom Defence submits that P-0876 engaged in various coordination attempts directly before and in the aftermath of the Bangui Attack, through meetings with Thierry Lebene's group and meetings with the 'RFACPP' and then also others at the base of Mr Yekatom's group in a school in Yamwara (hereinafter: 'Yamwara').³⁹⁶⁸

³⁹⁶⁷ Yekatom Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2737-Corr-Red, para. 167; see also paras 168-175.

³⁹⁶⁸ Yekatom Defence Closing Brief, ICC-01/14-01/18-2737-Conf-Corr, paras 176-184. The Chamber notes that 'Yamwara school' is also called Kokoro 2 (see P-1990 Statement, CAR-OTP-2124-0247-R02, at 0250, para. 15), and that some witnesses used variations of the name to refer to this school, including 'Yanwara', 'Yawara', 'Niawara' or 'Gnawara' (see e.g. P-1647 Statement, CAR-OTP-2050-0654-R02, at 0658, para. 28; P-1654 Statement, CAR-OTP-2053-0112-R04, at 0116, para. 28; P-1858 Statement, CAR-OTP-2063-0050-R04, at 0056, para. 39; P-0888 Statement, CAR-OTP-2031-0217-R03, at 0222, para. 33; P-1558 Statement, CAR-OTP-2105-0195-R01, at 0210, para. 117; P-0974 Statement, CAR-OTP-2058-0165-R01, at 0175, para. 66; P-0876 Interview Transcript, CAR-OTP-2046-0267-R01, at 0289, lines 829-835; P-0954 Statement, CAR-OTP-2048-0171-R03, at 0176, para. 31). It is clear from context that these witnesses referred to the same location, namely Yamwara, located at the south-western side of the Bangui airport (see Map, CAR-OTP-2118-9146). For a further discussion of this school being used as base by Mr Yekatom's group, see also sections IV.D.1 and IV.D.2 below.

1499. The Chamber finds that the meetings attest to the emerging individual political ambitions of the various Anti-Balaka group leaders following the Bangui Attack. They also show that, at this time, not every Anti-Balaka leader may have had a sustained interest in supporting the return of François Bozizé to power. At the same time, the Chamber considers that the meetings do not attest to a divided movement or separately existing movements. Rather, the meetings show attempts at pivoting the Anti-Balaka's combined force towards securing political leverage and, in some cases, ministerial positions in a potential future government.

1500. Turning to the evidence concerning the meetings at Yamwara, the Chamber notes that Mr Yekatom, Ngremangou and Kamezolaï attended all or some of these meetings, while P-1858, P-0876, P-0954, P-0974, and P-0884 had information thereon.³⁹⁶⁹

1501. P-1858 recalled several visits between 6 and 30 December 2013 by Mbomon to 'Rombhot' at Yamwara, where P-1858 himself was not present.³⁹⁷⁰ P-1858 also recalled visits by 'Leopold Bara-Dessi' to their base from time to time, as well as meetings between Mbomon and the Sangaris to discuss the security of the area, especially between their elements and the Seleka elements of Colonel Moussa at PK9.³⁹⁷¹ According to P-1858, it was decided to have meetings at Yamwara to unify and coordinate the Anti-Balaka 'movement' as there was no communication and coordination between Mbomon's group and other Anti-Balaka groups before the attack of 5 December 2013.³⁹⁷² P-1858 recalled that 'Leopold Bara-Dessi', who was in contact with the international community and called for these meetings at Yamwara, later became responsible for the 'political branch of the Anti-Balaka'.³⁹⁷³

1502. P-0876 recalled eight or nine meetings between November and December 2013 with the 'various strains' of the Anti-Balaka in Bangui and at least four meetings during this period at Yamwara.³⁹⁷⁴ As regards the meetings at Yamwara, P-0876 recalled a first introductory meeting,³⁹⁷⁵ followed by a meeting to set up a committee ('le Bureau') where 12 demands of the Anti-Balaka were also discussed and at which Ngremangou was present,³⁹⁷⁶ a third meeting at which Ngremangou withdrew, having spoken to Bozizé in the meantime,³⁹⁷⁷ and a fourth, where they said that they were going to engage with the international community regardless.³⁹⁷⁸ The Chamber has considered these meetings in turn below.

1503. The Chamber notes that P-0974 and P-0954 recalled a meeting at Yamwara together with 'zone commanders' coming from Boy-Rabe, Boeing, and other parts of Bangui, including Kamezoulai, Ngremangou, and Mr Yekatom. The witnesses are unclear on the exact date of this first meeting, but recall it taking place between 27 and 30 December 2013.

1504. P-0974 testified that he shared information concerning the zones commanded by each person and discussed strategies with other 'zone commanders', such as from Combattants, and started talking to one another by phone from different areas: Boy-Rabe, Boeing and Gobongo.³⁹⁷⁹ In the last week of December, they decided that all commanders should meet; two to three per zone coming from Boy-Rabe, Damala, Boeing met at Yamwara, and others present were 'Kamezoulai' (chief of 'Niawara' base), Ngremangou (chief of Boeing-Bercail base), Mr Yekatom (chief of Bimbo area), and Léopold Bara, who they nominated to be their civilian spokesperson to talk to the media.³⁹⁸⁰

take the name of ‘FRAPPE’, which Mr Yekatom and his staff at first accepted, but during the meeting on 27 December 2013, the idea was dropped and they ‘became Anti-Balaka’.³⁹⁸²

1506. P-0876 described how he approached the group led by Kamezolaï, Mr Yekatom and Donon based at Yamwara with a view to setting up a bureau and engaging with the international community, as this group was against the return of François Bozizé to power.³⁹⁸³ He said that Kamezolaï stated they were not ‘fighting for Bozizé’, but to ‘defend’ their population, with Mr Yekatom adding that ‘Bozizé’ got them into ‘this situation’.³⁹⁸⁴ P-0876 seemed to suggest that there was a first meeting, without Charles Ngremangou, at which a ‘bureau’ was set up with Léopold Bara as political coordinator/spokesperson.³⁹⁸⁵

1507. P-0876 said that the next day, another meeting was held with Ngremangou, a new ‘bureau’ was set up, with Léopold Bara holding the same position, Kamezolaï as chief of general staff, and Ngremangou as chief of operations.³⁹⁸⁶ They discussed the idea of having a political structure to discuss with the international community, present conditions on Michel Djotodia’s departure without going to war, and they took this ‘positively’ because in reality they did not have sufficient weaponry and ammunition to go to war unless, from time to time, the Seleka sold their arms and ammunition, which they used to defend themselves.³⁹⁸⁷ P-0876 said that Léopold Bara suggested that they could work with the name ‘FRAP’ to differentiate from the Anti-Balaka because their objective was not the same, but in the end, since the Anti-Balaka were more, they were obliged to stay under the banner of the Anti-Balaka, including the internal divisions.³⁹⁸⁸

1508. P-1858 recalled a meeting having taken place on 30 December 2013 with the objective to create a structure for the Anti-Balaka, as there were many Anti-Balaka groups scattered everywhere and they needed to have a unified structure with one chief; ‘Bara-Dessi’ had argued that if they remained scattered and dispersed they would be considered as gangs by the people and the international community; this was the reason why FRAPPE joined the Anti-Balaka.³⁹⁸⁹ P-1858 agreed with the suggestion that the objective of the people at the first meeting was to obtain the departure of Djotodia and mercenaries and leave people with the choice to ‘choose a new president’.³⁹⁹⁰ He further agreed with the suggestion that Bara’s attempt to unify was not successful.³⁹⁹¹

1509. The evidence indicates that attendees at this meeting included Kamezolai, Ngremangou, Mr Yekatom, Donon, Cœur de Lion, Wenezoui, Kome (a civilian Anti-Balaka chief), Léopold Bara, Yamodo Momokama, Habib Beina, Kengwa, Basile Mbomon, Paulin Mossio, Julius Ymby, Maurice Badha and others.³⁹⁹² P-0974 said that in reality, the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka group was Joachim Kokaté and his deputy was Léopold Bara, who was the spokesperson and had contacts through the national and international press, while Ngremangou was coordinator of the Anti-Balaka and Kamezalai his deputy.³⁹⁹³

1510. As regards the decisions taken at this meeting, P-0954 agreed with the suggestion that Bara organised the meetings at Yamwara and became political spokesperson of the Anti-Balaka ‘south’ because he had contacts with the international community.³⁹⁹⁴ P-0954 stated that during the meeting they also appointed Kamezalai as chief of staff, Ngremangou as deputy chief of staff, and decided to change the name to the group to ‘Anti-Balaka’, with

Mr Yekatom also bringing up enforcement of discipline and suggesting to discuss rankings, because if Djotodia lost power, they would have to ‘take over with a rank structure’.³⁹⁹⁵

1511. P-1858 similarly recalled that it was decided that Kamezulai would be ‘the military leader’ with Ngremangou as his deputy, and ‘Bara-Dessi’, who coordinated all the groups and organised the two meetings, ‘the political leader’ to continue dialogue with the international community.³⁹⁹⁶ P-0974 stated that Kamezoulai and Ngremangou were most senior and they respected them; they led this first meeting.³⁹⁹⁷ P-0876 testified that the first bureau set up at Yamwara was made up of Kamezulai, Ngremangou, Bara, Paulin Mossio, Ymby Gouga, Caroline Deboulet, Dib Lina and pastor Maurice Badha.³⁹⁹⁸

1512. One of the points of discussion, and disagreement, at this meeting appears to have centred around the question whether François Bozizé should return to power. P-0954 recalled Ngremangou raising the issue of ‘restoring constitutional order’ and Mr Yekatom said if they took power, they should ‘destroy all the FACA’ who did not participate in the movement, while P-0954 said the power needed to be given back to the Central African people, killing people was not good.³⁹⁹⁹ P-0954 agreed with the suggestion that one of the objectives of the meetings was to try to convince the ‘others’ to drop ‘the idea of returning to the constitutional order’ and rather follow the ‘south’ group in cooperating with the international community to call for Djotodia’s departure.⁴⁰⁰⁰ P-0974 agreed with the suggestion that the ‘south’ group did not want François Bozizé’s return to power but wanted the people to choose the president democratically.⁴⁰⁰¹

1513. Further, P-0974 recalled that they talked about their objectives and their message was that they did not want to organise ‘a coup’, they wanted Michel Djotodia to resign, ‘free the CAR population’, and ‘force the mercenaries to leave’.⁴⁰⁰² P-0974 said that they decided on 12 demands in total, the first being that ‘Djotodia must resign’, that the Seleka ‘go home’, and they asked ‘Bara’ to present these demands to the MISCA.⁴⁰⁰³ P-1858 agreed with the suggestion that the main demands among the 12 which Léopold Bara eventually presented in N’Djamena included ‘return to peace’, ‘democratic choice’ of a new president, ‘departure of Djotodia and the mercenaries through a dialogue’, ‘cooperation with the international community’ to bring peace, and that the Seleka ‘not continue with tyranny’.⁴⁰⁰⁴ P-0876 also said that Léopold Bara drafted the ‘12 demands’ of the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁰⁰⁵

1514. P-0884 said that at a meeting at Yamwara ‘between the military and the Anti-Balaka’, they discussed choosing someone in case they got back into power and the question was ‘who would be president’, to which some said to choose Ngremangou or Kamezolari, but there was no consensus and no real outcome.⁴⁰⁰⁶ While P-0884 did not seem to recall a meeting at Yamwara on 27 December 2013, he said that Mr Yekatom was indeed saying at the time that their fight was not to get François Bozizé back to power, but the aim was for Djotodia and ‘his mercenaries’ to leave.⁴⁰⁰⁷ According to P-0884, the groups were between Mr Yekatom and some others who wanted Kamezolari to become president, and another wanted Ngremangou, but they were unable to agree and the meeting finished without answer.⁴⁰⁰⁸ P-0884 confirmed that ‘Bara’ tried to create a coordination during this meeting in Boeing.⁴⁰⁰⁹

1515. Further, according to P-0876, they all introduced themselves with their ethnic groups and they came from several groups.⁴⁰¹⁰

1516. P-0954 said that Wenezoui did not accept Léopold Bara as the choice of spokesperson, and the meeting ended around 15:00 without further strategic discussions.⁴⁰¹¹

1517. Another meeting at Yamwara took place in the morning of 31 December 2013,⁴⁰¹² and shows how the previous discussion evolved into an express disagreement about François Bozizé's return to power and assignment of leadership positions within this Anti-Balaka group.

1518. Before this meeting was held, P-0954 described how Ngremangou called Kamezolaï in the eve of the first and informed him that the choice had not been accepted by the outside, and that constitutional order had to be restored, meaning bringing François Bozizé back to power, but Kamezolaï refused.⁴⁰¹³ P-0954 said that they pressured Ngremangou who eventually said that 'Bozizé' had called him, and this was the split in the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁰¹⁴ Similarly, P-0876 said that in the morning following this meeting, Ngremangou called to inform that he had talked to 'the sun', who did not agree, so Ngremangou could not identify with the bureau.⁴⁰¹⁵

1519. The evidence indicates that at this meeting all the persons listed for the earlier meeting were also present and included Mr Yekatom, Cœur de Lion, Kome, Donon, Léopold Bara, Ngremangou, Wenezoui, Ndotoy, Modibo, Yangana, Sylvain Beorofei, Come Hippolyte Azoumi (from Boy-Rabe), Yamodo (aka Rombot), Sylvestre Yagouzou and Mamadou Guiyegba.⁴⁰¹⁶ There were far more people in attendance at the meeting of 31 December 2013.⁴⁰¹⁷

1520. P-0954 stated that the main agenda topic of this meeting was the call Ngremangou made to Kamezolaï, with the latter explaining the call and people in the meeting being angry.⁴⁰¹⁸ According to P-0954, this was the split of the Anti-Balaka into 'south', which included Mr Yekatom, Cœur de Lion, Kamezolaï, Bara, Mamadou and himself, who wanted a new government, and 'north', which wanted to 'restore the constitutional order' – meaning

François Bozizé's return to power –, and included Wenezoui, Kome, Donoh, Ngremangou and Yamodo.⁴⁰¹⁹ P-0954 said that Kamezolai continued to be chief of staff of the Anti-Balaka 'south' until the wings joined forces again in June 2014.⁴⁰²⁰ P-0954 stated that Maxime Mokom went to the 'north' Anti-Balaka when he returned to Bangui from Zongo, and also in the 'north' Anti-Balaka were Andjilo, Mazimbele Guy, 12 Puissances, Dieudonné Houronti, and Konaté.⁴⁰²¹ P-0954 agreed with the suggestion that when they appointed Sebastien Wenezoui as head of the Anti-Balaka 'south', they used the name 'Anti-Balaka'.⁴⁰²²

1521. Similarly, P-1858 stated that the 'Boy-Rabe Anti-Balaka', the Anti-Balaka from Boeing, Combattants, as well as Ngremangou and Mokom were Bozizé supporters and wanted his return, and did not want Kamezolai to be their coordinator, even though 'Bara-Dessi' told them that François Bozizé would not be accepted by the international community and attempted to change their minds.⁴⁰²³ P-1858 confirmed the suggestion that the group including Mr Yekatom, Paulin Mossio, Basile Mbomon, Kamezolai, Léopold Bara and others, was against the return of François Bozizé to power.⁴⁰²⁴

1522. P-0974 stated that following the meeting at Yamwara deciding on a coordination, he heard from Bara that the 'Boy-Rabe Anti-Balaka groups' had rejected the coordination structure entirely, yet they decided to keep working with this coordination as they did not think one group should decide for everyone else.⁴⁰²⁵ P-0974 testified that, at this meeting, they all agreed to continue with the coordination office whose chief was Kamezolai.⁴⁰²⁶ P-0974 said that there were several groups and leaders in Boy-Rabe, including Konaté, Andjilo, 12 Puissances, that the 'Boeing-Bercail group' under Ngremangou joined the 'Boy-Rabe group', and that 'Niawara', 'Bimbo' and 'Damala' stayed together and continued to have meetings.⁴⁰²⁷ P-0974 emphasised that to them, Kamezolai was their chief and they referred to themselves as ‘coordination south’, while the ‘Boy-Rabe group’ was more ‘complicated’ and not in favour of mediation.⁴⁰²⁸

1523. P-0876 stated that when Ngremangou said that he could not accept the ‘bureau’, it was over, and he with the group of Kamezolai and Mr Yekatom set up another bureau in which Léopold Bara was again the political spokesperson, Kamezolai chief of staff, and also Côme Azounou and Konaté ‘from the other side’.⁴⁰²⁹

1524. P-1858 recalled that during this second meeting, ‘Bozizé’ was in phone contact with Sylvain Beorofei, who had to go out to take a call and on return said that ‘General Bozizé’ had called him.⁴⁰³⁰

1525. P-0954 further stated that thereafter, at the time of the N’Djamena meeting in January 2014, General Mokoko phoned and said a plane was sent for Léopold Bara to ‘defend the cause of the Anti-Balaka’, and Bara then took the 12 demands of the ‘south’ Anti-Balaka group to N’Djamena.⁴⁰³¹ Similarly, P-0974 stated that MISCA took note of their meeting and later chose Bara, Banda (a civilian advisor) and Kokaté to represent them at the N’Djamena summit.⁴⁰³²

1526. The evidence as outlined attests to the emerging individual political ambitions of the various Anti-Balaka group leaders following the Bangui Attack and that, at this time, not every Anti-Balaka leader may have had a sustained interest in supporting the return of François Bozizé to power. At the same time, the Chamber considers that the meetings do not attest to a divided movement or separately existing movements. Importantly, the Chamber is of the view that the various Anti-Balaka groups did not have to be a monolithic or singular entity and/or ideologically homogeneous at any stage of the events. Indeed, as outlined above, despite apparent political or personal viewpoints and ambitions, the Anti-Balaka groups coordinated their actions around their core objective of removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power. That this was the common core is also amplified by the discussions at the meetings at Yamwara as outlined, which centred around what would happen once this core objective would have been achieved – and indeed did not question it as common baseline. The Chamber therefore considers that the suggestion that Mr Yekatom’s purported objective was ‘not to fight for Bozizé’s return’⁴⁰³³ does not mean that Mr Yekatom’s group was not Anti-Balaka, or that it did not share the core objective of wanting to remove Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power, including the way in which this objective was pursued and achieved on the ground.

b. Continued liaison by Mr Ngaïssona in the lead-up

1527. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined below further shows that Mr Ngaïssona remained informed of continued activities related to the Anti-Balaka during the period between the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013 and his return to Bangui on 14 January 2014.

1528. Alfred Legrand Ngaya agreed with the suggestion that before and just after the attack on Bangui, the Anti-Balaka did not have any political aims, just wanted to get rid of the Seleka, and said that, after the attack, they had to try and find some ‘point of contact’.⁴⁰³⁴ Alfred Legrand Ngaya said that after the attack, they had a meeting in Boeing, at which he was not present, with Wenezoui, Ngremangou, at which the Anti-Balaka asked Sébastien Wenezoui to be their spokesperson.⁴⁰³⁵ Alfred Legrand Ngaya said that people wanted to position themselves as representative, on a political level, and also Léopold Bara suggested to them he should be one because he had been to the summit in N’Djamena.⁴⁰³⁶ The witness agreed with the suggestion that the absence of leadership and people juggling for positions contributed to the lack of discipline and commission of opportunistic crime.⁴⁰³⁷ The witness further agreed with the suggestion that in December 2013 and beginning 2014, before Mr Ngaïssona arrived, the Anti-Balaka tried to organise slowly and began to shape political demands, they had to get out of the crisis which would not be done if one did not have some degree of organisation, and there were some roughly 50,000 young people with some familiarity of handling weapons.⁴⁰³⁸

1529. The Chamber has before it email exchanges between Alfred Legrand Ngaya and Mr Ngaïssona between the end of December and early January 2014, in which Alfred Legrand Ngaya kept Mr Ngaïssona informed about activities of the ‘CLPC’ or Anti-Balaka in the run-up to the meeting at N’Djamena, and eventually Michel Djotodia’s resignation, followed by Mr Ngaïssona’s return to Bangui.

1530. Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that he transmitted various CLPC documents to Mr Ngaïssona, in the framework of which he worked with Emotion Namsio for persuasion and mobilisation, not military actions.⁴⁰³⁹ One document outlined demands related to them hearing that the Anti-Balaka would not be taken into consideration within the DDR programmes, and one of their demands was that they should.⁴⁰⁴⁰ Alfred Legrand Ngaya recognised a number of emails which he sent to Mr Ngaïssona at the time, explaining that the Seleka targeted them based on ethnicity, and given that François Bozizé was the president-elect, they focused their action towards re-establishing him to the position of president.⁴⁰⁴¹ The witness stated he had exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona because the latter was an influential person in the country and, given they were ‘all in the same basket’, it was ‘necessary at that time to commit oneself to the normalisation process’.⁴⁰⁴²

petits’) which will be subject of possible negotiations, and that Mr Ngaïssona’s reaction on the CLPC demands is expected.⁴⁰⁴³

1532. The first document which appears to have been attached to this email is entitled ‘Communiqué de presse no 01’, dated 27 December 2013, with the typed name of Brice Emotion Namsio at the bottom.⁴⁰⁴⁴ It states that the CLPC, generally called ‘Anti-balaka’ wants to make some points, including that (i) since the start of the hostilities by the nebulous Seleka coalition, composed essentially of Chadian and Sudanese mercenaries, the Central African populations mobilise to oppose and denounce exactions, while MICOPAX helped the Seleka take power; (ii) since March, Michel Djotodia and the Seleka persecute the defenceless population; (iii) in light of the desperate situation, young villagers and some elements of the FACA took their responsibility, without any appropriate means, to fight Michel Djotodia and the Seleka; (iv) the CLPC regrets that during its military operations, there were some innocent victims; (v) the CLPC is available to start a dialogue with the international forces in Bangui to think about conditions for the return to peace and security; (vi) attention of these international institutions is drawn that any attempt to kerfuffle or not take into account the Central African populations ‘meurtries’ over the preceding nine months would only ‘poison’ an already chaotic situation (‘ne fera qu’envenimer une situation déjà chaotique’); (vii) the CLPC remains convinced that only the involvement of true representatives of the Central African population, within the dynamic of inclusive negotiation, could get the CAR out of this cycle of violence (‘implication des véritables représentants de la population centrafricaine, dans une dynamique de négociation inclusive, pourra sortir la République Centrafricaine de cette ornière de violence’).⁴⁰⁴⁵

transitional council (‘Conseil National de Transition’); (ii) the annulment of the constitutional charter and restoration of the constitution of 27 December 2004; (iii) the relaunch of political negotiations on the basis of the Libreville agreements signed in January 2013 and the designation of a neutral person of integrity, agreed on by consensus, to lead the transition; (iv) the transfer of Michel Djotodia and his accomplices to the ICC; (v) the withdrawal of the Chadian contingent of the MISCA; (vi) the disarmament and billeting of all Central African elements of the Seleka, and repatriation of all Chadian and Sudanese ‘Jihadist mercenaries’ to their respective countries; (vii) the rehabilitation and provision of appropriate equipment to FACA; (viii) the return of all exiled Central Africans to the CAR and their rehabilitation, in all rights, and reimbursement for their property looted by the Seleka; (ix) taking charge of all ‘CLPC (Anti-Balaka)’ elements in the DDR programme.⁴⁰⁴⁷

1534. The Chamber notes that these documents appear to show the same font type and style as can be observed in later documents ascribed to the Anti-Balaka. Brice Emotion Namsio explained in this regard that he did not sign the first document, Alfred Ngaya basically signed it, but during the initiatives of this memo, they were at Andjilo’s house because ‘Mr Mokom’ had called and said that if you have to say something, say it on behalf of the CLPC – this document showed the flag of the CAR and when they later used the name Anti-Balaka it was the logical consequence.⁴⁰⁴⁸ As regards the second document, Brice Emotion Namsio stated that he was designated as the spokesperson to review the document when meetings were held, for which reason his name was mentioned, but he had not signed it as it was an initiative; he agreed that the underlying idea of this initiative was to denounce the fact that peaceful demonstrations did not serve any purpose because the state authority was incompetent and did not ensure the security of the citizens.⁴⁰⁴⁹ The witness agreed that they asked for billeting of the ‘Seleka Central African Muslims’ and said that this was to avoid partition of the country, while demanding that Chadian and Sudanese mercenaries should be repatriated.⁴⁰⁵⁰

1535. In an email of 8 January 2014, less than a week before Mr Ngaïssona's return to Bangui, Alfred Legrand Ngaya appeared to send a press release of the 'CNPS' of which, he wrote, 400 copies were distributed in Bangui, with a second press release to follow, of which a copy would also be sent.⁴⁰⁵¹

1536. The Chamber has before it a typed document of the 'Coordination nationale pour la paix et la sécurité en République Centrafricaine (CNPS)', with two date indications of 3 January 2014 and 31 December 2013, providing as reference the telephone number +23672284645 in the footer.⁴⁰⁵² The Chamber notes in this regard that this telephone number also appears on later press statements under the name of Mr Ngaïssona which appear to have been issued for purposes of the Anti-Balaka,⁴⁰⁵³ as well as in the Facebook business record for the account with user name 'CLPC Antibalaka',⁴⁰⁵⁴ connected to the email address 'cantibalaka', operated by Alfred Legrand Ngaya.⁴⁰⁵⁵

1537. The CNPS release denounces inter alia (i) the appointment of illiterate and incompetent Muslims to positions of civilian and military responsibility; (ii) around '5,000' deaths; (iii) burning of villages; (iv) systematic looting across the country; (v) villagers being deprived of means for production; (vi) rapes on a large scale; (vii) theft of public and private vehicles; (viii) destruction of public buildings and infrastructure; (xi) desecration of religious places and graves; and that the MISCA acted in connivance with the Seleka.⁴⁰⁵⁶ It avers that the steps to come out of the crisis include (i) denunciation of the Libreville agreements; (ii) dismissal of Michel Djotodia; (iii) dissolution of the transition government and all institutions set up by the Libreville agreements; (iv) setting up of new transition organs, representing the entire Central African nation, under the aegis of the UN and supervision by France; (v) withdrawal of the Chadian MISCA contingent; (vi) repatriation of Chadian and

Sudanese Seleka mercenaries; and (vii) disarmament and billeting of all Seleka and ‘Anti-balaka’.⁴⁰⁵⁷

1538. In response to the emails, Mr Ngaïssona informed Alfred Legrand Ngaya on 9 January 2014 that he was unable to see the second press release, asking for it to be sent to him.⁴⁰⁵⁸ This is followed, only minutes later, by an email from Mr Ngaïssona to ‘boxeone’, forwarding the CNPS release discussed above ‘for your reading’ (pour votre lecture).⁴⁰⁵⁹

1539. These were not the only emails exchanged between Mr Ngaïssona and ‘boxeone’ that day. Indeed, following an email seemingly sending an attachment in ‘jpg’-format from ‘francin francin’ with email address ‘boxeone’ to Mr Ngaïssona on 8 January 2014,⁴⁰⁶⁰ Mr Ngaïssona in turn sent an email to ‘francin francin’ with email address ‘boxeone’, seemingly in response, on 9 January 2014, stating that the document was well received, and that it is ‘necessary’ to add ‘hunting items for the Anti-Balaka’ and ‘the financial needs’ for ‘the work’ ‘it is urgent’ (il faut ajouter les articles de chasses pour les Antis balaca et les besoins financier pour le travail sa urge).⁴⁰⁶¹ At the same time, Mr Ngaïssona forwarded the email initially sent by ‘francin francin’ with email address ‘boxeone’, including its attachment, on 10 January 2014 to ‘desiremiezan’.⁴⁰⁶²

1540. The Chamber has before it a typed list in table format which lists various items and related quantities, in English, including, inter alia, 2,500 ‘AK 47 SMG56’, and various other weapons and ammunition, 40 ‘Toyota Pickups’, 5 ‘Army Lorries (Trucks)’, 5 ‘Fuel Tankers’, fuel and petrol, 30 ‘Thuraya Phones and airtime’, radios, uniforms, boots, food and medial items.⁴⁰⁶³

1541. The Chamber notes in this regard that several days before this, Mr Ngaïssona had exchanged emails with ‘desiremiezán’. These exchanges start with wishes for the new year sent from Mr Ngaïssona to ‘Desiré’ on 31 December 2013, followed by ‘Desire’ wishing Mr Ngaïssona that 2014 be a year of success and that ‘the team takes back the trophy’ (‘que l’équip [sic] reprend le trophet’), and further informing him that he talked to ‘le président de mon club il dit vous avez 90% de chance pour prendre la coupe a la final eceke [sic] vous pouvez vous déplacer avec une lettre signee par capitain’.⁴⁰⁶⁴ Mr Ngaïssona then asked ‘Désiré’ for the name of the ‘team’ to prepare the ‘feuille du match’, to which ‘Desire’ responded that his team is called ‘WOLF GZ1 (une equip israelienne [sic])’.⁴⁰⁶⁵ Mr Ngaïssona, the following day, forwarded this exchange to ‘beddanboy’.⁴⁰⁶⁶ The Chamber recalls that this email account appears to have been associated with Eric Danboy, and that Mr Ngaïssona communicated with this email address also in October 2013, forwarding a request for materiel, including weapons and ammunition.⁴⁰⁶⁷

1542. In this context, the Chamber notes the Prosecution’s submission that these exchanges were in coded language, with ‘WOLF GZ1’ being a provider of military and paramilitary forces.⁴⁰⁶⁸ The Ngaïssona Defence argues, in contrast, that the meaning of the emails is unclear and thus any interpretation amounts to pure speculation, and that, in any event, the Prosecution did not substantiate that the meaning of the language used was that Mr Ngaïssona intended to plan Anti-Balaka military operations.⁴⁰⁶⁹ The Chamber considers the fact of Mr Ngaïssona forwarding the email to ‘beddanboy’, with whom he had communicated in the context of requests for materiel some months earlier, noticeable. However, on this basis alone, and without further information on the meaning of these emails, the Chamber is unable to conclude on their interpretation.

1543. On 10 January 2014, the day on which Michel Djotodia announced his resignation at N'Djamena,⁴⁰⁷⁰ Alfred Legrand Ngaya communicated to Mr Ngaïssona the minutes of a meeting between 'Anti-Balaka leaders' held the preceding day.⁴⁰⁷¹ This is forwarded by Mr Ngaïssona to 'boxeone' on 11 January 2014.⁴⁰⁷²

1544. The Chamber has before it a document indicating a date of 9 and 10 January 2014 drafted seemingly on behalf of the 'Combattants de libération de peuple Centrafricain (CLPC)', entitled 'Procès Verbal de la Réunion de concertation entre les Responsable du Mouvement des "Combattants de libération du Peuple Centrafricain" (CLPC) dénommé "Antibalaka" relative à la Session extraordinaire des Etats membres de la CEEAC'.⁴⁰⁷³ It refers to a meeting held on 9 January 2014 of the main leaders of the CLPC called 'Anti-balaka' in Boeing, presided over by Charles Ngremangou, 'chief of general staff' of the Anti-Balaka, and Sébastien Wenezoui as secretary.⁴⁰⁷⁴ According to these minutes, discussions centred on the views of the Anti-Balaka regarding the N'Djamena discussions, agreeing on a statement to be addressed to the CEEAC heads of state.⁴⁰⁷⁵ The minutes indicate that the Anti-Balaka at the meeting formulated the following demands: (i) resignation of Michel Djotodia, Nicolas Tiangaye, and Alexandre Nguéndet; (ii) 'return to constitutional order' or 'collège de transition'; (iii) either way, designation of new transition leaders in consensual manner; and (iv) organisation of free and transparent elections 'within six (5)' ('dans un délai de six (5) [sic]').⁴⁰⁷⁶

1545. The Chamber considers immaterial in this context that a number of witnesses otherwise associated with an Anti-Balaka group did not know this document, or denied knowing the CLPC.⁴⁰⁷⁷ Similar to its discussion of the meetings at Yamwara above, the Chamber considers this merely to be a further manifestation of organisational efforts in the lead-up to the resignation of Michel Djotodia and removal of the Seleka from power.

1546. P-0884 testified about this meeting, stating that it was held in January, in Boeing behind another base located behind the airport, at the time when Djotodia had been summoned so he could resign, and in the context of which Sebastien Wenezoui was designated as spokesman and to write, since some in the Anti-Balaka did not even know how to write.⁴⁰⁷⁸ P-0884 explained that they gathered to ask that the ‘constitutional order’ be re-established, which meant ‘bringing Bozizé back to power’, so it was an opportunity to collect a number of people and have them manage the transition and have François Bozizé come back to power.⁴⁰⁷⁹ P-0884 appeared to confirm that Alfred Ngaya took part in the meeting.⁴⁰⁸⁰ P-0884 did not recall who else among the ‘responsables principaux’ would have been at the meeting.⁴⁰⁸¹ The document was meant to be sent to the CEEAC to ask for Djotodia’s departure and that there had to be an agreement about Bozizé returning to power or a transitional arrangement.⁴⁰⁸²

1547. Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that his impression during the meeting was that ‘Wenezoui and Ngremangou’ were amongst the ‘main leaders’ of the Anti-Balaka at that time, but he did not know and could not decide the level of responsibility they had in the movement.⁴⁰⁸³

1548. Further in this context, the Chamber does not find credible the assertion of Alfred Legrand Ngaya that at the time of sending these emails, he ‘did not have any belief that [Mr Ngaïssona] was part of the main leaders of the Anti-Balaka’, but that he sent this information in the ‘same process of sharing information’.⁴⁰⁸⁴ To the Chamber, it is clear from the content of the emails and their attachments that Alfred Legrand Ngaya shared this information with Mr Ngaïssona because he was of the view that Mr Ngaïssona had valid interest therein. The Chamber is of the view that this would not have been the case had Mr Ngaïssona been a mere bystander. In this regard, the Chamber also recalls its discussion of Alfred Legrand Ngaya's contacts with Mr Ngaïssona long before the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013.⁴⁰⁸⁵

1549. The exchanges between Alfred Legrand Ngaya and Mr Ngaïssona did not end here. On 13 January 2014, the day before Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui, Alfred Legrand Ngaya sent the copy of a 'Communiqué de presse des [sic] antibalaka' in relation to the 'processus de normalisation [sic] en centrafrrique'.⁴⁰⁸⁶

1550. The Chamber has before it a typed document apparently drafted for the 'Mouvement des Combattants "Antibalaka"', dated 12 January 2014.⁴⁰⁸⁷ This document welcomes the withdrawal of Michel Djotodia and Nicolas Tiangaye, recalls that the aim of the Anti-Balaka movement was fighting for the restoration of peace and security across the CAR, and further makes the following points: (i) the national transitional council in its current composition does not meet the requirements of equality and objectivity necessary to designate the new transition president in a satisfactory manner since, while the Seleka is represented, the Anti-Balaka is not, and because the composition was contested already at the time at which it was set up; and (ii) it is impossible to organise the vote for a new transition president in such imbalanced conditions, at the 'risk' of giving rise to 'other conflicts' ('au risque de faire germer d'autres conflits'), considering that this needs to be resolved before setting up a transparent and equitable mechanism to designate a new transition president.⁴⁰⁸⁸ The document ends by saying that any new 'slips' could easily make 'us' tumble into another 'spiral of violence', which is not the intention of the Central African people ('tout nouveau dérapage pourrait facilement nous basculer dans une autre spirale de violence, ce qui n'est pas du tout la volonté du peuple centrafricain').⁴⁰⁸⁹

1551. In the view of the Chamber, the above foreshadows the position taken by the Anti-Balaka upon Mr Ngaïssona's return to Bangui, namely, that it wanted to be taken into account in the

1552. Leading towards the discussions in N'Djamena, the Chamber has further considered the testimony of Joachim Kokaté, who described how towards the second week of December 2013, he was in contact with Abakar Sabone about the latter's statement calling for the division of the country, eventually leading to Joachim Kokaté being informed that Idriss Déby wanted him to come to N'Djamena to have discussions.⁴⁰⁹¹ The witness informed Mr Ngaïssona, who had contacted him, that he was going to N'Djamena, with Mr Ngaïssona saying to him that he would tell the others about this, meaning talking about it to François Bozizé.⁴⁰⁹² Joachim Kokaté explained that he never did anything without telling Mr Ngaïssona because he knew Mr Ngaïssona was very close to Bozizé, and because Mr Ngaïssona used to tell them that whatever Bozizé said was mostly said to Mr Ngaïssona, so he could not travel to N'Djamena without informing Mr Ngaïssona, he was not the leader of the Anti-Balaka and could not go there on their behalf.⁴⁰⁹³ While Mr Ngaïssona initially approved, he said a few days later that he did not trust Déby and would therefore not come, but he told Joachim Kokaté to contact a number of people, including Ngremangou, providing their phone numbers.⁴⁰⁹⁴ Joachim Kokaté confirmed he talked to Levy Yakété about the meeting as he was also a member of the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁰⁹⁵

1553. The Chamber notes in this context that P-1847 indicated in his prior recorded testimony that he heard from Levy Yakété about a meeting the latter had at the Golf residence with Mr Ngaïssona and Joachim Kokaté at the end of 2013 with a view to designating the person to represent the Anti-Balaka, and as Mr Ngaïssona and Levy Yakété did not want to go, Joachim Kokaté travelled alone.⁴⁰⁹⁶ In court, P-1847 confirmed the suggestion that Levy Yakété gave Joachim Kokaté a message for N'Djamena, concerning the exactions, calling for the resignation of Michel Djotodia and for transition to take place after the disarmament and elections.⁴⁰⁹⁷

ii. Michel Djotodia's resignation and the new transition government

On 10 January 2014, Michel Djotodia resigned, leading to the end of his government, following which the Seleka forces started to withdraw from Bangui, in particular towards the north and north-east of the CAR.

1554. Nicolas Tiangaye himself described that in light of the exacerbating tensions following the attack of 5 December 2013, Michel Djotodia and he were asked to withdraw, and indeed forced to resign, during the CEEAC summit on 10 January 2014.⁴⁰⁹⁸ While Michel Djotodia submitted his resignation at N'Djamena, Nicolas Tiangaye refused to do so given the circumstances, and then handed over his resignation on 14 January 2014, having returned to Bangui.⁴⁰⁹⁹

1555. The CAR Panel in its 2014 interim report concluded that in a combined diplomatic effort, France and ECCAS countries (particularly Chad and Congo) obtained the demise of the Seleka leadership on 10 January 2014.⁴¹⁰⁰ This paved the way to a new transition, led by Catherine Samba-Panza, who was elected by the transitional national council on 20 January 2014.⁴¹⁰¹

1556. Regarding the meeting at N'Djamena, P-1858 stated that Léopold Bara-Dessi went there as a representative of the Anti-Balaka, and that P-1858 drafted the report which Bara-Dessi presented in N'Djamena.⁴¹⁰² Similarly, P-0954 mentioned that Léopold Bara explained the situation as a representative of the Anti-Balaka, and when Idriss Deby decided that Djotodia could not go back to Bangui as president, Bara called Kamezolai to inform him that Djotodia had signed his resignation letter.⁴¹⁰³ P-0876 testified that Jean-Jacques Demafouth asked

Léopold Bara to represent the Anti-Balaka at N'Djamena, while he later heard that Kokaté went there to represent Bozizé, and Bernard Bonda on behalf of the KNK.⁴¹⁰⁴ Once P-0876 returned to Bangui, he was called by Mokom, Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona, Ngremangou and others he did not know, all against him and his position.⁴¹⁰⁵

1557. Joachim Kokaté testified that after his discussions with Mr Ngaïssona about who would represent the Anti-Balaka in N'Djamena, and having arrived there, he heard on RFI that François Bozizé stated he had not given a mandate to anybody, including Joachim Kokaté, to speak on behalf of the Anti-Balaka.⁴¹⁰⁶ At N'Djamena, Joachim Kokaté then found Léopold Bara and Bernard Bonda who told him that they had come as part of the delegation to represent the Anti-Balaka, and they said they should work together for purposes of participating in the discussions, which is what they did.⁴¹⁰⁷ While at N'Djamena, Joachim Kokaté also made a statement on the UN radio station, at request of General Mokoko, telling Central Africans that considering that Michel Djotodia had accepted to resign, they should not continue fighting, accept their Muslim brothers, and that they needed peace and reconciliation.⁴¹⁰⁸ While he was still in N'Djamena, this message was contradicted by Yvon Konaté on radio Ndeke Luka.⁴¹⁰⁹

1558. Catherine Samba-Panza explained that following Michel Djotodia's resignation, the Seleka felt they had been abandoned as they no longer had a leader with authority over them in Bangui, so a lot of them started to withdraw from Bangui, going to the north and north-east, but committing violence against the population considered to be favourable to the Anti-Balaka in the course of their withdrawal.⁴¹¹⁰

1559. An NGO report echoed this, concluding that following Michel Djotodia's resignation, senior Seleka leaders fled the country, the alliance broke into smaller groups with many fighters retreating to the central and northeastern part of the country, while an estimated 3,000 to 4,000 Seleka fighters remained confined to military barracks in Bangui under oversight of the AU forces.⁴¹¹¹

1560. More directly, on the ground, P-2324, who was in Berbérati at the time, described hearing from the Seleka commander of Bagandou that all Seleka groups from different towns gathered in Berbérati before leaving on 30 January 2014.⁴¹¹² Similarly, P-2393, who was in Carnot at the time, stated that when Michel Djotodia resigned, the Seleka withdrew from Carnot along with the Seleka from other areas, such as Nola and Berbérati, who were also withdrawing and passing through Carnot.⁴¹¹³

On 20 January 2014, Catherine Samba-Panza was elected as new transitional head of state of the CAR. André Nzapayéké was chosen as prime minister, Léopold Narcisse Bara was appointed minister for youth, sports, arts and culture, and Jean-Jacques Demafouth, Charles Ngremangou and Joachim Kokaté also received positions within this new government.

1561. Catherine Samba-Panza explained that during the Djotodia administration, the CAR was going through ‘an extremely difficult time’ and was ‘plunged into chaos’, with no state, no administration, no economy, no health system, no school, no education, no justice, no army, it was ‘total chaos’.⁴¹¹⁴ Just after the return from N’Djamena, a delegation of eight women from a multi-faith religious platform came to see the witness and told her they wanted ‘a woman at the leadership who can replace Michel Djotodia’, and eventually the witness accepted their proposal.⁴¹¹⁵ Elections were organised by the national transitional council, and on 20 January 2014, Catherine Samba-Panza was elected, running against eight men.⁴¹¹⁶ On the day of her election, Catherine Samba-Panza received an SMS stating, ‘It’s in your best interest that you win the elections, because if you don't, we will burn everything down. You really can't afford to have a Seleka or a Muslim overtake you'.⁴¹¹⁷ The witness felt disproportionate hope was invested in her as many other candidates had resources and ran a campaign, which she did not, so when she received this message, she smiled but could not know who was sending it because so many people had her phone number.⁴¹¹⁸

1562. Within the Samba-Panza administration, André Nzapayéké was chosen as prime minister,⁴¹¹⁹ while, inter alia, Léopold Narcisse Bara was appointed as minister for youth, sports, arts and culture,⁴¹²⁰ Jean-Jacques Demafouth as ministerial advisor for security and in charge of relations with MISCA and Sangaris, Charles Ngremangou as director of cabinet at the ministry of defence, and Joachim Kokaté as special advisor for DDR.⁴¹²¹ The Chamber notes in this regard that Charles Ngremangou received the position requested for him by the Anti-Balaka.⁴¹²²

iii. Anti-Balaka following Michel Djotodia's resignation

As such, Mr Ngaïssona represented the entirety of the Anti-Balaka towards the CAR transition government and international authorities.

With a view to engaging with the transition government and international authorities, the Anti-Balaka structure started being further formalised with the return of Mr Ngaïssona and his appointment as general coordinator. Other individuals within this formalised structure included Maxime Mokom as operations coordinator and zone commanders, or 'ComZones' as group leaders. Mr Ngaïssona continued to provide financial assistance to the Anti-Balaka and actively engaged in formalising the structure of the Anti-Balaka.

Throughout the period relevant to the charges, Mr Yekatom retained and exercised control over an active group of elements which was seen as and understood to be part of the Anti-Balaka. Mr Yekatom was the uncontested leader of this group which first set up at Yamwara in Boeing after 5 December 2013, and moved down the PK9-Mbaïki axis following Michel Djotodia's resignation.

The structure of the Anti-Balaka evolved during the period relevant to the charges, and was subject to various leadership tussles. However, it always remained represented towards the national and international authorities as one entity through Mr Ngaïssona.

Anti-Balaka groups set up bases in different neighbourhoods across Bangui. Meetings were held at variable intervals at Mr Ngaïssona's concessions or at the Azimut hotel. In February 2014, the Anti-Balaka itself estimated counting about 50,000 elements in Bangui and the provinces. The Anti-Balaka coordination also issued identity cards or badges to some of the Anti-Balaka elements.

a. Formalisation of structure

1563. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that having kept abreast of the developments concerning the Anti-Balaka following the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013, Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui on 14 January 2014. In the following, Mr Ngaïssona and others undertook steps to formalise the structure of the Anti-Balaka groups, by setting up a national coordination under the lead of Mr Ngaïssona as general coordinator.

i. Initial steps to formalise structure and representation towards other actors

Mr Ngaïssona as general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka

1564. Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui on 14 January 2014,⁴¹²³ the same day as Nicolas Tiangaye returned to the CAR and handed in his resignation as prime minister following the talks in N'Djamena.⁴¹²⁴

1565. The evidence as further outlined below shows that on the very day of his return to Bangui, Mr Ngaïssona convened a meeting at which he was designated as general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka. The Chamber considers this to be another indication of his role having been envisaged as such before his return.

1566. Concretely, the Chamber has before it an Anti-Balaka press release, dated 3 March 2014, which mentions as follows: ‘Monsieur Patrice-Edouard N[gaïssona] a été désigné Coordonnateur Général des Combattants Antibalaka à l’issue d’une grande réunion ayant regroupé tous les principaux responsables politiques et militaires tenue le 14 Janvier 2014, par souci d’encadrement et de leadership politique dudit mouvement’.⁴¹²⁵ The Chamber considers of note that this release appears to have been signed by, inter alia, Maxime Mokom, Sylvestre Yagouzou, Emotion Brice Namsio, Euzèbe Emtanou, Benjamin Ouapoutou, Thierry Lebene, Aimé Abel Denamganaï, Richard Bejouane, Guy Mazimbelet, Guy Gustave Yadjoungou, Guy Gervais Mokpem, Yvon Donoh, Sylvain Beorofei, ‘Andilo’ Ngaïbona, and Yvon Konaté⁴¹²⁶ – individuals who were directly involved in the setting up of groups, their advance towards Bangui and hostilities related thereto, as well as in liaising and coordinating efforts in Cameroon and Zongo.⁴¹²⁷

1567. Several witnesses mentioned meetings held upon Mr Ngaïssona’s return to Bangui and in the context of installing him as general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.

1568. For example, Joachim Kokaté testified that he returned to Bangui on 14 January 2014, on the same day as Mr Ngaïssona, which he heard over the radio.⁴¹²⁸ The witness also heard over the radio that Mr Ngaïssona had organised two meetings, one in Boy-Rabe and another in Boeing, and that he had returned at the request of François Bozizé to take over the general coordination of the Anti-Balaka;⁴¹²⁹ he informed everybody that he was the general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.⁴¹³⁰ Two or three days later, Ngremangou and Yvon Konaté came to see the witness; Ngremangou announced to Joachim Kokaté and confirmed that Mr Ngaïssona was in Bangui and wanted them to meet; he gave Joachim Kokaté Mr Ngaïssona’s

phone number in Bangui and the witness called, Mr Ngaïssona telling him he wanted to meet.⁴¹³¹

1569.P-2232 testified that after the attack of 5 December 2013, he learned that Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom had left Cameroon and landed in Bangui; they regrouped all the Anti-Balaka in Boeing, and from there, Mr Ngaïssona proclaimed himself as coordinator of the movement; Mr Ngaïssona started ‘to coordinate everything with Mokom when Mokom was still in Zongo’.⁴¹³² This was after 5 December 2013, but P-2232 did not recall the precise date.⁴¹³³

1570.P-0974 stated that when Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui following Michel Djotodia’s resignation, Mr Ngaïssona summoned all Anti-Balaka to Boeing-Bercail at Kpangaba school, but P-0974 did not go as Mr Ngaïssona had not fought but then thought he could rule.⁴¹³⁴ A few days later, Mr Ngaïssona called a meeting in Boy-Rabe, which was attended by the Boeing-Bercail group, at the end of which Mr Ngaïssona was proclaimed national coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.⁴¹³⁵ P-0974 heard from several people who attended this meeting that Mr Ngaïssona gave out two million CFA to Anti-Balaka of Boy-Rabe, but nothing to ‘the southern group’.⁴¹³⁶

1571.Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that the ComZones who ‘were already there’ were summoned, which allowed them to vote for Mr Ngaïssona as coordinator.⁴¹³⁷

1572.P-0306 testified that in January 2013, Mr Ngaïssona landed in Bangui and summoned them to his home, where he introduced himself as the general coordinator of the group known as

Anti-Balaka, everyone had to know that he was the leader and responsible, in charge of them, that the Seleka had perpetrated many acts of violence and caused a lot of damage, so he said they had to put things back in order.⁴¹³⁸ Mr Ngaïssona received Konaté and Andjilo, ‘Richard’, ‘Aubin’, ‘Mory’, and many others at his residence, speaking to the entire group in his capacity as leader about things that were going on within the movement.⁴¹³⁹ P-0306 said that Mr Ngaïssona convened them the very next day after he arrived and the purpose was to set up the foundation for the functioning of the movement.⁴¹⁴⁰ P-0306 said that during this first meeting, Mr Ngaïssona behaved like ‘a leader’, and he remained the general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka until his arrest, ‘[n]o one else controlled the movement’.⁴¹⁴¹

1573.P-0889 described how about one week after their return to Bangui, in January 2014, ‘Mokom’ held a meeting with ComZones in Boeing, behind the airport, and suggested himself as coordinator, but the Anti-Balaka leaders did not agree because he only spoke of the ‘return to the constitutional order’, and they no longer wanted to be considered as pro-Bozizé, so they decided to go to Mr Ngaïssona that same afternoon and at a meeting attended by Anti-Balaka leaders from Bangui, Maxime Mokom, Bernard Mokom, Alfred Legrand Ngaya and P-0889, Mr Ngaïssona was designated as general coordinator, he was liked by the leaders because he usually distributed money, he was popular.⁴¹⁴²

1574.P-1521 testified that they wanted to see if Mr Ngaïssona could represent them because at a meeting at Bangui-M’Poko, the Sangaris had said that they needed someone to represent them towards the international forces and Sangaris, and because they thought Mr Ngaïssona could perhaps represent them in the context of presidential elections or as candidate for the national transitional council.⁴¹⁴³ P-1521 recalled a meeting at a Chinese school at the end of January or early February 2013 with all ComZones but not Mr Yekatom and Wenezoui representing the Anti-Balaka ‘south’, at which Mr Ngaïssona congratulated them for their efforts and achievements, thinking that Mr Ngaïssona referred to their goal to chase out the mercenaries from the Seleka coalition.⁴¹⁴⁴ P-1521 agreed with the suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona said that he accepted to become coordinator on the condition that the abuses being committed by the Anti-Balaka would stop.⁴¹⁴⁵ P-1521 indicated that when they informed Mr Ngaïssona of their choice of him as representative, he said that they had to be very careful to ‘avoid any slippages’.⁴¹⁴⁶ According to P-1521, they chose Mr Ngaïssona because he had been president of the CAR football federation and minister for youth, had undertaken activities in the sports and cultural arena, so he was well known to many youth.⁴¹⁴⁷

Meetings with Catherine Samba-Panza

1576. Specifically, P-0876 stated that before Catherine Samba-Panza was elected, the Anti-Balaka were asked to come to the national assembly, and they were transported in a group by MISCA, with two people intervening in the name of the Anti-Balaka, Léopold Bara on behalf of the ‘Yekatom-Kamezolari-Mbomon’ group, and another supporting the return to constitutional order, Bozizé’s return.⁴¹⁴⁸ According to P-0876, Bara wanted to push the president of the assembly, at that time interim president, to include all entities in the process, not to exclude the ‘Yekatom group’, and thanks to this intervention, Mr Yekatom, Kamezolari and others were brought to debate at the assembly, but the other group (‘l’autre groupe’) denounced Bara, saying they represented the most densely populated region in the CAR and could not let people steal their victory, as was said by Alfred Legrand Ngaya.⁴¹⁴⁹ P-0876 said that it was Toumeta’s idea that the FACA members with them dress in their uniform, and Toumeta provided an armoured vehicle for their transportation.⁴¹⁵⁰ According to P-0876, at the time there was no Anti-Balaka movement in place, only self-defence movements which took on the name, but no command chain or decision-making link between the various movements, and it was not possible to determine who was Anti-Balaka and who was not.⁴¹⁵¹

1577. Other witnesses also referred to this visit to the national assembly. P-1858 stated that Léopold Bara gave a speech at the parliament as representative of the Anti-Balaka and agreed that he requested for the Anti-Balaka to be represented in the transition council and before the transition government.⁴¹⁵² P-0954 agreed that during the short transitional administration of Alexandre Nguendet, there was a ceremony at the national assembly at which Léopold Bara spoke on behalf of the ‘southern’ group, not in favour of François Bozizé’s return to power, and Alfred Legrand Ngaya on behalf of Mr Ngaïssona.⁴¹⁵³ P-0954 confirmed that he with Mr Yekatom, Captain Kamezolaï, Lieutenant Gouga and other soldiers, all wearing FACA clothing, were transported to the assembly by MISCA tanks.⁴¹⁵⁴

1578. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that Mr Ngaïssona asked him to speak on behalf of the Anti-Balaka at a meeting just a few days before the election of the new transition president, at the time when Nguendet was interim transitional president, and that Bara spoke at the same meeting, after him.⁴¹⁵⁵

1579. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that after Catherine Samba-Panza was elected as new transition president,⁴¹⁵⁶ and the new transition government was sworn in on 23 January 2014,⁴¹⁵⁷ several meetings took place between her and

The Chamber notes that the Yekatom Defence opposed introduction of mentioned report arguing low probative value and insufficient reliability (see Annex A to the Response, ICC-01/14-01/18-1978-Conf-AnxA, p. 11). In light of the limited reliance on this report with regard to a matter which is not disputed, namely the specific date on which Catherine Samba-Panza was sworn in as new transition president, the Chamber does not consider it necessary to address these arguments further.

representatives of the Anti-Balaka, at which the latter presented demands as to the representation of the Anti-Balaka within the new transition government.

1580. In the view of the Chamber, the circumstances of these meetings as well as the requests made by the Anti-Balaka are another illustration of the Anti-Balaka structure taking further shape in the context of different political and personal ambitions of various individuals. It is clear from the evidence as further outlined below that in particular Mr Ngaïssona, at the time of the initial meetings freshly installed general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, exhibited ambitions which developed to no longer centring around bringing François Bozizé back to power, but rather around personal interests combined with wanting to represent the Anti-Balaka which were still a party to the conflict to be taken into account, and thus, in the general political dynamics, an influential factor to be reckoned with.

1581. It is within this context that the Chamber recalls its conclusion that the various Anti-Balaka groups did not have to be a monolithic or singular entity and/or ideologically homogenous at any stage of the events.⁴¹⁵⁸ The Chamber is of the view that different Anti-Balaka groups, of ‘north’, ‘south’ or other designation, coming together to be represented towards the new transitional authorities and international forces does not signify that there were many different groups. Rather, as is clear from the evidence before the Chamber as outlined above and below, groups which did have varying super-imposed interests were not only perceived to be one movement, the ‘Anti-Balaka’, from the outside, but also presented themselves as such with a view to being taken into account as party to the conflict.

1582. Concretely, Catherine Samba-Panza explained that she called on the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka to lay down their arms and join forces with her to build the country and install national cohesion.⁴¹⁵⁹ She received a delegation of about 15 people of the Anti-Balaka at her home.⁴¹⁶⁰ According to Catherine Samba-Panza, General Essongo and General Garcia were ‘managing this period’, and the latter organised this meeting.⁴¹⁶¹

1583. The Chamber has before it a handwritten list of names, which Catherine Samba-Panza confirmed to be a list of the Anti-Balaka members that came to her residence,⁴¹⁶² which includes, inter alia, the names of Mr Ngaïssona, Joachim Kokaté, ‘12 puissance Thierry’, Léopold Bara, ‘Cap’ ‘Kamezou-Lai’, ‘C/CH’ Rombhot Yekatom, Sylvestre Yagouzou, Charles Ngremangou, Caroline Deboulet, Gilbert Kamezolaï, and ‘LT’ Yvon Konaté.⁴¹⁶³

1584. In relation to the content of the meeting, Catherine Samba-Panza recalled that Mr Ngaïssona, Konaté, Kamezolaï and Sylvestre Yagouzou spoke.⁴¹⁶⁴ The witness explained that her top priority at the time was to appoint a prime minister who would form a government, she was waiting for the various stakeholders and wanted the Anti-Balaka to suggest a number of names.⁴¹⁶⁵ In this regard, Catherine Samba-Panza stated that the Anti-Balaka at the meeting told her what they felt about the stigmatisation they had been subjected to in the country, they thought they were ‘patriots’, ‘had liberated the country’, and ‘should have the place that they deserved on the political chequerboard’.⁴¹⁶⁶ The witness received several wishes expressed by the Anti-Balaka, including for people to become members of the government and for military staff, which she received either directly from the Anti-Balaka or through intermediaries such as the president of the national transitional council.⁴¹⁶⁷

1585. In this context, the Chamber notes a document before it, which Catherine Samba-Panza recognised,⁴¹⁶⁸ entitled ‘Voeux du mouvement Antibalaka pour les forces armees [sic] centrafricaines’, that mentions the wish for Gboya Emmanuel to be the chief of general staff, and Charles Ngremangou to be the director of cabinet at the ministry of defence.⁴¹⁶⁹ The Chamber considers that two points are of note in this regard: (i) Charles Ngremangou and Emmanuel Gboya did indeed receive positions within the government;⁴¹⁷⁰ and (ii) Charles Ngremangou was actively involved in organising groups with a view to responding to the Seleka violence and, in that context, in the attack in Bangui on 5 December 2013,⁴¹⁷¹ while Emmanuel Gboya had been posted to Bertoua in 2013 and tried to go to Yaoundé with a view to meeting with Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom.⁴¹⁷²

1586. The Chamber notes that Catherine Samba-Panza mentioned a follow-up meeting concerning Mr Ngaïssona’s wishes regarding government positions, as he had sent some requests with the names of ‘Gboya’ and ‘Feizoure’, during which she said that she would grant that according to the list they had sent.⁴¹⁷³

1587. Further, Catherine Samba-Panza recognised a handwritten list of three names entitled ‘Representants anti-balaka au gouvernement’, including the names of Mr Ngaïssona, Joachim Kokaté and Léopold-Narcisse Bara as the list which she received from the president of the national transitional council, Ferdinand Nguendet, as mentioned above.⁴¹⁷⁴ The witness explained that she forwarded the list to the prime minister who was preparing his

The Chamber considers the objections in relation to this document by the Ngaïssona Defence (see Annex C to the Ngaïssona Defence Response to ‘Prosecution’s submission of call data records and related evidence via the “bar table”’ (ICC-01/14-01/18-1296), 13 May 2022, ICC-01/14-01/18-1409-Conf-AnxC, pp. 91-92) moot as they were formulated based on the premise that Catherine Samba-Panza had not testified about this document at the time, which eventually she did.

government, and following the morality or character check, it turned out that Mr Ngaïssona and Joachim Kokaté ‘apparently had a criminal record’, while Léopold Bara did not, so they took Bara to become part of the government.⁴¹⁷⁵

1588. Catherine Samba-Panza explained further in relation to this first meeting at her residence that she knew many of the Anti-Balaka more or less, including a secretary who was part of the Anti-Balaka and another lady; there were others that the witness spoke on the phone with from time to time, including Konaté and Sylvestre Yagouzou.⁴¹⁷⁶ She described the atmosphere as ‘rather relaxed’, although they were ‘pretty tough’ when it came to their requirements; according to her, bearing in mind that when one meets with ‘young people’, ‘combatants’, and people ‘not in the habit of asking things calmly’, they were talking all at once and it was difficult to manage the discussion, so minister ‘Sokambi’ told them to ‘calm down’.⁴¹⁷⁷

1589. In an interview which Catherine Samba-Panza gave at the time, she described her encounter with the Anti-Balaka representatives following her election, and explained that matters started getting difficult when she did not attribute the posts as requested, since the Anti-Balaka thought that they had not been sufficiently taken into account and, following the appointment of Léopold Bara, they stated he was not representing them, even though his name was among those suggested, together with those of Mr Ngaïssona and Kokaté.⁴¹⁷⁸ The witness explained that Mr Ngaïssona felt very frustrated that he was being pushed aside in the transition process, and he simply did not accept that – Mr Ngaïssona wanted to have the position he wished and did not get, and ‘that created problems’, like with checkpoints, deaths, demonstrations, and requests for resignation.⁴¹⁷⁹

Sokambi and General Essongo, the representative of the mediator of the Central African crisis.⁴¹⁸⁰ Joachim Kokaté said that Catherine Samba-Panza told the Anti-Balaka that she was counting on them to comply with her policies, meaning to appeal to the Anti-Balaka to put down their weapons and take the side of legality, that she did not want disorder in Bangui and the rest of the country.⁴¹⁸¹ According to Joachim Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona told her that the message had been well understood and that she could count on them to convey that message, which meant he was going to do something to ensure peace.⁴¹⁸² The Chamber recalls the witness's testimony that further during this meeting, the Anti-Balaka said that they were funded by Mr Ngaïssona, that he gave them funds to organise for the events which took place on 5 December 2013, and unanimously said that their leader was Mr Ngaïssona and that the president should deal with him exclusively, and that Kokaté was not an Anti-Balaka leader but a member like everyone else.⁴¹⁸³

1591. Other witnesses talked about this meeting as an attempt to 'reconcile' the 'northern' and 'southern' part of the Anti-Balaka.

1592. Specifically, P-0876 stated that two or three days after the meeting at the national assembly, Catherine Samba-Panza was elected and Alexandre Nguendet invited Mr Ngaïssona, Kokaté and Léopold Bara to his office, with the former two representing 'Bozizé', while, according to P-0876, Bara represented the other strain, the 'pacifists' ('les pacifiques', 'les pacifistes', 'Balaka tendance pacifique').⁴¹⁸⁴ P-0876 confirmed that the 'Yekatom-Mbomon-Kamezolai camp' attended this meeting with the assistance of MISCA vehicles since at that time they were already perceived negatively since they ('we') were against the return of Bozizé, while for the Seleka they were Anti-Balaka.⁴¹⁸⁵ They negotiated for positions in the government, Mr Ngaïssona wanted defence, mining or foreign affairs, and eventually Léopold Bara said to put down youth and sports for himself ‘just in case’ Mr Ngaïssona would not take it.⁴¹⁸⁶ P-0876 testified that when Bara was then appointed to the government, there were reactions against the latter, saying that he was not Anti-Balaka and they did not recognise him, that ‘their victory had been stolen’ (‘on a volé leur [...] victoire’) and that all ComZones would mobilise against him and even that Bozizé had put ‘a price on his head’ (‘tête à prix’).⁴¹⁸⁷

1593. P-0974 testified that there was a mediation by the Congolese contingent to create a single coordination, and that they referred the matter to Catherine Samba-Panza.⁴¹⁸⁸ He said they had a meeting with Catherine Samba-Panza at which she asked why they had split, told them they should be one, asked for them not to sow any trouble but work in collaboration with her, and told them she would continue to work with them for peace to return.⁴¹⁸⁹ P-0974 stated that at this meeting, Mr Ngaïssona explained that although he had been out of the country during the fighting, he still had been active with the movement, that while he was still in Cameroon, he had organised meetings with former FACA and been in telephone contact with people in the provinces to establish the movement.⁴¹⁹⁰ P-0974 testified that was the reason which Mr Ngaïssona gave to say that he was a ‘legitimate choice’ to be the Anti-Balaka coordinator.⁴¹⁹¹ According to P-0974, Bara gave ‘his own version of the facts’, explaining that the activities of the Anti-Balaka surfaced in various neighbourhoods ‘spontaneously as a way of resisting the Seleka’, they objected to the narrative that ‘one single individual’ created the movement – they had fought very hard to see the departure of Djotodia, and Mr Ngaïssona returned one week after Michel Djotodia left power.⁴¹⁹² No one contradicted Mr Ngaïssona as regards the mentioned contacts; there was no objection from his side of the coordination against the statement that he was at ‘the foundation’ and ‘involved right from time back’.⁴¹⁹³ P-0974 further seemed to say that Catherine Samba-

Panza asked them to have one single coordinator to ensure coordination for the movement, and that after the meeting Mr Ngaïssona became the sole coordinator.⁴¹⁹⁴

1594. P-1839 testified that in the context of ‘reconciling’ Mr Yekatom’s group with that under Mr Ngaïssona, the Congolese general facilitating the meeting said that Mr Ngaïssona had a ‘red folder’ (‘un dossier rouge’), a reference that the witness did not understand, and Mr Yekatom said that ‘he has had a lot of positions’ and was there ‘to see’ what posts he could have in the future.⁴¹⁹⁵ The president received them on the same day as they had met at Boganda.⁴¹⁹⁶ From what the witness understood, Samba-Panza asked that they control their ‘men’, and the witness did not remember the response of the leaders.⁴¹⁹⁷ Mr Yekatom did not speak, only said at the end that he was ‘for the peace’.⁴¹⁹⁸ The witness agreed with the suggestion that at this meeting, and at the meeting with General Essongo, Mr Yekatom defined his group with the term ‘Révolution des forces armées centrafricaines pour le peuple’.⁴¹⁹⁹ The witness thought that Leopold Narcisse Bara indeed said that he was the ‘spokesperson’ of Mr Yekatom’s group.⁴²⁰⁰ They talked about the elements and their situation, the process, about how to go about disarming them in the long term.⁴²⁰¹

1595. In the chronological context of the above descriptions, the Chamber notes a document before it entitled ‘Communiqué conjoint’, dated 23 January 2014, the day on which Catherine Samba-Panza was sworn in as new transition president, and apparently signed by Mr Ngaïssona.⁴²⁰² This document informs the national and international community that from the mentioned date onwards, ‘for the sake of achieving the restoration of peace throughout the national territory’ (‘dans le souci de concourir au rétablissement de la paix sur toute

1596. The document was discussed with various witnesses, and the Chamber notes in this regard that the provenance of this document is unclear.⁴²⁰⁴ While Alfred Legrand Ngaya thought the document reflected the time at the 'very beginning of the efforts to put a structure in place for the movement',⁴²⁰⁵ P-0876 testified that this document was never published.⁴²⁰⁶ P-0876 explained in this regard that when Catherine Samba-Panza was designated as head of state, the two Anti-Balaka groups were received at her residence, in which context Mr Ngaïssona appeared to have threatened Léopold Bara claiming that he was not Anti-Balaka.⁴²⁰⁷ While the individuals mentioned in the document agreed on this coordination, P-0876 heard on the radio on the evening of the same day that Mr Ngaïssona did not recognise it, apparently saying that 'our victory, no one can take that from us' ('Notre victoire, personne ne peut nous voler ça').⁴²⁰⁸

held a role with military responsibilities within the Anti-Balaka.⁴²¹⁰ Indeed, the witness testified that he was appointed as representative of the Anti-Balaka within the Samba-Panza government due to him having been an Anti-Balaka ‘supporter’ at the time.⁴²¹¹ The Chamber considers that the witness attempted to downplay his role within the Anti-Balaka.⁴²¹² While witnesses did not point to him as playing a specific role in the context of military operations, it is also clear from the evidence before the Chamber that Joachim Kokaté was directly involved with the activities of the Anti-Balaka, both in initial meetings in Cameroon as well as going to N’Djamena to represent the movement, as well as of FROCCA.⁴²¹³ At the same time, the evidence shows that by around mid-February 2014, Joachim Kokaté distanced himself from the Anti-Balaka.⁴²¹⁴

1598. The Chamber notes in this regard that radio broadcast of an interview with Mr Ngaïssona of 27 February 2014, in which he, inter alia, complained about MISCA’s attempt to arrest him, stating that he was not an enemy of the state or of peace, but returned to the country to help ‘these children’ to have a voice (‘ses enfants à porter leurs voix’), yet they had no one to listen to it (‘on n’a pas d’interlocuteurs pour écouter la voix de ces enfants’).⁴²¹⁵ He continued that he was the general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, and that the children left the hinterland, arrived on foot, had already used weapons, and they were now being asked to return to where they came from, but if they were to return with their weapons, this would mean insecurity in the hinterland, and the only solution to eradicate this was to regroup them to have them lay down their weapons and return to the hinterland empty-handed.⁴²¹⁶ He said that he talked to ‘these children’ a lot so there would be no ‘slips’ (‘dérapiage’): ‘Mais ceux qui font des exactions au nom des A[nti-Balaka], mais si ensemble avec les autorités, nous nous mettons ensemble, on peut lutter contre ces braquages, lutter contre des délinquants qui se prennent pour A[nti-Balaka] et aujourd'hui tous ces dérapages-là sont imputés à A[nti-Balaka]'.⁴²¹⁷ Mr Ngaïssona further explained the chain of command of the Anti-Balaka was him as general coordinator and, before, Kokaté was military coordinator, who took other options, emphasising that he had control:

[...] Lui, il a pris d'autres options, lui-même il peut vous expliquer, et que tout se passe sous mon contrôle. En principe, s'il y a des discussions, il y a des débats, c'est moi qui devais être présent à ces débats ou s'il y a des ... des choses à discuter avec les autorités, en principe, ça devait être moi. On ne sait pas quand on parle d'autres fractions par-ci, par là, ça me gêne un peu, et pour quelles raisons ? C'est malheureux qu'on trompe le public, qu'on trompe certaines autorités, et qu'on trompe l'opinion internationale.⁴²¹⁸

1599. Mr Ngaïssona further said that if one heard shooting at night, these were robberies which were not done by the Anti-Balaka, and further that there was no more shooting up into the hinterland because he had made a call to cease hostilities ('[j]usque dans l'arrière-pays, il y a plus de feu parce que j'ai lancé un appel, cessation des hostilités').⁴²¹⁹ In relation to the arrest of certain Anti-Balaka elements, he stated not knowing what they were reproached for, *'peut-être d'arriver à B[angui], mettre la pression sur D[jotodia] et D[jotodia] parte, ça, leur drame, ils ne méritent pas ça. 1600. The Chamber is of the view that Mr Ngaïssona made clear in this interview not only that he was the one person representing the Anti-Balaka and its interests towards the transitional authorities, and that he had sufficient power and control over the Anti-Balaka to call them to end hostilities, but also that he fully stood by the actions of the Anti-Balaka in their pursuit of their core objective, namely the removal of Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power. The Chamber recalls that while Mr Ngaïssona knew well, certainly at this stage, about the death and dislocation of Muslim civilians due to the Anti-Balaka's actions,⁴²²¹ he either chose not to refer to such events at all, or downplayed them as 'slips' which would need to be stopped.

1601. The evidence before the Chamber contains further discussions on the wishes of the Anti-Balaka for posts within the new transition government. Specifically, the Chamber has before it another document which Catherine Samba-Panza recognised as another list of wishes passed on to her by the Anti-Balaka.⁴²²² This document, which appears to be from the 'Antibalaka Combattants de libération du peuple Centrafricain [CLPC]' lists the names of six individuals with their 'profile', recently occupied positions and 'wishes', the latter including for Mr Ngaïssona the position of director-general of the state companies ENERCA or SOCAPS, DDR coordinator, for Alfred Legrand Ngaya the position of minister-adviser at the prime minister's office for youth, sports, arts and culture, and for Bernard Mokom the position of cabinet advisor at the national transitional council.⁴²²³

1602. P-0884 testified, in relation to this list, that it was drawn up based on an idea of Catherine Samba-Panza, who mentioned not knowing the people who made up the Anti-Balaka movement, contacting Mr Ngaïssona to ask for a list of people who could be nominated in the government so they could receive a salary which would then enable them to take responsibility for ‘the men’, take ‘charge of these people’, rather than make them commit actions like stealing.⁴²²⁴ P-0884 explained that SOCAPS concerned storage of petrol products and the company earns a lot of money.⁴²²⁵ P-0884 said that ‘some people’ were unhappy about neither Mr Ngaïssona nor Bernard Mokom getting any of these positions.⁴²²⁶

1603. Catherine Samba-Panza explained in this regard, plausibly, that she did not appoint Mr Ngaïssona to the requested posts for several reasons: as regards ENERCA, the woman in charge at the time had been appointed by François Bozizé and his team, with the witness not wanting to remove a woman and a Bozizé appointee, as she did not want to give the impression that this was a ‘clean-up operation’; further, the witness said that SOCAPS is a state company with a board of directors for which she could not appoint people; and for DDR, it was not possible since they were reviewing the entire process which had not even begun.⁴²²⁷ The witness testified that Mr Ngaïssona ‘absolutely insisted’ on getting those positions,⁴²²⁸ and she did not make a counterproposal as her hands were tied because of the results of the ‘morality’ or ‘character’ investigation.⁴²²⁹

1604. Jean-Jacques Demafouth similarly recalled this list, stating that ‘Feikere’ was appointed as advisor at the presidency at the request of Mr Ngaïssona; and ‘Ngaya’ and Robert Namsenei were also appointed to positions, but Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom were not because they were ‘too committed at the military level’ and the ‘inquiry on morality’ did not make it possible to give them positions of responsibility.⁴²³⁰ Jean-Jacques Demafouth explained that they knew that Bernard Mokom was responsible for the Anti-Balaka at the border with Cameroon, while Mr Ngaïssona had judicial antecedents from the Patassé regime period which made it difficult to give him a position and, as main coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, a promotion for him would have been like handing power to the Anti-Balaka.⁴²³¹ Further, according to the witness, ENERCA, the corporation providing power to the national grid held a post which was referred to as ‘greasy’, meaning it was really well paid, while SOCAPS as company responsible for petroleum products was also an important company, and giving Mr Ngaïssona these positions would have meant giving him means to ‘fund his activities’ as ‘the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka movement’, mostly ‘the upkeep of the troops and their organisation’.⁴²³² Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified further that, similarly, they had not seen even the beginning of the Anti-Balaka demonstrating goodwill vis-à-vis DDR, so no one could agree to Mr Ngaïssona’s demand of becoming DDR coordinator.⁴²³³

1605. Alfred Legrand Ngaya explained, from his perspective, that they presented their demands for positions of Anti-Balaka in the government as they were already in ‘the dynamic of the normalisation process’, the idea on their side was to identify ‘the senior staff’ in the movement for the transitional authorities and international community to take into account ‘some of the desiderata of the Anti-Balaka’.⁴²³⁴ According to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, it was at the time necessary to have someone in the position of DDR coordinator who was ‘able to distinguish’ between the ‘real’ and ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka, as there were elements who were not Anti-Balaka but wanted to avail themselves of the situation since the DDR had been announced.⁴²³⁵

1606. Brice Emotion Namsio testified in a similar vein when indicating that Catherine Samba-Panza asked every group to give the name of one person to represent that group in the government in line with her idea of inclusive politics.⁴²³⁶

1607. In contrast, P-0884 had a different reading of events and said that Mr Ngaïssona wanted to ‘distribute the positions’ in the beginning, but they spoke out against this idea because the movement should not be used as lobbying tactic and it was better to take care of the ‘children’ in the DDR process.⁴²³⁷

1608. Both these witnesses however recalled further demands of the Anti-Balaka in this context.

Brice Emotion Namsio testified that a document with various demands shown to him in court concerned the implementation of a new government that would be led by Catherine Samba-Panza and was drafted to reintroduce the Anti-Balaka and have them represented in the government, following the national coordinator's return to Bangui.⁴²³⁸ P-0884 did not know this document and was not aware of the positions, but confirmed that the content of the document reflected the demands that the Anti-Balaka were making at the time.⁴²³⁹ Similarly, Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that this document contained the requests of the Anti-Balaka which were communicated to the prime minister when the government was being formed.⁴²⁴⁰

1609. The document, which appears to have been written for purposes of the 'Antibalaka Combattants de libération du peuple Centrafricain [CLPC]' is dated 21 January 2014 and congratulates Catherine Samba-Panza on her election, followed by eight demands.⁴²⁴¹ These demands include, among others, that (i) all FACA members be re-integrated, taking into account their ranks; (ii) Anti-Balaka be taken into account through integration into the FACA of some and DDR for others; and (iii) all Seleka be removed from the army and be 'repatriated to their countries of origin'.⁴²⁴² The document further states that the Anti-Balaka demand the following positions within the government: prime minister's office, defence, mines and energy, finances, territory administration, water and forests, education, agriculture and breeding, as well as youth and sports.⁴²⁴³

1610. On the same day, another document of the Anti-Balaka appears to have been issued under the name of Mr Ngaïssona, congratulating Catherine Samba-Panza on her election, stating that the Anti-Balaka closely followed her various statements relating to the administration of the state and her commitment to collaborate with the movement, hoping that words would be followed by deeds, 'pour le bonheur du peuple centrafricain, meurtri par les exactions

1611. Regarding this press release, Catherine Samba-Panza agreed that it was consistent with what Mr Ngaïssona told her when they met for the first time, the document had a very 'positive' attitude 'in relation to the crisis'.⁴²⁴⁶ The witness agreed that Mr Ngaïssona's statements in which he asked the Anti-Balaka to put down their weapons and respect peace were not complied with.⁴²⁴⁷ Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that he participated in drafting this statement, as asked by Mr Ngaïssona and following consultation with the ComZones.⁴²⁴⁸

1612. The Chamber has before it a further document which appears to list wishes for positions of individuals involved with the Anti-Balaka.⁴²⁴⁹ This document in table format lists the names of 14 individuals with 'profile' or title, recently occupied functions, and 'wishes', including, inter alia, (i) Maxime Mokom for position of DDR director-general; (ii) Mr Ngaïssona for director-general of SOCAPS; (iii) Sébastien Wenezoui for cabinet director at the ministry for public works or director-general of 'F.E.R.'; (iv) Alfred Ngaya for minister advisor at the prime minister's office for youth and sports; (v) Sylvestre Yagouzou for director of the presidential car park; (vi) Brice Émotion Namsio for chief of service at SOCAPS; (vii) Bernard Mokom for cabinet advisor at the national transitional council; and (viii) Hyppolite Come Azounou for 'chargé de mission' at the DDR programme.⁴²⁵⁰ The Chamber considers of note in this regard that the demand for Mr Ngaïssona to be appointed to a position within the SOCAPS was repeated later in 2014 in negotiations between Mr Ngaïssona and the transition authorities.⁴²⁵¹

1614. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that the first meeting at Catherine Samba-Panza's residence did not remain the only one.

1615. Specifically, another meeting took place at the president's office on 25 January 2014.⁴²⁵⁵ The delegation was led by Joachim Kokaté.⁴²⁵⁶ Catherine Samba-Panza testified that a few days before this meeting, the Anti-Balaka had announced the composition of its movement with various officials and Mr Ngaïssona as coordinator, as well as including 'Kokaté', 'Bara', 'Konaté', and as Mr Ngaïssona was not at this meeting, to her mind Kokaté was leading the delegation as the third going by rank.⁴²⁵⁷ Catherine Samba-Panza explained that she had asked for weapons to be laid down, that killings, retaliation end and everyone commit to social, national reconciliation and living together in harmony, but the violence, killings, retaliation continued.⁴²⁵⁸

1616. The minutes of this meeting indicate that ‘Mr Kokaté’, leading the Anti-Balaka delegation, explained that they did not control their elements on the ground, while the leaders did not agree on actions to take to contain their troops, illustrating this by a meeting he held at Boy-Rabe during which an ethnic connotation was reflected, held by those who demanded the return of François Bozizé.⁴²⁵⁹ He further thought that if the disciplined elements could be contained, those resisting would be incapacitated, concluding that hunger led them to rob because many Anti-Balaka came from the hinterland, and reiterating the support for the transition and the head of state.⁴²⁶⁰ The minutes indicate that following this, the head of state mentioned that so far the hand offered to the Anti-Balaka had not been met by a favourable response, which risked the loss of support from the international community.⁴²⁶¹

1617. Joachim Kokaté testified that he did not speak at any of the meetings he had with Catherine Samba-Panza,⁴²⁶² but also stated that the minutes mentioned above did not concern a meeting, but a consultation.⁴²⁶³ According to the witness, Mr Ngaïssona asked him to go to and represent him at this particular session.⁴²⁶⁴

1618. Overall on the basis of the above, the Chamber considers that various ‘streams’ within the Anti-Balaka presented themselves and were perceived to be one group with one set of representatives, led by Mr Ngaïssona, towards the new transition government and international forces. As outlined by the Chamber above and below, the question of there having been varying super-imposed interests within the Anti-Balaka does not lead the Chamber to conclude that there existed several movements seen as different parties to the conflict. It is further clear from the evidence as outlined that Mr Ngaïssona and the Anti-Balaka as a whole wanted to be taken into account within the transition process, including for personal interests. The Chamber considers this well illustrated by a statement made by

ii. Mr Yekatom's group within the Anti-Balaka

1619. Turning to the evolution and role of Mr Yekatom's group, the Yekatom Defence argues that Mr Yekatom answered a 'call to protect the civilian population as a whole and to prevent further atrocities and human rights abuses', and 'took up arms to defend the population from enemy forces and mitigate escalating local tensions [...] with full commitment to his military training and respect for IHL principles', remaining 'steadfast in his efforts to restore peace and reconciliation' in the CAR.⁴²⁶⁶

1620. Concretely, the Yekatom Defence submits that 'civilians routinely perpetrated crimes throughout the charged period and across CAR', which it says is relevant to the Chamber's determination 'of the identity of the perpetrators of individual alleged crimes', to the 'so-called structures and membership of the "anti-balaka"', as well as to 'whether local civilian communities that did commit crimes were in fact controlled or defined by the umbrella "anti-balaka" term'.⁴²⁶⁷ According to the Yekatom Defence, the 'term "anti-balaka" [...] became a short-hand reference to all resistance groups [...] irrespective of whether the group in question was organised or not, or whether it identified itself with the more formal "anti-balaka" coordination efforts'.⁴²⁶⁸

1621. Within this context, the Yekatom Defence submits that Mr Yekatom (i) was not an Anti-Balaka,⁴²⁶⁹ but established his own group called 'Révolution des Forces Armées Centrafricaines pour le Peuple' (the 'RFACPP'), which was distinct from the Anti-Balaka and wanted to restore security and administrative institutions as well as protect the population;⁴²⁷⁰ (ii) did not exercise full control over the ‘RFACPP movement’;⁴²⁷¹ (iii) issued legitimate orders;⁴²⁷² and (iv) intended to restore peace and security.⁴²⁷³

1622. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the ‘so-called “Anti-Balaka of the South” and the “Anti-Balaka of the North” were operating entirely separately from the outset’, and until at least June 2014, and referring to Vivien Beina’s testimony that there was no collaboration between Mr Yekatom and Mr Ngaïssona prior to and in preparation of the attack on 5 December 2013.⁴²⁷⁴ The Ngaïssona Defence elaborates stating that Mr Ngaïssona never liaised with Mr Yekatom ‘prior to, and/or at the time of the charges crimes’, with contact only being established ‘after the June 2014 merger and the creation of the unified Anti-Balaka coordination’.⁴²⁷⁵

1623. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that the Anti-Balaka was ‘never a clearly demarcated group’, since (i) it was a movement which was ‘diffuse, often indistinguishable from the general population, and fundamentally elusive due to its constantly fluctuating expansion and evolution’;⁴²⁷⁶ and (ii) the “fake Anti-Balaka” further impeded the effective demarcation of the Anti-Balaka groups’.⁴²⁷⁷

1624. At the outset, the Chamber recalls its conclusion that the Anti-Balaka coalesced around one core objective, namely to drive out Michel Djotodia and the Seleka, which was superimposed by varying personal and political ambitions which evolved over time.⁴²⁷⁸ The Chamber further recalls its conclusion that the various Anti-Balaka groups did not have to be a monolithic or singular entity and/or ideological homogenous at any stage of the events for them to still coordinate their actions around the mentioned core objective.⁴²⁷⁹ It was in this context that the Chamber also concluded that Mr Yekatom’s purported objective ‘not to fight

1625. On this basis, the Chamber considers that on the evidence before it, the question of there being different 'streams' within the Anti-Balaka, such as those denominated by being from 'the south' or 'the north' has no impact on the Anti-Balaka groups acting in a coordinated fashion in pursuit of their core objective even beyond Michel Djotodia's resignation. Indeed, it is clear from the evidence before it, as also further outlined below, that the various Anti-Balaka groups, whether 'south', 'north' or of other designation, continued to cooperate with a view to being represented towards the new transition government and international forces. It is also clear from the evidence before the Chamber, as outlined above and below, that during the time relevant to the charges, the person representing the Anti-Balaka for such purposes was Mr Ngaïssona.

1626. The Chamber further considers that within this context, any direct relations between Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom are, on the facts, irrelevant. Mr Ngaïssona contributed to the activities of the Anti-Balaka as one movement, whereas Mr Yekatom acted clearly under that same umbrella, even if not sharing the initially held interest of Mr Ngaïssona to bring François Bozizé back to power which, as discussed, Mr Ngaïssona in any event left behind at a certain point. Moreover, and as will be discussed further below, the Chamber does not consider that any 'north' and 'south' streams within the Anti-Balaka acted entirely independently and separately from each other at any time during the period relevant to the charges.⁴²⁸¹

1627. It is within the context of the above that the Chamber has considered the evidence before it on the position and role of Mr Yekatom's group within the Anti-Balaka in 2014.

1628. At the outset, the Chamber refers to its findings regarding Mr Yekatom's control over his group during the Bangui Attack, at Yamwara, and during the advance along the PK9-Mbaïki axis. The Chamber concludes therein that Mr Yekatom (i) led a group, and himself participated, in the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013;⁴²⁸² (ii) was in charge and led his group which set up at Yamwara;⁴²⁸³ and (iii) was the undisputed leader of the group on the PK9-Mbaïki axis.⁴²⁸⁴

1629. In addition to the above considerations, witnesses also talked more generally about the structure and roles of individuals within Mr Yekatom's group, showing his overall control over the group on the basis of various factors considered below, including his position within the group, his maintaining discipline within the group, the group's access to weapons and thus capability of engaging in operations, the area under control of Mr Yekatom following the resignation of Michel Djotodia, as well as the number of elements under Mr Yekatom's control.

1630. First, the evidence before the Chamber shows that Mr Yekatom was the leader of his group, with his deputy Cœur de Lion, followed by Habib Beina after the former's death, and individuals including Rodrigue Momokama, Vivien Beina and Paleon Zilabo taking on specific roles over time.⁴²⁸⁵ In this context, the Chamber refers to its conclusion that irrespective of Mr Yekatom's and Cœur de Lion's ranks within the military, the evidence before the Chamber shows an unambiguous directional flow of authority between Mr Yekatom as leader of the group and Cœur de Lion as his 'deputy' until his death.⁴²⁸⁶ As regards the evidence of some witnesses that there was 'friction' between Mr Yekatom and Cœur de Lion,⁴²⁸⁷ the Chamber refers to its conclusion that the fact of Mr Yekatom having a smoother or close personal relationship with elements of his group other than Cœur de Lion does not detract from the fact that Cœur de Lion was under Mr Yekatom's command.⁴²⁸⁸

1631. Second, the evidence before the Chamber shows that Mr Yekatom enforced discipline within his group. Specifically, P-1193, who was with the group in 2014, stated that ‘Rombhot’ disciplined his men when he was not under the influence of alcohol, and that he never saw anyone opposing ‘Rombhot’.⁴²⁸⁹ Similarly, Gérard Ouambou, who could observe the group closely at the beginning of 2014, stated that ‘Rombhot’s’ elements listened to him and those who did not, those that were disciplined by him, left the group.⁴²⁹⁰ Vivien Beina testified that Mr Yekatom’s group was very well structured, there was military discipline, and Mr Yekatom respected the military rules and their ranking.⁴²⁹¹ The witness testified that Mr Yekatom’s group included many that were not soldiers, and they were all subject to the same discipline because they were part of the group.⁴²⁹² P-1858 testified that he had seen ‘Rombhot’ giving orders and threats, it seemed to him that his elements, even FACA, were afraid of him and his orders were obeyed without question, and if one did not obey, Mr Yekatom ‘would hit you or you would be killed’.⁴²⁹³ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that Mr Yekatom was a FACA member who was part of the Anti-Balaka, had his base on the route of Mbaïki, and had a significant number of elements under his control which he led with an iron hand (‘une main de fer’) and disciplined as necessary, including sanctioning when needed.⁴²⁹⁴ Roger Okoa-Penguia stated that he was present one day when Mr Yekatom addressed his elements and told them to behave appropriately, adding that Mr Yekatom maintained discipline within his elements.⁴²⁹⁵

1632. In this context, the Chamber has considered specific examples which illustrate Mr Yekatom’s control over his group and the area he was in. For example, several witnesses talked about an incident during which an individual called ‘Konzi’ was abducted by Mr Yekatom’s elements after Catherine Samba-Panza had arrested some Anti-Balaka elements, leading to negotiations involving representatives of the Anti-Balaka sent by

Mr Ngaïssona which resulted in the release of this person.⁴²⁹⁶ Furthermore, it appears that Mr Yekatom and his elements took weapons from the gendarmerie at PK9, eventually returning them.⁴²⁹⁷ P-0954 heard in this context that Zilabo, the mediator of the Anti-Balaka, told Mr Yekatom that the gendarmes were not his enemies and that Mr Ngaïssona wanted the weapons to be returned.⁴²⁹⁸ The Chamber also refers to its discussion of incidents illustrating Mr Yekatom's control over his group while on the PK9-Mbaïki axis.⁴²⁹⁹

1633. Third, the evidence before the Chamber shows that Mr Yekatom ensured his group had access to weapons and ammunition. Specifically, an element in Mr Yekatom's group at the time testified that Rodrigue Momokama at PK9 was in charge of weapons and ammunition and, at PK9, Mr Yekatom and his bodyguards would take the ammunition and rockets on the ground, and while the witness was with Mr Yekatom at PK9, they bought ammunition from the other side of the river in the DRC.⁴³⁰⁰ The witness said that magazines for AK-47 and a rocket launcher were brought to the PK9 base, and this witness saw Mr Yekatom pay for ammunition.⁴³⁰¹ Further, P-1193 testified that a few people in Mr Yekatom's group had what is commonly known as Kalashnikovs, but many did not have weapons, while also recognising that Mr Yekatom returned weapons after the crisis.⁴³⁰² The Chamber further refers to its discussion of the weaponry observed on elements in Mr Yekatom's group in Mbaïki.⁴³⁰³

1634. The Chamber also notes in this regard two documents of February and March 2015, respectively, which indicate that Mr Yekatom committed to returning 'weapons of war' in the aftermath of the Brazzaville forum, and a list indicating a total of 21 AK-47s, one AA 52, six MAS 36, six PM MAT 49, one PM USI, two RPG 7, two DKM and one ‘Galil’.⁴³⁰⁴ A handwritten list included in the CAR Panel 2015 report, indicating weapons and ammunition returned by Mr Yekatom’s group, mentions 12 rockets, six ‘propulseurs’, two ‘lance roquettes’ RPG 7, one AA 52, one PKM, ten AK-47s, one ‘Galil’, one FAL, one PM USI, three PM MAT-49, three MAS 36, three anti-personnel mines, 15 AK-47 magazines, three MAT-49 magazines, as well as 13 14-5 ammunition and 1743 ‘munitions lot confondu’.⁴³⁰⁵

1635. The Chamber notes in this regard the Yekatom Defence’s argument that the group was faced with a shortage of weapons and ammunition.⁴³⁰⁶ However, the Chamber considers that in light of the evidence before it,⁴³⁰⁷ including as outlined above, the group under Mr Yekatom’s control clearly possessed sufficient weaponry and ammunition to conduct active operations and control certain territory, which it effectively did.

1636. Fourth, the Chamber refers to its findings regarding the location of Mr Yekatom’s group over the period relevant to the charges, from moving towards Bangui in advance of the attack on 5 December 2013,⁴³⁰⁸ to setting up at Yamwara,⁴³⁰⁹ and eventually moving down in direction south/south-west of Bangui and setting up along the PK9-Mbaïki axis.⁴³¹⁰ Witnesses generally referred to Mr Yekatom’s group controlling the areas south of Bangui, into the Lobaye prefecture in 2014, and taking over various checkpoints along the route towards Mbaïki.⁴³¹¹

1637.Fifth, the Chamber refers to its findings regarding the number of elements under Mr Yekatom's control during the period relevant to the charges, in particular in the context of the Bangui Attack,⁴³¹² at Yamwara,⁴³¹³ and when moving down in direction south/south-west of Bangui and setting up along the PK9-Mbaïki axis.⁴³¹⁴ On this basis, the Chamber concludes that in the period until end of February 2014 and beyond, Mr Yekatom had at least 1,000 elements under his control.

1638.Furthermore, the Chamber has received evidence which suggests that Mr Yekatom was involved in assisting a Muslim family which was subjected to violence in the PK9 area towards the end of January or early February 2014,⁴³¹⁵ and that he reportedly reconciled with a former Seleka 'captain' called Souleymane following the departure of Michel Djotodia.⁴³¹⁶

1639.The Chamber has no reason to doubt that these events took place. At the same time, the Chamber considers that it is clear from the evidence, and of importance in this regard, that: (i) Mr Yekatom knew of, and subscribed to, the way in which his elements pursued the core objective of removing Michel Djotodia and the Seleka from power, which extended to perceiving the Muslim civilian population in the west of the CAR as the enemy;⁴³¹⁷ (ii) any activities of Mr Yekatom that may have evolved around cooperation with national and international authorities in particular in the Lobaye took place after the majority of the

The Chamber considers telling in this regard the evidence of P-0876, who clearly stated in his prior recorded testimony that no Muslim had the right to pass through the Bangui-Mbaïki axis over which Mr Yekatom exercised control (see P-0876 Interview Transcript, CAR-OTP-2046-0267-R01, at 0274, lines 244-246), while trying to relativise this during his in-court testimony by insisting that anything that he may have heard in this regard was from radio and the press, and he was not a direct witness to the crimes committed against Muslim communities (see P-0876: T-085, p. 44, lines 18-25, p. 46, line 22 – p. 47, line 1; T-087, p. 16, line 25 – p. 17, line 23; T-089, p. 4, line 23 – p. 5, line 18). Assessing this claim in the context of other evidence before it, the Chamber does not consider P-0876 credible on this aspect. In any event, it is insufficient to shed doubt on the Chamber's overall conclusion.

Muslim civilian population had been forced to leave the area;⁴³¹⁸ (iii) D29-5014 had a relation with the Beina-family, as she herself indicated,⁴³¹⁹ with Habib Beina playing an important role in Mr Yekatom's group; and (iv) Mr Yekatom 'reconciled' with Souleymane, an individual whom he knew from before the conflict, at a time at which Mr Yekatom had taken over control in the relevant area⁴³²⁰ – reconciliation came therefore at no cost for Mr Yekatom.

1640. Finally, the Chamber has considered the evidence before it regarding any relations between Mr Yekatom and Mr Ngaïssona. As stated above, and as further outlined below, the evidence shows that Mr Yekatom did not share the objective of bringing François Bozizé back to power, while this was the initial starting point for Mr Ngaïssona's activities. However, as also stated, the Chamber considers this to be irrelevant in light of its findings as to what the objectives and policies of the Anti-Balaka, including Mr Yekatom's group, were.

1641. In this context, the Chamber notes the evidence of P-1839, who testified about two groups at Yamwara, including that under Mr Yekatom's control and those who had come to Bangui through the provinces who were 'with Mr Ngaïssona', and there being 'small misunderstandings'.⁴³²¹ While P-1839 agreed with the suggestion that while at Yamwara, Mr Yekatom's group used the term 'RFACPP' to designate itself, a term put to the witness by the counsel,⁴³²² she also made clear that while at Yamwara, everybody knew and considered them to be Anti-Balaka, further specifying that they 'reconciled' with 'Mr Ngaïssona's group'.⁴³²³ The Chamber considers that P-1839 testifying about Anti-Balaka who came to visit them at Yamwara being not part of 'their group' is a purely factual description from the witness's perspective – it is not disputed or doubted by the Chamber that the Anti-Balaka included various groups with different leaders who would not have been part of the witness's group at the time and were thus seen, by her, as not part of 'her' group.⁴³²⁴ P-1839 further agreed with the suggestion that Mr Yekatom said that he did not like ‘their’ ideas because his were not the same, and with the suggestion that Mr Yekatom considered himself ‘apart’ with his objective to free up the country and return home.⁴³²⁵ P-1839 further testified that she did not know if Mr Ngaïssona’s and Mr Yekatom’s objectives were the same or different because she knew Mr Yekatom’s, but not those of Mr Ngaïssona.⁴³²⁶

1642. Other witnesses testified similarly.⁴³²⁷

1643. The Chamber notes in this regard audio-visual material in which Mr Yekatom states that they are not Anti-Balaka, but soldiers (‘militaires’).⁴³²⁸ In the view of the Chamber, Mr Yekatom did this to illustrate the distinction between what he called ‘uncontrolled elements’ and them who, in his submission, were not such, but trained soldiers (‘il y a habitude de dire que nous, on est des éléments incontrôlés, mais nous, on n’est pas des éléments incontrôlés’).⁴³²⁹ In the same video, Mr Yekatom makes clear that their objective is Michel Djotodia’s removal from power, that they cannot leave the country to be governed by ‘bandits’, and that if he did not resign, they must return by force (‘[o]n doit rentrer par la force. Nous, avec la force on doit rentrer’).⁴³³⁰ The Chamber refers in this regard also to its discussion of another video in which Mr Yekatom talks of the creation of his group.⁴³³¹ The Chamber considers of particular note in this regard that P-0876, who tried to emphasise the distinction between ‘Léopold Bara’s stream’ of the Anti-Balaka, as opposed to those who favoured the return of François Bozizé, throughout his testimony, also testified that he was not aware of a separate movement which would have been called ‘RFACPP’ under Mr Yekatom, as to him, when P-0876 reached out to them, they were ‘Anti-Balaka who had retreated to a location behind the airport’.⁴³³²

1644. The Chamber further considers that Mr Yekatom and his group interacted and coordinated with other Anti-Balaka groups not only in the context of the Bangui Attack.⁴³³³ Indeed, as is illustrated by a video which the Chamber considers particularly telling and, as also discussed in detail below,⁴³³⁴ Sylvestre Yagouzou, who had advanced towards Bangui through the provinces with the self-defence groups that coalesced into the Anti-Balaka, seemed not to be in a position to contradict Mr Yekatom in the aftermath of the Bangui Attack.⁴³³⁵

1645. The Chamber notes the evidence according to which Mr Yekatom and Mr Ngaïssona did not get along well.⁴³³⁶ It further refers to its discussion of witnesses talking about various streams within the Anti-Balaka, and Mr Yekatom and Mr Ngaïssona not necessarily pursuing the same interests when it came to how the Anti-Balaka would be represented on a political level,⁴³³⁷ which seems to have been based, at least in part, on Mr Yekatom not wanting to work with Maxime Mokom who, at that time, was to continue in his role of operations coordinator.⁴³³⁸

1646. However, the Chamber also notes the evidence indicating that Mr Yekatom coordinated and worked with other Anti-Balaka groups and continued to be represented by the Anti-Balaka coordination led by Mr Ngaïssona between their meetings with Catherine Samba-Panza in January 2014, and the setting up of a coordination, still led by Mr Ngaïssona, in June 2014, and beyond. Various witnesses testified about Mr Yekatom's group forming part of the Anti-Balaka in this context, even if Mr Yekatom was seen as the clear leader of his own group.⁴³³⁹

1647. Several witnesses talked about Mr Yekatom being a feared and much in control commander of his group at this time.⁴³⁴⁰

iii. Mr Ngaïssona's role in the Anti-Balaka

1648. The evidence before the Chamber shows that following his return to Bangui and taking up the position of general coordinator in a more formalised structure of the Anti-Balaka, Mr Ngaïssona remained involved with the group's activities.

1649. At the outset, the Chamber notes that the evidence before it, as further outlined below, shows that the knowledge of Mr Ngaïssona and his activities in the context of the Anti-Balaka before he became general coordinator of the movement in January 2014 depended on the perspective and role of each individual testifying thereto. In particular, it is clear from the evidence discussed below that elements on the ground advancing through the provinces in late 2013 may not necessarily have been privy to Mr Ngaïssona's activities at the time, while persons more directly concerned with his actions were.

1650. In the view of the Chamber, the fact that some individuals did not know of Mr Ngaïssona's involvement with the Anti-Balaka before he became general coordinator in January 2014 does not mean that such involvement did not exist.

1651. The Chamber recalls that Mr Ngaïssona became general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka immediately upon his return to Bangui on 14 January 2014.⁴³⁴¹ In the Chamber's view, this is, by itself, an indication that Mr Ngaïssona was familiar with and involved in at least parts of the movement before his officially becoming coordinator.

1652. Furthermore, Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that when Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui, the witness saw that he knew the Anti-Balaka very well, and realised that Mr Ngaïssona had links with the military because he saw him with FACA members.⁴³⁴² For example, on the day of the meeting with the transition government in January 2014, Alfred Legrand Ngaya went to Mr Ngaïssona's house where he saw him with 'Lieutenant Konaté', and it was clear that they knew each other from before that day.⁴³⁴³ The witness also stated that Mr Ngaïssona was 'very popular' and 'generous'.⁴³⁴⁴ Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that he went to meet Mr Ngaïssona at the airport when he returned to Bangui; the 'whole neighbourhood was really overjoyed'; and there was a crowd of people at his house celebrating his return.⁴³⁴⁵ The witness testified that everyone knew that Mr Ngaïssona was an influential person, had relationships, was close to Bozizé and a public personality.⁴³⁴⁶ According to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, his exchanges with Mr Ngaïssona while the latter was still in Cameroon were not because he was involved in any organisation, but because he was the former minister of youth, they were looking for some assistance and Mr Ngaïssona had permanent contact with the lawyer of FROCCA.⁴³⁴⁷

1654. Indeed, witnesses who were in the provinces or Zongo themselves stated not having heard of Mr Ngaïssona before they, and he, reached Bangui, but at the same time knew of Maxime

Mokom coordinating their activities.⁴³⁵¹ The Chamber considers this evidence, or the perception of some that Mr Ngaïssona arrived ‘late’ in January 2014,⁴³⁵² not to negate Mr Ngaïssona’s involvement with the Anti-Balaka activities before his return to Bangui in January 2014.

1655. In addition to the above, the Chamber considers an indication for Mr Ngaïssona’s role within the Anti-Balaka, as well as for the role he played therein already in 2013, the reasons for which he was chosen to be the Anti-Balaka general coordinator. Indeed, the evidence as further outlined below shows that the underlying reasons for wanting to have a general coordinator for the Anti-Balaka related to a desire for being represented towards the national and international authorities, while Mr Ngaïssona as an individual was considered the best person for this role because he was very popular among the CAR youth due to his involvement in football activities, and at the same time was known for having comparatively vast financial resources, which could assist in covering the costs for the Anti-Balaka.

1656. Specifically, Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that there was a sort of vacuum when it came to the messages to be conveyed to the political authorities, and because of the necessity to have a spokesperson, a focal point for the Anti-Balaka, in addition to the Anti-Balaka not having the resources to take care of themselves and Mr Ngaïssona being known for being generous with money and having easy access to higher political officials, the ComZones designated Mr Ngaïssona as leader of the Anti-Balaka.⁴³⁵³

1657. Brice Emotion Namsio stated that after Djotodia’s resignation and before Mr Ngaïssona’s return to Bangui, Mr Ngaïssona called him to ask if he could come to Bangui to lead ‘them’, to which the witness responded that he was only the deputy spokesperson, as Sébastien Wenezoui was the spokesperson and Konaté spokesperson of the FACA in the group, and the witness did not have the authority to approve Mr Ngaïssona’s return, but if he wanted to return to support them, considering he was an authority, he could do so at his own level.⁴³⁵⁴ Brice Emotion Namsio was also called by a certain ‘Yalemende’ and a certain ‘Kombo’ who said that they wanted to lead the movement.⁴³⁵⁵ Eventually, Brice Emotion Namsio heard from others that Mr Ngaïssona was chosen because he used to be minister of youth and sports, under him the ‘SEMA’ cup was won, and as he was leading the youth (‘en tête de la jeunesse’).⁴³⁵⁶ The witness further testified that Mr Ngaïssona was one of their ‘big brothers’ from the 4th arrondissement who was fighting in defence for the CAR youth, in particular ‘those of the 4th’, and he was an ‘economic entrepreneur’ with ‘a high sense of humanism’, so people thought he should be chosen because he had resources and could also ‘prevent’ the youth from ‘going beyond certain limits’ and have ‘a mastery of the situation’.⁴³⁵⁷

1658. Vivien Beina stated that ‘Wenezoui’ told the witness later that he had encouraged Mr Ngaïssona to return to Bangui from Cameroon; the witness testified that ‘Wenezoui’ said at a meeting in Boeing that there was no ‘political personality’ that could be ‘the interface’ with the government and the international community, and that it was ‘important’ that Mr Ngaïssona come to represent them.⁴³⁵⁸ The witness stated that in early 2014, there was no one else to represent those young people, one could not just take any person to do so, and Mr Ngaïssona was a leader, someone ‘who could be listened to by the young people’, he was ‘already in command of an entity’ and from their neighbourhood, so the young people told themselves he could ‘validly represent’ them.⁴³⁵⁹

1659. P-0884 testified that the ComZones from the provinces and from Boy-Rabe ‘loved’ Mr Ngaïssona a lot and wanted him to be the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka movement.⁴³⁶⁰ P-0884 called Mr Ngaïssona as he thought Mr Ngaïssona could ‘compete’ with Samba-Panza and others to be president of the CAR for the transitional period, but it seemed his candidacy was rejected, and thereafter, he became general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka.⁴³⁶¹ P-0884

also testified that the government wanted one Anti-Balaka contact point representing the movement because there were several leaders, making clear that it was not the international community or transition government which asked them to set up a coordination.⁴³⁶² P-0884 testified that the Anti-Balaka selected Mr Ngaïssona as coordinator and after that Samba-Panza got in touch with him in that capacity.⁴³⁶³

1660. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that Mr Ngaïssona was chosen to lead the youth because he was ‘a businessman and had the means’ and came to Bangui to ‘restore order’, which happened because ‘he was able to organise the youth’.⁴³⁶⁴ The witness stated that Mr Ngaïssona came in ‘the spirit of conciliation’.⁴³⁶⁵ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli said that Mr Ngaïssona told the youth, ‘We were attacked by foreigners and if we are not careful, the country will go down’.⁴³⁶⁶ The witness testified that when Mr Ngaïssona came to Bangui, it was to organise Anti-Balaka elements, channel them in the direction of achieving peace, so they do not fall into violence, to organise, supervise the Anti-Balaka elements.⁴³⁶⁷

1661. Several other witnesses testified about Mr Ngaïssona being popular in particular among the ‘youth’ in the CAR because of his activities in relation to football and being known as wealthy businessman who had the financial means to provide assistance if required.⁴³⁶⁸ Indeed, Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda stated that while Maxime Mokom was angry about Mr Ngaïssona’s appointment, he was also relieved because Mr Ngaïssona had the means to help and support the movement, unlike him.⁴³⁶⁹

Position within the Anti-Balaka

1662. At the outset, the Chamber emphasises that the question of Mr Ngaïssona having been in control of the Anti-Balaka as a whole or parts thereof is, in the context of the charges in the present case, immaterial. The Chamber has considered the evidence as outlined below, which shows that Mr Ngaïssona in fact did exercise control over the Anti-Balaka as an additional factor to assess his contributions to the Anti-Balaka's activities.

1663. First, various witnesses testified about Mr Ngaïssona being the person to contact when it came to representing the interests of the Anti-Balaka.

1664. Specifically, and most importantly, Catherine Samba-Panza, the transition president at the time, testified that from the Anti-Balaka side, and from January 2014 onwards when she took her position, she had 'no other person' to contact but Mr Ngaïssona, with whom she had her contacts.⁴³⁷⁰ Aurélien Llorca stated that in the view of the CAR Panel, Mr Ngaïssona was indeed coordinating the Anti-Balaka groups from 'a political point of view', and Maxime Mokom was 'in charge of military operations'.⁴³⁷¹ Kasper Agger testified that while different personalities tried to portray themselves as leaders of certain groups of the Anti-Balaka,⁴³⁷² at the time of his interview with Mr Ngaïssona in February 2014, he referred to himself as 'the coordinator of the Anti-Balaka in a general term', portrayed himself in that role, and was looked at as 'an interlocutor'; and the witness found Mr Ngaïssona's place in Bangui by asking for 'Mr Ngaïssona, the coordinator of Balaka'.⁴³⁷³

1665. Second, the Chamber has considered a number of factors indicating that Mr Ngaïssona was in a position to take decisions on behalf of the Anti-Balaka and to direct Anti-Balaka groups to engage in certain actions.

1666. Specifically, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that when she confronted Mr Ngaïssona with alleged exactions, he would reproach the transition authorities saying they had not done what they should have to get the Anti-Balaka ‘more involved’ and did not ‘take into account their wishes’, he was reproachful and said that ‘he would see what he could do at his level’.⁴³⁷⁴ The witness testified that when Mr Ngaïssona was not appointed to the positions he had requested, he felt ‘very frustrated’ and that he was being pushed aside, out of the transition process; Mr Ngaïssona made the witness understand that ‘several times’ and simply did not accept that; the witness said that Mr Ngaïssona wanted that position and did not get it, and this created problems.⁴³⁷⁵ Catherine Samba-Panza testified that, in 2014, when there were a lot of difficulties in the relations between the transition authorities and the Anti-Balaka, there were ‘villes mortes’,⁴³⁷⁶ checkpoints, demonstrations, requests of resignation, which she termed as ‘political problems’ referring to the lack of coordination in managing the transition with the Anti-Balaka.⁴³⁷⁷

1667. On this point, the Chamber has considered the evidence showing that also in the second half of 2014, the Anti-Balaka, under Mr Ngaïssona’s lead, used the setting up of roadblocks, blockades and protests as a means to pressure the government to accede to their demands, or when it was felt that they were subjected to what was perceived as unfair treatment at the hand of the transition authorities.

1668. In particular, Catherine Samba-Panza testified about the Anti-Balaka using barricades and protests against the transition authorities, presenting various demands to be recognised as ‘a patriotic movement of the country’ and be billeted, and protesting against what they considered to be privileged treatment of the Seleka.⁴³⁷⁸

1669. Further evidence before the Chamber shows that the Anti-Balaka attempted to exert pressure on the transition government in various contexts, such as when Catherine Samba-Panza was

alleged to have misappropriated donations from Angola,⁴³⁷⁹ or following the arrest of Brice Emotion Namsio.⁴³⁸⁰ It appears that within the context of the negotiations and related protests and violence in regard to the latter event, Alfred Legrand Ngaya decided to withdraw from the Anti-Balaka after having faced resistance of Anti-Balaka elements who thought he had, on his own accord, dropped the demand for Catherine Samba-Panza to withdraw.⁴³⁸¹

1670. In this regard, Aurélien Llorca stated that the Anti-Balaka setting up barricades, which stopped life in Bangui, provided political leverage, and the purpose of youth from Boy-Rabe and Combattant setting up barricades on the two strategic access roads, to the airport and PK12, was twofold: to stop any commercial traffic and prevent circulation of international forces, making it difficult to remove barricades without sparking bodily harm.⁴³⁸² The witness testified that Mr Ngaïssona told him that in his view, the Anti-Balaka were not represented sufficiently in the transition government, and that there was a desire to exert pressure on the government through the Anti-Balaka to obtain political leverage.⁴³⁸³

In light of this evidence, the Chamber does not consider credible the claims of Jacob Mokpem-Bionli, who indicated that Mr Ngaïssona was angry with the transition government because it did not respond to their request for the Anti-Balaka to be taken charge of and thus decided a ‘ville morte’-operation, that Alfred Legrand Ngaya was threatened simply because he was not authorised to speak on RFI and that it was the ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka that were involved in the mentioned hold-ups, especially when bearing in mind that P-0992 did also say that it was Anti-Balaka elements – not ‘fake’ or otherwise – who threatened Alfred Legrand Ngaya (see P-0992 First Statement, CAR-OTP-2110-0048-R05, at 0066-67, paras 104-105; P-0992 Second Statement, CAR-OTP-2128-0288-R02, at 0309, para. 129; P-0992: T-092, p. 70, line 25 – p. 71, line 18, p. 72, line 23 – p. 74, line 21; T-093, p. 54, line 12 – p. 55, line 1; P-0992: T-095, p. 15, line 1 – p. 16, line 7).

1671. In a similar context, the Chamber notes that the evidence also indicates that Mr Ngaïssona was not in agreement with a call of Gilbert Kamezolai at the end of July 2014 for FACA personnel to return to their barracks and leave the Anti-Balaka.⁴³⁸⁴

1672. Third, the Chamber has considered the evidence, as further outlined below, that Anti-Balaka groups stayed within, and used for their purposes, Mr Ngaïssona's properties in Bangui.

1673. Specifically, P-2050 stated that on their way to the interview in which she met with 'Emotion Gomez' on 28 February 2014, they were stopped at a roadblock at the entrance of Boy-Rabe, 'Emotion' arrived with an AK-47 and all of the Anti-Balaka at the roadblock saluted him, it was clear he had some sort of authority over the Anti-Balaka there.⁴³⁸⁵ P-2050 stated that at the gate, she recognised the place she had been to in 2013, and 'Emotion' told her that it was the Anti-Balaka headquarter and confirmed it was the minister's, Mr Ngaïssona's house, saying, 'yes, this is the house of our boss', calling him 'coordinateur'.⁴³⁸⁶ P-2050 stated that '12 Puissances' came from the private house on the left side, and in the garage 'young boys' were dancing around a prisoner, torturing him.⁴³⁸⁷ P-2050 stated that she wrote in her notes that '12 Puissances' was directing 'military operations' because he was the 'highest man' in the compound, when she told 'Emotion' that she did not want to talk to the spokesperson but to the one in command, he took them to '12 Puissances'.⁴³⁸⁸ P-2050 stated that '12 Puissances' did not tell her which area he controlled, but when she later called him about dead bodies found in the 8th arrondissement, he said he was not in control of that area.⁴³⁸⁹ P-2050 stated that she recorded from the moment they entered the gate probably until the moment '12 Puissances' became upset, it was clear he was not very happy to see them.⁴³⁹⁰ P-2050 commented on her recording, explaining inter alia, that they talked to the prisoner who gave his name as ‘Larma-Soum’,⁴³⁹¹ and that ‘12 Puissances’ explained to someone on the telephone that they had put their hands on the ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka responsible for exactions in the 3rd and 8th arrondissements.⁴³⁹² P-2050 thought in relation to ‘12 Puissances’ ending the call with ‘merci beaucoup, c’est moi qui te remercie. D’accord’, that he told her afterwards that the ‘chef’ had been calling, but she could not hear it in the audio.⁴³⁹³ P-2050 testified that when she asked who their boss, coordinator was, ‘Emotion Gomes’ mentioned Mr Ngaïssona by name, and further explained that when ‘12 Puissances’ was on the phone, it was very clear from his very submissive body language and his submissive way of talking in French that a superior in the chain of command had called.⁴³⁹⁴

1674. Brice Emotion Namsio testified that the military police arrested Larmassoum who was held at Mr Ngaïssona’s residence towards Pougoulou market, where ‘12 Puissances’ and his elements were, and the witness went to see and called journalists to film, following which the person was transferred to prison since the witness told ‘12 Puissances’ that they should not hurt him because justice should do its work.⁴³⁹⁵

1675. In light of the above evidence, and further recalling its assessment of P-2251’s credibility,⁴³⁹⁶ the Chamber does not rely on P-2251’s claim that ‘Larma’, who he admitted was held by ‘Douze Puissances’ at Mr Ngaïssona’s house, would have lied when saying that they hit him,⁴³⁹⁷ or that he did not see ‘Larma’ being tied up or covered in blood, especially in light of the fact that P-2251 does not appear to have been present continuously, but went to see ‘Larma’ and then returned to his base at Mr Ngaïssona’s warehouse.⁴³⁹⁸

1676. This is further underscored by P-2251 himself not denying that Thierry Lebene's group would have been based at Mr Ngaïssona's property, indeed stating that Mr Ngaïssona told 'Lebene' that they could all come and live at his house and warehouse in Boy-Rabe.⁴³⁹⁹ The Chamber considers of note in this context that P-2251 also testified that Mr Ngaïssona gave 'strict instructions' that they should not leave and not go out so there should be 'no problems' and 'peace should come back', and if they left 'that base' and fought 'against Seleka', he would no longer support them financially.⁴⁴⁰⁰ P-2251 further stated that Lundi, the marabout based in Bossembélé, visited once, Benjamin, Tchio and Mokpem also visited, and Andjilo, Tex, Mazimbelet also called Lebene to ask him to meet them.⁴⁴⁰¹ P-2251 stated that once Lebene was called by Freddy Ngaïssona, and Freddy told Lebene that his father wanted to meet him.⁴⁴⁰²

1677. In this context, the Chamber also notes the evidence of Aurélien Llorca, who stated that he interviewed Thierry Lebene on 22 March 2014, not far from where he interviewed Mr Ngaïssona later in Boy-Rabe.⁴⁴⁰³ Aurélien Llorca stated that Lebene told him that he reported to Mr Ngaïssona, speaking as if he was directly under Mr Ngaïssona, while for the witness it was very clear that Lebene was overestimating his own role, and that Maxime Mokom was in charge of military operations in the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁴⁰⁴

1678. Aurélien Llorca further stated that a confidential source indicated that in March 2014, Mr Ngaïssona and Bernard Mokom lived together.⁴⁴⁰⁵ The witness stated that the panel knew that the Mokom family had several houses in Bangui, particularly in Boy-Rabe, which were being used by the Anti-Balaka leadership, and that Mr Ngaïssona also had houses in this neighbourhood.⁴⁴⁰⁶ Aurélien Llorca also interviewed Mr Ngaïssona in May 2014 in what he believed was a compound belonging to Bernard Mokom's wife.⁴⁴⁰⁷ Aurélien Llorca opined that the fact that the Anti-Balaka could change ‘residency’ regularly would help them escape the attempts to arrest them by the international forces; he said that, in his expert capacity, he observed rebellion leaderships supporting the rebellion not necessarily by money but also by other means such as housing.⁴⁴⁰⁸

1679. Fourth, the evidence before the Chamber suggests that Mr Ngaïssona was in a position of influence over Anti-Balaka groups also in 2014, both before⁴⁴⁰⁹ and following the coordination set up in June 2014.⁴⁴¹⁰

1680. In this regard, Aurélien Llorca stated that when he met Mr Ngaïssona on 3 May 2014, he came across commanders from the provinces and Bangui who had come for a coordination meeting.⁴⁴¹¹ The witness stated that during their earlier talk, Thierry Lebene had mentioned Mr Ngaïssona as political coordinator, and that Mr Ngaïssona himself presented as the coordinator of the ‘liberators’, explaining that he represented them politically to defend their rights as ‘freedom fighters’,⁴⁴¹² and further stating that his role as the coordinator, in which he had addressed Catherine Samba-Panza on her election, would be confirmed in a general assembly.⁴⁴¹³ Aurélien Llorca stated that he concluded, based on repeated confirmation to that effect, that Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom regularly sent Anti-Balaka elements into the provinces, and that he heard that Mr Ngaïssona sent money to local commanders of groups that would then be added to a list of ‘Anti-Balaka commanders’ with their ‘Anti-Balaka element’.⁴⁴¹⁴ The witness testified that Mr Ngaïssona told him that, in his view, the Anti-Balaka were not represented sufficiently in the transition government, and that there was a desire ‘to exert pressure on the government through the Anti-Balaka’ to ‘obtain political leverage’.⁴⁴¹⁵ Aurélien Llorca stated that, in his analysis, someone like Mr Ngaïssona was trying to have ‘more personal political leverage by buying allegiance from these local groups’ since the more elements one had, the stronger the voice with government, UN, etc., and the more relevant he would become – the higher the number of Anti-Balaka under his coordination, the more power he would receive from that; and that is why he needed to maintain contact with the provinces.⁴⁴¹⁶ Aurélien Llorca stated that Mr Ngaïssona responded affirmatively to the witness’ question whether he was in control of the Anti-Balaka groups for example in Boy-Rabe, Combattant, Boeing, Castor, which in the panel’s analysis were indeed in control of the Anti-Balaka in 2014.⁴⁴¹⁷

1681. Aurélien Llorca stated that Mr Ngaïssona explained that he ‘sensitised’ the Anti-Balaka in Bangui and the provinces to reconcile and end the violence, further stating that he came to understand that it did not necessarily mean preaching reconciliation and the end of violence, but that it was a way to maintain and keep some form of ‘unity’ of the movement and the ‘link’ between the elements in the provinces and the leadership in Bangui, with one of the ways being handing over money to the Anti-Balaka in the provinces on the one side, and on the other side the Anti-Balaka in the provinces having an interest in someone representing them in Bangui.⁴⁴¹⁸

1682. The Chamber notes the evidence which suggests that the Anti-Balaka coordination under Mr Ngaïssona’s lead may not have been in full control of all actions of the various Anti-Balaka groups.⁴⁴¹⁹ As stated above, the Chamber does not consider any inability of Mr Ngaïssona to control Anti-Balaka groups to be of relevance for its determinations. In any event, the Chamber refers to its discussion of the general functioning of the Anti-Balaka within the framework of its structure evolving over time.⁴⁴²⁰

Financing

1683. One of the factors which the Chamber considered for purposes of assessing Mr Ngaïssona's contributions to the Anti-Balaka in 2014 relates to the question of providing financial assistance.

1684. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that there is no credible evidence showing that Mr Ngaïssona financed the Anti-Balaka after the attack of 5 December 2013 for the purchase of weapons and ammunition.⁴⁴²¹

1685. However, the evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that Mr Ngaïssona continued to provide financial assistance to the Anti-Balaka also following his return to Bangui in January 2014. In this regard, the Chamber considers that the specific purpose of providing money for purchase of weapons or ammunition is not alone determinative for concluding on Mr Ngaïssona's actions in relation to the charges. It has therefore considered the evidence before it also in relation to provision of financial assistance for other purposes.

1686. More generally, Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that Mr Ngaïssona accepted to be the leader of the Anti-Balaka, and therefore to put financial means at their disposal to manage them, meaning organising them to 'face the mercenaries'.⁴⁴²² The witness described how the ComZones sent support requests to the national coordination and the treasurer of the coordination worked with Mr Ngaïssona to address those requests, who personally gave money from his own pocket.⁴⁴²³ According to Jacob Mokpem-Bionli, each ComZone would receive money every week to feed the fighters.⁴⁴²⁴ The witness said that also other people who had the capability made financial contributions to feed the fighters,⁴⁴²⁵ though he could not see who else apart from Mr Ngaïssona could have actively provided financing for the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁴²⁶

1687. This was echoed by other witnesses who mentioned Mr Ngaïssona providing money to the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁴²⁷ In light of this evidence, the Chamber does not consider that this is put into doubt by the evidence of some other witnesses who indicated never receiving financial assistance from the Anti-Balaka coordination generally, or Mr Ngaïssona more specifically.⁴⁴²⁸ In the view of the Chamber, this is explained by the specific role and perspective of the witnesses at issue at the relevant time.

1688. Further, the evidence before the Chamber indicates that money was provided by Mr Ngaïssona for specific purposes. Some witnesses referred to Mr Ngaïssona providing money for Anti-Balaka elements to pay transport fees when they travelled to coordination meetings.⁴⁴²⁹ Other witnesses spoke of Mr Ngaïssona providing money for food,⁴⁴³⁰ sometimes linking it to thereby deterring elements from committing crimes,⁴⁴³¹ for medication,⁴⁴³² or to assist in case someone died.⁴⁴³³ Witnesses also spoke more generally of Mr Ngaïssona providing money to care of the needs of elements,⁴⁴³⁴ or to finance the coordination.⁴⁴³⁵ Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated in this regard that when Mr Ngaïssona found out they committed ‘a reprehensible act’, he would not provide assistance again.⁴⁴³⁶

1689. As regards the provision of funding for purposes of acquiring weapons and ammunition, the Chamber notes the following evidence.

1690. P-0954 testified that Mr Ngaïssona could not say this over the radio but said it in a meeting, and ‘everyone’ followed, that ‘each ComZone’ had the opportunity to monitor ‘their men’ and if they had ‘little’ money, they should stock munitions and arms to keep – one could never know when these mercenaries might return and this would help in putting up a resistance (‘que chaque ComZone eut l’opportunité de surveiller ses hommes et si vous avez de peu... de l’argent, il faut chercher à vous emprovisionner en munitions et en armes pour garder. On ne sait jamais le retour de ces mercenaires, ça va vous aider à résister. Il a dit ça en réunion et... et que tout le monde a... a suivi ça, mais il ne peut pas dire ça à la radio’).⁴⁴³⁷

1691. Further, P-0965 stated that Mr Ngaïssona gave ammunition to the group when he had some, or money to each group leader to buy ammunition or weapons of war to continue the fight.⁴⁴³⁸ P-0965 testified that he heard Mr Ngaïssona say to ask people who had any weapons of war or grenades to send them to him because he was looking to buy such supplies, and that

1692. P-2232 testified that he recalled one time after 5 December 2013 that Sylvestre Yagouzou arrived at ‘the coordination’ and gave weapons, ammunition, grenades to the coordination which paid for it, specifically Maxime Mokom came out with the money, but Mr Ngaïssona have the money to pay for the weapons or other equipment.⁴⁴⁴⁰ P-2232 said that they did not have enough resources and if needed, Mr Ngaïssona would check out the situation and they would go towards him for money, and he would buy something through his subordinates, associates.⁴⁴⁴¹ P-2232 testified that during meetings some ComZones said they needed materiel to continue the work, and the coordination decided to ask to identify people who were selling arms and point them to the coordination so it could buy weapons.⁴⁴⁴²

1693. The Chamber does not consider this concrete evidence to be weakened by generic assertions of other witnesses who stated not having heard or seen of Mr Ngaïssona providing financial means for the purchase of weapons or ammunition.⁴⁴⁴³

1694. Therefore, and on the basis of the evidence as outlined, the Chamber concludes that Mr Ngaïssona continued to provide financial assistance to the Anti-Balaka for various purposes in 2014. The Chamber concludes that these purposes included the purchase of weapons and ammunition.

1695. Further recalling its discussion of Mr Ngaïssona’s financial contributions to the activities of groups coalescing into the Anti-Balaka in 2013,⁴⁴⁴⁴ the Chamber concludes that Mr Ngaïssona’s financial contributions to the Anti-Balaka activities during the period relevant to the charges were regular and related to the Anti-Balaka manoeuvring or continuing to function. In this way, even if the financial contributions aimed also, or even mainly, at daily subsistence or reimbursement of travel costs for meetings, they inter-locked with the inter-operability of the Anti-Balaka. This is not contradicted by the argument that the ‘daily subsistence’ was conceived as a means to avoid looting or other criminal acts.

Knowledge and awareness

1696. The evidence before the Chamber shows that Mr Ngaïssona knew of the activities the Anti-Balaka engaged in, including the hostilities during their advance towards Bangui,⁴⁴⁴⁵ the Bangui Attack,⁴⁴⁴⁶ the Bossangoa Attack and the continued hostilities in 2014, and that this included the targeting of the Muslim civilian population.⁴⁴⁴⁷

1697. This is evidenced also by the repeated attempts, despite the above-mentioned knowledge, to absolve the Anti-Balaka from any responsibility for any violent acts, while only seemingly admitting to some Anti-Balaka elements possibly engaging in isolated acts of theft and looting.⁴⁴⁴⁸

1698. First, that the Anti-Balaka committed violent acts was common knowledge in the CAR at the time. Indeed, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that the existence of the various enclaves, ‘evacuations’ of Muslims from there, the attacks were public knowledge, people were waiting for the transport trucks so that they could attack them.⁴⁴⁴⁹

1699. P-0884 testified not knowing if Muslims living in enclaves or very difficult circumstances because of Anti-Balaka attacks was something known at the national coordination level, by Mr Ngaïssona and other members, but ‘normally they should have been aware as coordinator’, and P-0884 stated he himself was aware, and all the people in the CAR knew that in Yaloké, Fula people were ‘holed up’ and suffering.⁴⁴⁵⁰

1700.P-0567 stated that in Bangui it was well known that ‘this type of treatment’, meaning killing, cutting, targeting of Muslim civilians, was happening and pictures of body parts and cut heads were circulating.⁴⁴⁵¹

1701.Brice Emotion Namsio testified in relation to the statements of Catherine Samba-Panza during her visit to Mbaïki on 12 February 2014 that he heard them on the radio and that he personally did not see killings or the like, he followed on the radio that there were killings and ‘things of that nature’, ‘a little bit everywhere’.⁴⁴⁵² The witness testified that ‘somewhere along the line’ there was information on cases of killings, but he did not know ‘who did what’ and about the Anti-Balaka authorities who perpetrated major crimes.⁴⁴⁵³ The witness testified that everybody was aware there had been ‘certain excesses’, and that when the Anti-Balaka arrived the population initially ‘cheered’ them, but unfortunately after a while the population turned against ‘a few Balaka members who were committing crimes somewhere’; so each time there was ‘an event’, they would meet, anybody who had information would provide it, and the coordinator would give them instructions, and they would discuss ‘how to calm the situation’.⁴⁴⁵⁴ Brice Emotion Namsio testified that he heard about the violence in Yaloké and Boda through the radio.⁴⁴⁵⁵ The witness testified that there were no discussions in the national coordination because whenever there was something that did not work out ‘he’ called them (‘us’) and said this has happened, so he was informed that in this section there were events.⁴⁴⁵⁶

1702.Second, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that during her meetings with the Anti-Balaka, she did raise the subject; she saw a document during her testimony in which Mr Ngaïssona stated that if they had brought the Anti-Balaka in for ‘the management of the enclaves’, ‘the results would have been different’; and he sent a mission to Boda where things transpired ‘differently’; so, in her view, the Anti-Balaka were aware and they (‘we’) did talk about this, and this was ‘a reason for concern’.⁴⁴⁵⁷

1703. Third, Mr Ngaïssona as general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka received internal reports. In this regard, P-2232 testified that when the attacks in the provinces occurred, ‘the leaders’ called the coordination bureau to give a report.⁴⁴⁵⁸ P-2232 said that each time, Maxime Mokom was aware of the operations that were happening and gave a report to ‘the general coordinator’.⁴⁴⁵⁹ P-2232 testified that when elements stole and looted, they would not report to the coordination, but it was the victims who could inform the coordination; but a Muslim victim could not have that possibility; if a vehicle was taken, the coordination could ‘ask’ to give it back, but the problem was that the owner had to give money before it was returned; often it was the thief who asked for money and it was not via the coordination.⁴⁴⁶⁰ P-2232 testified that ‘everyone’ was aware of what was going on, they had contact with the leaders and were able to call people on the ground for information.⁴⁴⁶¹ P-2232 testified that he never saw Mr Ngaïssona being involved in matters pertaining to ‘small amounts’, or money from checkpoints and collection points the reports of those activities went to ‘Mokom’ and ‘Lieutenant Donoh’ and ‘Mokom’ would then use this money for food for the elements on the ground.⁴⁴⁶² P-2232 testified that during the meetings he participated in, they did not talk about what happened in the provinces, they discussed the situation in Bangui only, asking the ComZones to keep their elements in Bangui under control; according to P-2232, in the towns of the provinces, ‘there were no Muslims any more’, so they could not fight in those villages in any way, ‘[a]ll provincial sectors were under control of the Anti-Balaka’.⁴⁴⁶³

1704. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that after Mr Ngaïssona and ‘Mokom’ took over the leadership of the movement, only what was happening in the provinces was discussed, sometimes they called the ComZones in the provinces and heard about that, but the witness was not privy to what was being discussed, the coordination was responsible for what was happening with other cases and situations in the provinces.⁴⁴⁶⁴ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that after his arrival in Bangui, as regards attacks in the provinces, the ComZones called the ‘operations coordinator Mokom’, who reported to Mr Ngaïssona as ‘the general coordinator’.⁴⁴⁶⁵ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that ‘Mokom’ said from time to time that ‘the chief’ had called him to tell him about what had been happening in the provinces.⁴⁴⁶⁶

1705.P-0965 stated that everyone who became member of the Anti-Balaka knew they would commit ‘blood crimes’ (crimes de sang), so they could not take measures within the Anti-Balaka not to commit crimes.⁴⁴⁶⁷ P-0965 testified that when talking about combat between the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka, the Anti-Balaka were ‘simply shooting at armed Seleka’, but ‘when you see Anti-Balaka killing Muslims, although not all Muslims [were] members of the Seleka’, it was ‘civilians’ they killed.⁴⁴⁶⁸

1706.Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that incidents were reported to the national coordination by phone from Ouham, Ouham-Pendé, Mambéré-Kadéï, Nana-Mambéré and Nana-Gribizi, with towns Bouca, Batangafo, Nana-Bakassa, Markounda, Kouki, Bozoum, Pawa, Bokaranga, Kouï, Ngaoundaye, Berbérati, Carnot, Gamboula, Gadzi, Bouar, Baoro, Baboua, Beloko, Mbres and one other.⁴⁴⁶⁹ The witness stated that ‘Djim’, leader of the ‘real’ Anti-Balaka in Bossangoa, countered the attacks of the Seleka and used to keep the witness informed of any incidents in Ouham province.⁴⁴⁷⁰ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that when something happened and the Anti-Balaka were involved, especially in the hinterland, a team was set up, often led by the ComZone, to observe the reality that happened and report; very often there was lack of subsistence and means to control the elements; these operations were conducted towards the end of 2014.⁴⁴⁷¹ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that the national coordination ‘always insisted for calm and vigilance’ and avoiding ‘confrontation’.⁴⁴⁷²

bearing in mind that the witness also repeatedly stated having gotten involved only at that time,⁴⁴⁷³ nor by P-0889's suggestion that he would only have heard of thefts of motorcycles or vehicles, but 'never' of any other crimes by the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁴⁷⁴

1708. Thus, and in light of the above evidence, the Chamber considers that Mr Ngaïssona was aware, throughout the period relevant to the charges, of the activities of the Anti-Balaka and the violent acts committed by them in light of the fact of this being (i) common knowledge in the CAR at the time; (ii) raised with Mr Ngaïssona by the transition president; and (iii) reported internally in the Anti-Balaka.

iv. General functioning of the Anti-Balaka in 2014

1709. In what follows, the Chamber has assessed the structure and positions within the Anti-Balaka national coordination and its evolving structure and tussles for power. In examining, its structure, the Chamber assessed the evidence it received in relation to the roles of ComZones, Anti-Balaka bases in Bangui, their number, meetings between them, badges issued to them as well as the media statements made by the coordination. The Chamber has also assessed, in this context, the arguments concerning the 'fake' Anti-Balaka.

Structure of and positions within the national coordination

1710. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that over time, positions within the Anti-Balaka and who held them evolved.⁴⁴⁷⁵ However, when the structure of the Anti-Balaka formalised following Mr Ngaïssona's return to Bangui in the immediate aftermath of Michel Djotodia's resignation,⁴⁴⁷⁶ specific positions were assigned to individuals who acted accordingly.

1711. The evidence before the Chamber shows that within the formalised structure of the Anti-Balaka of early 2014, following Michel Djotodia's resignation, Maxime Mokom remained responsible for operations as coordinator of operations.⁴⁴⁷⁷

1712. P-2232 testified in this regard that Maxime Mokom had worked from the provinces and made it possible for them to advance right up to 5 December 2013, so 'they knew each other and they accepted his position as operations coordinator during the operations', and once Maxime Mokom returned and was appointed 'operations commander', no one opposed that decision.⁴⁴⁷⁸

1713. The evidence before the Chamber further shows that other individuals within this national coordination included, inter alia: Sébastien Wenezoui as spokesperson, and later deputy to Mr Ngaïssona;⁴⁴⁷⁹ Brice Émotion Namsio as spokesperson;⁴⁴⁸⁰ Judicael Orofe as secretary-general;⁴⁴⁸¹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya as political advisor;⁴⁴⁸² Jacob Mokpem Bionli as communications advisor;⁴⁴⁸³ Joachim Kokaté was seen as external relations or special advisor;⁴⁴⁸⁴ Richard Bejouane as Anti-Balaka chief of staff, with deputy Hyppolite Côme

Azounou;⁴⁴⁸⁵ Charles Ngremangou as Anti-Balaka representative to the Samba-Panza administration.⁴⁴⁸⁶

1714. Brice Emotion Namsio stated that after Djotodia's resignation, when Catherine Samba-Panza 'took power', 'they' decided that a bureau be set up for mission orders, which came later, and also press releases, and which depended on the coordination with coordinator Mr Ngaïssona, his deputy ('son second') Wenezoui and Kokaté, operation coordinators, and communication and religious advisors.⁴⁴⁸⁷ Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated in this regard that all documents that were approved for release by Mr Ngaïssona were entered into a register and a reference was assigned by the general secretary Judicael Orofei.⁴⁴⁸⁸

1715. Alfred Legrand Ngaya further stated that members of the 'Coordination/Steering Committee' were Mr Ngaïssona, Konaté, Namsio, Wenezoui, Mokom, Kokaté and himself, and that their goal was 'to prevent and control the Anti-Balaka from acting like the Seleka', their role was to 'provide leadership' to the Anti-Balaka and they tried to 'raise awareness of the youth not to commit human rights violations'.⁴⁴⁸⁹ The witness stated that some in the coordination committee had prior close relationships with Mr Ngaïssona, such as Kokaté and Mokom; it was 'difficult to get educated people to join the Anti-Balaka', intellectuals 'feared the ICC'.⁴⁴⁹⁰ According to Alfred Legrand Ngaya, the organisation was 'not structured properly' in that for example the chief of staff was 'not really' such because there were 'hardly any troops'.⁴⁴⁹¹

1716. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that after the coordination was established, it was decided at the level of the coordination that some of the chiefs with 'more morals and ability' should become ComZones, so for example 'Benjamin' from Ndjo and Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana became ComZones of Mandaba in Boy-Rabe, with chiefs under them in the same zone being Patrick Orofei, Mazimbelet and ‘Tiyo’.⁴⁴⁹² The witness stated that each neighbourhood had a ComZone, secretary, chiefs, deputies, elements, with the zones delineated by ‘the Coordination’.⁴⁴⁹³ The witness provided further details on the organisation of his base, including how he maintained discipline.⁴⁴⁹⁴ According to him, literate and illiterate ComZones ‘did not function the same way’.⁴⁴⁹⁵ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana stated that it was possible for ‘an Anti-Balaka’ to walk around other districts, but one would speak to the chief first, ‘a chief or a ComZone had to be informed by phone before going into another zone’.⁴⁴⁹⁶ According to the witness, no ComZones from other zones could come to Boy-Rabe, but they could go anywhere; ‘nobody’ would tell them anything because they were ‘the real Anti-Balaka with real gris-gris’; they could ‘create trouble anywhere’.⁴⁴⁹⁷

1717. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below illustrates that the Anti-Balaka was, in 2014, subject to certain discussions as to who should be its leader. In the view of the Chamber, such discussions were but a further illustration of various individuals superimposing different personal and political ambitions on the group. At the same time, the person who eventually prevailed in leading the Anti-Balaka was Mr Ngaïssona, and the Anti-Balaka were represented as one movement at peace negotiations and in contacts with the national authorities and international community. Importantly, the Chamber notes, in this context, its conclusion on the continuation of hostilities between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka until the end of February 2014.⁴⁴⁹⁸ Thus, the discussions about leadership happened after the events as charged in the current case took place. Therefore, any discussion of a possible split within the Anti-Balaka as an organisation is, at best, of indirect relevance to the determinations of the Chamber.

1718. In this regard, the Chamber notes the conclusions of the CAR Panel,⁴⁴⁹⁹ which stated in its 2014 interim report that the ‘idiosyncratic complexity of the structure of anti-Balaka is reinforced by the fluidity which characterizes the relationship between its different components’.⁴⁵⁰⁰ According to the report, Mr Ngaïssona and Sébastien Wenezoui claimed to represent ‘Rombhot’ or control the Anti-Balaka groups in Boda and Bouar, while Bara, appointed as Anti-Balaka representative in the government but not recognised as such, was perceived as being behind the initiative of Montaigne that led to Sébastien Wenezoui being chosen as general coordinator, which in turn was qualified by Mr Ngaïssona as ‘farce’.⁴⁵⁰¹ At the time of its report in October 2014, the panel found that the division between factions had deepened following the Brazzaville forum.⁴⁵⁰²

1719. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that Sébastien Wenezoui challenged Mr Ngaïssona for his leadership of the Anti-Balaka. Whilst Sébastien Wenezoui proclaimed himself coordinator of the Anti-Balaka at a meeting in Pissmiss in May 2014, following mediation by the NGOs Mouda and PARETO, Mr Ngaïssona prevailed as general coordinator in June 2014, Sébastien Wenezoui being installed as his deputy. The Chamber notes in this regard its conclusions as to the hostilities between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka until the end of February 2014.⁴⁵⁰³

1720. Importantly in this regard, P-0884 confirmed that there was no Anti-Balaka ‘south’, no Anti-Balaka ‘north’, but one Anti-Balaka with one objective, namely to ‘drive Djotodia and his mercenaries out’.⁴⁵⁰⁴ He explained that there was discontent among the ranks, including because of Kokaté on the radio describing the Anti-Balaka from the south as the ‘good’ Anti-Balaka and the others not, as well as because they thought the movement was being used for political purposes.⁴⁵⁰⁵ P-0884 stated that Sébastien Wenezoui wanted to draw Mr Ngaïssona’s attention as they had no information about what was going on and he should not just have political considerations but also think of the fighters and DDR, so Mr Yekatom ‘Rambo’, Kamezolari and Wenezoui held a meeting at PK9, wanting to dismiss Mr Ngaïssona and designate Wenezoui or ‘Yagouzou’ as the general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka to provoke a reaction, but since some people did not come, they designated Wenezoui as coordinator.⁴⁵⁰⁶ P-0884 stated that they had invited people from Boy-Rabe, but neither Ngremangou nor Mr Ngaïssona were there because they knew ‘full well’ what the intention was.⁴⁵⁰⁷

1721. P-0884 testified that Mr Ngaïssona came back to Bangui in January 2014 and became the general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, while Maxime Mokom initially remained in Zongo and maintained a certain level of communication with Mr Ngaïssona, who also worked with Bernard Mokom and Kokaté.⁴⁵⁰⁸ P-0884 stated that the national coordination was set up at Mr Ngaïssona’s house, the list of people was sent out, from February onwards, and once established, meetings were held in public rooms, and what it was about was public and well known.⁴⁵⁰⁹

Ngaïssona in reaction thereto,⁴⁵¹¹ a gathering was held on 15 May 2014 in which Sébastien Wenezoui was presented as Anti-Balaka general coordinator.

1723. The Chamber has before it video footage of the gathering on 15 May 2014, discussed extensively with various witnesses. In his speech at the meeting, Sébastien Wenezoui stated that they created the Anti-Balaka with everyone, that they tried to organise with ‘Rombhot Yekatom’, Kamezolai, Ngremangou and all brothers, while 16 soldiers based in the Bossangoa area formed the hard core of the Anti-Balaka and arrived to Bangui with them, where they fought well (‘ils sont arrivés à Bangui avec nous, et nous avons bien combattu’), but if someone came from abroad and wanted to take advantage, they would not sit idly and watch them destroy the movement which did not have a political character.⁴⁵¹² Léopold Bara also spoke at the gathering, stating that there could be no unified coordination without involving ‘the other side’, speaking in favour of a unified coordination with reference to the previous coordination set up under Mr Ngaïssona’s lead, and reiterating not to forget that it was responsible for the Anti-Balaka exactions, and crimes within the jurisdiction of the ICC were ‘imprescriptible’.⁴⁵¹³

1725. Some witnesses suggested that the gathering on 15 May 2014 took place following a request of then-minister Antoinette Montaigne to have a single coordination.⁴⁵¹⁵ The Chamber

considers this evidence inconclusive insofar as the same witnesses talking of this request also stated that the ‘south’ decided to have its own coordination because it did not want to be with the ‘north’ regarding which they had heard bad things, such as looting and killings,⁴⁵¹⁶ that until Wenezoui was appointed, the ‘south’ had no structure,⁴⁵¹⁷ or that it was Wenezoui’s appointment which created tension and led to a division between the ‘north’ and ‘south’.⁴⁵¹⁸ Another witness suggests that both Anti-Balaka ‘north’ and ‘south’ were invited to this meeting.⁴⁵¹⁹

1726. This initial disagreement did not last long and in June 2014 a new coordination bureau of the Anti-Balaka was announced with Mr Ngaïssona as general coordinator and Sébastien Wenezoui as his deputy. Indeed, as P-0884 testified, just three weeks later a reconciliation was organised, facilitated by some NGOs.⁴⁵²⁰ Mr Yekatom also attended a meeting to this effect.⁴⁵²¹

1727. The evidence before the Chamber shows that, at the end of June 2014, the Anti-Balaka coordination agreed on its composition retaining Mr Ngaïssona as general coordinator, while

Sébastien Wenezoui became his deputy, and Maxime Mokom continuing as the operations coordinator with his deputy Sylvestre Yagouzou, and decided on various other positions.⁴⁵²² According to P-1858, Mr Yekatom was represented in this coordination by general secretary Romaric Vomitiande, general treasurer Vivien Beina, and mediation advisor Paleon Nzilabo.⁴⁵²³

1728. Some witnesses said that there was ‘no cooperation’ or ‘little interaction’ between ‘north’ and ‘south’ before that time,⁴⁵²⁴ or talked about ‘hostile relations’ between Anti-Balaka from the ‘north’ and ‘south’ before the coordination set up in June 2014.⁴⁵²⁵

1729. The Chamber considers this incorrect on the basis of the evidence before it, as is shown by the various coordination efforts before, during and following the Bangui Attack.⁴⁵²⁶ This evidence shows that even without formalised ‘coordination’ as an organisational entity, the Anti-Balaka coordinated their activities. The Chamber is of the view that even if there was no formalised coordinated entity with a pre-existing hierarchical structure, and even if various political and personal interests superimposed the activities over time, and especially in the aftermath of Michel Djotodia’s resignation, this did not mean that the Anti-Balaka groups did not engage in coordinated activities. It is clear from the evidence before the Chamber that the Anti-Balaka was no static structure that already existed before the time relevant to the charges or remained unchanged throughout that period. However, it is also clear from the evidence that during the period relevant to the charges, the Anti-Balaka groups exhibited clear signs of structure, operational capability and coordination that remained present even if evolving in its details over time.

1730. Eventually, and following a further disagreement surrounding the attendance at the Brazzaville forum,⁴⁵²⁷ Mr Ngaïssona expelled Sébastien Wenezoui from the Anti-Balaka in August 2014, after which Sébastien Wenezoui set up his own movement.⁴⁵²⁸

1731. The evidence before the Chamber further shows that Joachim Kokaté, who was one of the Anti-Balaka representatives in the transition government under Catherine Samba-Panza, distanced himself from the Anti-Balaka around mid-February 2014,⁴⁵²⁹ while Léopold Bara, another Anti-Balaka representative in the government, was expelled from the Anti-Balaka by Mr Ngaïssona in June 2014,⁴⁵³⁰ on the same day as the Anti-Balaka agreed on a unified coordination with Sébastien Wenezoui as deputy to Mr Ngaïssona.

1732. Moreover, the evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom divided over who was to lead the Anti-Balaka. It appears that the disagreement developed over time, with discussions taking place following the

The Chamber considers immaterial in this context that certain other witnesses denied that weapons would have been stored at the football federation (see P-2843: T-074, p. 50, line 23 – p. 51, line 19; see also P-1193: T-125, p. 46, line 10 – p. 47, line 3). P-0876 made clear that this information was received by Léopold Bara from others, on the basis of which the latter then took certain decisions in his ministerial capacity. Whether any weapons were in fact stored at the football federation does not impact the Chamber's discussion of P-0876's evidence on Léopold Bara's removal from the Anti-Balaka.

Brazzaville forum, continuing over the creation of the PCUD by Mr Ngaïssona, and leading to a split following the Nairobi talks in April 2015.⁴⁵³¹

1733. Several witnesses mentioned allegations against Maxime Mokom on having embezzled part of the money which the Anti-Balaka delegation that attended the Brazzaville talks received for its participation.⁴⁵³²

1734. It appears from the evidence that an eventual split of Maxime Mokom from the Anti-Balaka took place after Mr Ngaïssona announced the transformation of the Anti-Balaka into a political party towards the end of 2014, or indeed only after the Nairobi talks in April 2015.⁴⁵³³

1735. Overall, the evidence in this regard suggests that, at that point in time, Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom disagreed on the political vision for the movement – namely on whether the return of François Bozizé to power should be supported, which Mr Ngaïssona at that time had moved on from, whereas Maxime Mokom continued to support this position.⁴⁵³⁴

1736. In this context, Aurélien Llorca, who interviewed Maxime Mokom on 27 June 2015,⁴⁵³⁵ heard from the latter that he split from Mr Ngaïssona on 23 October 2014 after Mr Ngaïssona announced the creation of the PCUD, because he did not want to be involved in politics and was just an Anti-Balaka leader who wanted to defend the population from the Seleka.⁴⁵³⁶ Aurélien Llorca stated that Maxime Mokom also said that he wanted to be recognised as the real leader of the Anti-Balaka, politically and militarily, and did not want to be seen ‘solely as a Gbaya’ from Bozizé’s clan.⁴⁵³⁷ Overall, the witness was of the view that Maxime Mokom’s real function corresponded to his title of military coordinator, as he never came across any information, apart from the interview with Lebene, which contradicted the statement that Maxime Mokom was the military commander of the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁵³⁸

1737. Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda provided further perspective insofar as stating that Maxime Mokom got angry when Mr Ngaïssona was appointed as coordinator.⁴⁵³⁹ The witness said that about three or four months after the meeting at Mr Ngaïssona’s house, still in 2014, Maxime Mokom went to a meeting in Kenya, after which the witness attended a meeting with Maxime Mokom behind the airport in Boeing, with ‘maybe’ 100 other people, at which it was discussed that ‘the military should be given ranks’ and the civilians ministerial or other positions in the government, as per the ‘resolutions of the Kenya meeting’.⁴⁵⁴⁰ According to Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda, at that point in time, there were two groups, one around Maxime Mokom and one around Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁵⁴¹

ComZones

1738. The evidence before the Chamber, as further outlined below, shows that leaders of Anti-Balaka groups were generally known as ‘zone commanders’ or ‘ComZones’. This evidence shows that such ComZones often remained in place in the context of the Anti-Balaka beginning to formalise a hierarchical structure, while some were also specifically appointed by the coordination. The Chamber considers that irrespective of which designation may have been used, it is clear on the evidence before it that the Anti-Balaka groups had respective leaders which established in certain zones, and that they did not act fully autonomously.

1739. Specifically, P-0975 stated that the structure of the Anti-Balaka once in Bangui remained the same as when they were in the provinces, but some people proclaimed themselves ComZones and gathered men.⁴⁵⁴²

1740. Similarly, Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that ComZones were zone commanders in charge of leading the Anti-Balaka in their zones, reporting to the coordination; the elements designated their ComZones and after they were officially appointed in their functions by the national coordination.⁴⁵⁴³ The witness said that when people organised themselves in the hinterland, they needed someone to lead, but they were not called ComZones at the time.⁴⁵⁴⁴

1741. Vivien Beina stated that zone commanders came after the conflict, a ComZone is the commander of the bush elements who came into the city, they were self-proclaimed, not selected by the coordination.⁴⁵⁴⁵ The witness said that the ComZones did not just stay in their own zone, they moved around, but commanders respected each other's zones.⁴⁵⁴⁶ According to the witness, it was after 5 December 2013 that they gathered to give some structure and adopted the term 'ComZone' for the leaders.⁴⁵⁴⁷ Vivien Beina said that Mokom had the contacts of all the Anti-Balaka who were in the provinces, but Mr Ngaïssona never called a ComZone.⁴⁵⁴⁸

1742. P-0889 stated that the Anti-Balaka leaders in Bangui or the provinces were ComZones, leaders of a sector, an Anti-Balaka was designated as ComZone once the Seleka were driven out and he took control over that zone.⁴⁵⁴⁹

1743. Jacob Mokpem-Bionli stated that the later national coordination, including Mr Ngaïssona, himself, Olivier Feissona as chief of staff, was regularly informed of what was happening in the provinces.⁴⁵⁵⁰ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli said this national coordination also had mission in-charges ('chargés de mission') who went to the provinces as necessary, on the basis of mission orders signed by Mr Ngaïssona who often gave money to them for the ComZones to maintain their elements, he wanted good morale of the troops so he helped them.⁴⁵⁵¹

1744.P-0965 stated that ComZones were the people at the head of the various groups, including Hardy (Gobongo (4th arrondissement)), Mokpem (Begoua at PK12), Emotion (Boy-Rabe), Gustav (Combattant (8th arrondissement)), Chocolat (Damala (8th arrondissement)), Bawa (Damala (towards 5th arrondissement)), Modibot Condohasa (Bossembélé), Le Bleu (Yaloké), Tex (Bokangolo), José (Bouca), Osaguin (Damara), Jervain (Damara), Rodrigue (Bangui, then Bouca), Kolongo (110), 'Rambo' (Mbaïki road), Thierry aka 12 Puissances (Boban), Aaron in Garam-Boulay, followed by John and then Bria aka Kadhafi.⁴⁵⁵²

1745.Aurélien Llorca stated that in Bangui all neighbourhoods under Anti-Balaka control, such as Boy-Rabe, Combattant, Boeing, Castor, were under control of various ComZones who, in turn, were under the coordination of area coordinators, military coordinator, and on top Mr Ngaïssona's coordination.⁴⁵⁵³ The witness stated that ComZones were usually more educated, better dressed and better spoken than 'foot soldiers', commanders included a lot of members of the CAR armed/security forces personnel, although there were exceptions like Andjilo.⁴⁵⁵⁴ Aurélien Llorca stated that Lebene explained during his interview in March 2014 that the Anti-Balaka general staff was composed of area coordinators, companies, sections,⁴⁵⁵⁵ while Florent Kema said during his interview in April 2015 that 'Mokom' used to be the military coordinator.⁴⁵⁵⁶ Aurélien Llorca testified that the panel could establish the structuring of the roles of each echelon within the Anti-Balaka movement.⁴⁵⁵⁷

1746.P-1193 testified that ComZones existed before May 2014, but also stated that he did not know if ComZones existed already before the attack of 5 December 2013.⁴⁵⁵⁸

1747.The Chamber notes that the Prosecution relies on a document entitled 'Liste des Com Zones Antibalaka' to underpin its submission on the Anti-Balaka's structure.⁴⁵⁵⁹ While it seems that at least some individuals on this list were indeed ComZones or other elements in the Anti-Balaka,⁴⁵⁶⁰ it also seems that others mentioned as such on this list were not.⁴⁵⁶¹ P-0889 stated that he compiled this list with ComZones 'since 2013'.⁴⁵⁶² P-0889 further testified that this was compiled in the context of DDR efforts, but that it was not an exhaustive list.⁴⁵⁶³ Overall, the Chamber notes that the list contains names also suggested by other evidence as Anti-Balaka elements and/or ComZones, but has not considered it determinative or exhaustive in determining who may have been such.

1748.Various witnesses testified about ComZones both in Bangui and in the provinces falling under the lead of the Anti-Balaka national coordination, being in contact and/or providing reports, including to Mr Ngaïssona,⁴⁵⁶⁴ while at the same time suggesting that they may have enjoyed a certain degree of autonomy.

1749.Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that there about 20 to 25 ComZones in Bangui who did not necessarily control a specific area or zone, but could be in charge of a group of Anti-Balaka with freedom of movement in the area, for example in Boy-Rabe there were several groups with their own commanders.⁴⁵⁶⁵ The witness testified that ComZones had 'homogeneous' and 'autonomous' groups that came from various villages and remained within 'the original groups’ when they came to Bangui.⁴⁵⁶⁶ The witness agreed with the suggestion that ComZones did not necessarily have control or knowledge of the existence of all armed persons within a particular location.⁴⁵⁶⁷ He also agreed with the suggestion that one of the reasons for the lack of control was linked to the insufficiency of international forces and lack of their assistance.⁴⁵⁶⁸ The witness testified that the ComZones were autonomous, independent, one could not give them orders, Mr Ngaïssona’s approach was usually to give them money to help them out, but there was no way for him to put any pressure and Alfred Legrand Ngaya did not know how Mr Ngaïssona could have stopped abuses in the context of missions.⁴⁵⁶⁹ Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that the coordination contacted the ComZones in the provinces by telephone, they had been given instructions to identify and list their elements, requested MISCA that the Anti-Balaka leadership should be able to visit the provinces with MISCA security to better understand the organisation, but MISCA did not provide security.⁴⁵⁷⁰ Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that there was one ComZone in each area, generally they did not have deputies and secretaries, and ‘simply organised themselves’.⁴⁵⁷¹

1750.P-2269 stated that once the coordination was set up, some people were more in touch with Yaloké, Bossemtélé, and Carnot, and they would all report to the coordination.⁴⁵⁷² P-2269 stated that the ComZones held meetings with the coordination, about two to three a month, usually attended by the chiefs who then conveyed the message of the meetings to their elements, mostly discussing the DDR process ‘once things calmed down’.⁴⁵⁷³ P-2269 stated that they also informed the coordination about their problems, which would follow up if anything had to be done.⁴⁵⁷⁴ P-2269 stated that he also maintained contact with ComZones of the provinces, the coordination would inform them when something happened in the provinces and if necessary provide transport for the ComZones of the provinces to come to Bangui.⁴⁵⁷⁵ P-2269 stated that the ComZones of the provinces were elected by ‘the men of the provinces’, and the coordination would be informed of who the ComZones were.⁴⁵⁷⁶ P-2269 stated that he went to the provinces many times, but not to the areas in the west, one could not go to any area without authorisation and his territory covered Ouham when he was in Bangui and when he returned to Bossangoa, and they were all under the coordination.⁴⁵⁷⁷

1751. The evidence before the Chamber includes information on Habib Soussou being appointed by Mr Ngaïssona as ComZone for Boda in mid-2014.⁴⁵⁷⁸ P-1962 stated that as part of the roles as coordinator and deputy coordinator of the provisional coordination in Boda, Habib Soussou and he were also keeping the national coordination in Bangui, Mr Ngaïssona directly or someone else in the coordination like Wenezoui, informed about the situation in Boda, mostly by phone and sometimes in person when they (‘we’) were in Bangui.⁴⁵⁷⁹ P-1962 stated that he did not have any contact with Mr Ngaïssona before the attack in Boda on 4 February 2014.⁴⁵⁸⁰ P-1962 testified that at the time of the reconciliation mission in Boda, the Anti-Balaka there recognised Mr Ngaïssona as the sole coordinator; they distrusted people who presented themselves as coordinator or anything of that nature.⁴⁵⁸¹ P-1962 stated that they did not receive directions or feedback on their reports, so at one point they (‘we’) stopped sending the reports.⁴⁵⁸²

1752. In relation to Carnot, Barthélémy Namsenmo stated that as coordinator/ComZone of Carnot after the period relevant to the charges, he would be called to go to meetings by his own means, then reimbursed by Mr Ngaïssona’s coordination, but they did not receive information from the coordination through other means, only sometimes through radio or receiving ‘communiqués’.⁴⁵⁸³

1753.P-2556 testified generally that the coordinator in Bangui received reports of everything, all coordinators provided reports.⁴⁵⁸⁴ P-2556 further testified that Mr Ngaïssona was the national coordinator and when he gave instructions, they would be carried out and sent on to the elements to be implemented in the field, for example when instructing them to put elements at the entry and exit points of the town, or to send photos for new ID cards.⁴⁵⁸⁵ P-2556 testified that during that time, maybe around the third month until the end of 2014, the national coordinator and ComZones communicated regularly.⁴⁵⁸⁶ P-2556 testified that when passing on information and instructions, the ComZone said he had just spoken with the ‘high authorities’ in Bangui, and they knew these authorities were ‘actually Mr Ngaïssona’.⁴⁵⁸⁷

1754.P-0876 stated, when asked about a ‘structure’ of the Anti-Balaka for the attack on 5 December 2013, that at the bottom were the elements, followed by ComZones, about a hundred though these included about 30 main ones, then intermediaries who looked for money to feed each group, one or two military coordinators on the ground, including Konaté, ‘12 Puissances’, ‘Rombho’, Kamezolari, all this headed by Ngremangou who was in contact with those abroad, including Maxime Mokom in Zongo and ‘les Bozizé’, with the political structure including François Bozizé, Lin Banoukepa, Levy Yakété, Pascale Koyagbele, Francis Bozizé, Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁵⁸⁸ P-0876 qualified this by stating that there would not have been a pyramid structure of the Anti-Balaka general coordination, his answer concerned self-defence groups coming together for the purpose of defending villages and the empirical representation, which was not a structured entity as such.⁴⁵⁸⁹ P-0876 testified that between January 2014 and June 2014, there was no coordination that brought together the ‘two camps’, but Mr Ngaïssona continued making statements as general coordinator, even when ComZones said that some individuals acted on their behalf, ‘whereas they had no interaction with the elements on the ground’.⁴⁵⁹⁰

1755. P-1193 testified, speaking of the time following the setting up of the June 2014 coordination, that ComZones came from Bangui and the provinces for meetings at which they received messages from the coordination, concerning that ‘the war was over’, that ‘everyone should be accepted as brothers’, and they ‘were to get ready for the elections’.⁴⁵⁹¹ P-1193 testified that they did not have all the information because no ComZones said what they had done and even if they heard over the radio that certain things happened, people in the hinterland would deny it systematically.⁴⁵⁹² P-1193 testified that there was no possibility of forcing a ComZone to a meeting if they refused, the coordination was in some way a means to unify people who had ‘goodwill and wanted to pass on the message’.⁴⁵⁹³ P-1193 agreed with the suggestion that the coordination did not have the means for example to disarm, but did have ‘the communications to avoid the crimes and work towards peace’.⁴⁵⁹⁴ P-1193 further agreed with the suggestion that at the time, there was a vacuum in security authority in the CAR.⁴⁵⁹⁵

1756. P-1521 testified that the role of the coordinator was to represent them on a political level, but also agreed with the suggestion that the chain of command was not respected, this was set up to control the ‘true’ Anti-Balaka under certain chiefs.⁴⁵⁹⁶ P-1521 testified that there were about 20 ComZones in Bangui when including Bimbo and Begoua, about eight zones across Bangui plus two on the Damara and Bouali axis, and numerous ComZones outside of Bangui.⁴⁵⁹⁷ P-1521 also mentioned ‘prefectural coordinators’.⁴⁵⁹⁸ P-1521 testified that they decided to have a coordinator of operations to ‘investigate and control’ ComZones.⁴⁵⁹⁹ The Chamber does not consider credible the witness’s suggestion that Mr Ngaïssona would in the beginning have been against the creation of the position of an operations coordinator because he did not think it was necessary and that it was only given to Maxime Mokom so there would not be ‘too much frustration’.⁴⁶⁰⁰ It is clear from the evidence before the Chamber, as outlined above, that Maxime Mokom was, without question or hesitation, designated to be operations coordinator upon Mr Ngaïssona’s return to Bangui and the initial steps to formalise the structure of the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁶⁰¹ P-1521 testified that between January and June 2014, it was the same structure which continued to function because the ComZones were each responsible for their elements, even when Mr Ngaïssona came to represent them, he did not have control of the movement, did not ‘master’ all the ComZones or elements.⁴⁶⁰²

Anti-Balaka bases in Bangui

1757. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined below shows that following the coordinated attacks of 5 December 2013, Anti-Balaka groups set up across different neighbourhoods in Bangui. Indeed, the Chamber notes that Anti-Balaka groups had already set up in some of these locations prior to and in awaiting execution of the Bangui Attack.⁴⁶⁰³ It appears that position of bases and Anti-Balaka groups stationed there evolved over time. Thus, and in the current context, the Chamber has examined the position of bases in Bangui as an indication of the reach of Anti-Balaka groups within the city after the attack of 5 December 2013, as well as of the level of structure and organisation. The Chamber further notes its discussion of the location of Mr Yekatom’s group following 5 December 2013 below.⁴⁶⁰⁴

1758. For instance, Thierry Lebene aka 12 Puissances was based at Mr Ngaïssona’s concession.⁴⁶⁰⁵ The Chamber recalls in this regard its discussion of the interview with ‘Emotion Gomez’ and 12 Puissances at Mr Ngaïssona’s compound in February 2014, in the context of the capture and detention of Jean-Jacques Larmassoum.⁴⁶⁰⁶

1759. Further, Brice Emotion Namsio stated that following the Bangui Attack, the so-called Anti-Balaka groups could not withdraw leaving the population, so they organised and divided the neighbourhoods to protect the peaceful population against the Seleka.⁴⁶⁰⁷ He stated that for example, ‘Gremangou’ and Wenezoui had more than 2000 elements behind the airport, which they dispatched into the neighbourhoods to protect the population in Boeing against the Seleka because at some point Seleka left KM5 and entered Boeing to commit violence.⁴⁶⁰⁸ The witness detailed further that, inter alia, Guy Mazimbele was behind the national assembly; Andjilo was in Boy-Rabe, Bafio, at his uncle’s who was also deputy operations coordinator, ‘Ndemate’ Dieudonné, together also with Andjilo’s younger brother Dieudonné Ngaïbona; Benjamin Ouapoutou was based in Mandaba, still in Boy-Rabe; Yvon Konaté and his deputy Feissona Olivier were in Cité Jean XXIII; ‘Gremangou’ and Wenezoui were in Boeing, behind the airport; Mokpem was towards PK12; Yamdjoungou Gustave, in Cité Jean XXIII; ‘Ouranti’ was based at PK12; Emtenou and Bruno Ngaïssona, his deputy, were next to the compound of Mr Ngaïssona’s father; and Touaboy was at PK12, at the north exit of Bangui.⁴⁶⁰⁹ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana additionally mentioned that, for the time after the attacks of 5 December 2013 and before the return of Mr Ngaïssona, ‘Kolongo’, the witness’s cousin was at Mandaba; Mokpem at PK10 Gobongo; and ‘Sol-Sol’ in PK12.⁴⁶¹⁰

1760. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana, who returned to Bangui when Mr Ngaïssona was already there and acted as Anti-Balaka coordinator, but before Maxime Mokom arrived, stated that at the time the Anti-Balaka controlled the neighbourhoods of Boy-Rabe, 8th arrondissement, Combattant and PK12.⁴⁶¹¹ Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana said that his cousin ‘Kolongo’ was a chief in Mandaba, Boy-Rabe, but left for Damara, leaving his elements without chief, and the witness replaced him, later being appointed as ComZone of Mandaba by Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁶¹² According to the witness, when Mr Ngaïssona returned to Bangui, the chiefs met and the localities were divided into zones, the various zone commanders put into place, with the concept of ComZones coming once the coordination had been put in place and bases transformed into zones led by ComZones.⁴⁶¹³ When Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana got to Bangui, he was taken to the home of Mr Ngaïssona, the coordinator, and told which zone.⁴⁶¹⁴ The witness testified that Kema became a ComZone when they arrived in Bossembélé, he was ComZone in Bossangoa.⁴⁶¹⁵

1761. Alfred Legrand Ngaya mentioned Anti-Balaka bases near the airport in Boeing, in Combattants, including in Sylvestre Yagouzou's house, Damala, Boy-Rabe, Bafio, Dedenge and Mandaba.⁴⁶¹⁶ According to the witness, the only two arrondissements which did not have Anti-Balaka bases were the 1st and the 3rd.⁴⁶¹⁷

1762. P-0975 testified that he established a base at 'Cité Jean XIII' in Boy-Rabe once the Seleka finally fled Bangui, before sending his combatants back to their original provinces in the Bouca area, whereas he decided to stay in Bangui.⁴⁶¹⁸

1763. Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda stated that when he returned to Bangui two weeks after Catherine Samba-Panza took over, Hervé Ganazoui told him that he was at the 'Big Boss's' – Mr Ngaïssona's – house.⁴⁶¹⁹

1764.P-0954 testified that Basile Mbomon established a base in Bimbo 1, in a compound opposite General Gambi's compound, on 10 January 2014, and he had people opposite Kolongo school at the Île de Singes and strategic points.⁴⁶²⁰

1765.P-2269 stated that after Djotodia's resignation, the chiefs spread to different neighbourhoods to protect them; he went to Boy-Rabe, Bafio, because it was near the hill in case they needed to retreat and he knew the area.⁴⁶²¹ According to P-2269, ComZones were positioned in a strategic manner, according to the various spots from which one could attack Bangui, and depending on where the elements came from.⁴⁶²²

1766.The Chamber has before it a typed list of names entitled 'Liste des Antibalakas Bangui – phase 1', which lists names, at particular bases, each associated with a specific individual, such as, inter alia, 'Base SOS L[ebene Thierry]', 'Base Ndressl O[uapoutou] Benjamin', 'Base N[goumboutou] 2 G[odonam] Achille', 'Base PK 13 N[ganafio] Honoré', 'Base E[agle Monastere] D[enamganaï] Abel', 'Base N[goulanga Bimbo1] M[bomon] Basil', 'B[ase Bafio] N[domate] Dieuonné'.⁴⁶²³ The evidence before the Chamber suggests that this list was put together for purposes of participation in a DDR programme.⁴⁶²⁴ The Chamber notes in this context a document seemingly of February 2014 outlining a suggested project for DDR of Anti-Balaka combatants, which mentions, inter alia, the following bases with related ComZones and number of elements: (i) Boy-Rabe: Andilo Ngaïbona – 260; Ouapoutou Benjamin – 402; Lebene Thierry – 730; Denamganaï Aimé Abel – 350; Mazimbelet Guy – 449; (ii) Cité Jean XXIII: Yadjoungou Guy Gustave – 308; Konaté Yvon – 368; Bejouane Richard – 286; (iii) PK 12: Mokpem Guy Gervais – 446.⁴⁶²⁵ The Chamber further notes that the document refers to an overall total number of elements in Bangui of 10,084.⁴⁶²⁶

Numbers of elements

1767. The evidence before the Chamber concerning the number of Anti-Balaka elements across the CAR in 2014 varies, but suggests that overall, by February 2014, there would have been approximately 50,000 Anti-Balaka elements in Bangui and across the provinces.⁴⁶²⁷

Meetings

1768. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that in 2014, meetings of Anti-Balaka leaders and ComZones were convened by and held at Mr Ngaïssona's properties as well as at the Azimut hotel, as paid for by Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁶²⁸ While the evidence is unclear as to the frequency of such meetings, it is clear that meetings were held to discuss a variety of matters.

1769. For example, P-2232 described attending a meeting following his return from Zongo at Mr Ngaïssona's residence in Boy-Rabe which was attended by various Anti-Balaka leaders, including 'Inga', 'Leroi', 'Bawa', 'Dongodo', 'Ngoyace', 'Andjilo', 'Mazimbele', 'Bernard Mokom', Mr Ngaïssona, but not Mr Yekatom, and many ComZones, including from Bangui and the provinces.⁴⁶²⁹ P-2232 said that the coordinator asked for the needs of all ComZones, in particular in relation to health, to see the status of the combatants and who has injured.⁴⁶³⁰ P-2232 testified that Mokom asked the ComZones to present an assessment of their needs, particularly their weapons, and promised that he would visit them at their various bases.⁴⁶³¹ P-2232 further testified that when Mauri asked to be reimbursed for his expenses, 'father

Bernard’ answered, ‘We have not yet reached our objectives. We cannot reimburse you now. Keep a record of all your expenditure and the day will come when we can reimburse you’.⁴⁶³² P-2232 said that no other promises were made, but they did insist on their expenses because they had expended on the elements until their arrival in Bangui.⁴⁶³³

1770.P-2232 testified that he participated in a second meeting at Mr Ngaïssona’s residence at which ‘he’ spoke about the French ambassador.⁴⁶³⁴ P-2232 stated that some said they had come from far away, ‘Bernard’ said that he would not leave them without support, that they must continue to fight until they regained power, at which moment they would receive compensation, and also said, ‘What can a simple woman do as a president? What can she give us? And you, what can you get from a woman?’.⁴⁶³⁵ P-2232 stated that ‘Maxime’ said their objective was that they had to do ‘everything’ to attain their objective so that ‘everybody could have compensation’; every leader must make sure that the elements ‘did everything so that no exactions took place’; the elements should not ‘shoot anyhow’, should not ‘waste ammunition’, because ‘the fight continues’.⁴⁶³⁶

1771.P-2232 testified that several meetings took place, not all of which he attended, and he did not attend ‘closed-session’ meetings which often took place after the general meetings.⁴⁶³⁷ P-2232 said that he attended at least four meetings at Mr Ngaïssona’s residence,⁴⁶³⁸ all before Brazzaville.⁴⁶³⁹

1772.Thierry Tribunal Ndokobanda stated that he participated in a meeting at the second compound of Mr Ngaïssona to which he was invited by ‘Mokom’, with the objective of appointing chiefs of the Anti-Balaka to see Catherine Samba-Panza to discuss peace in the country.⁴⁶⁴⁰ The witness said that many people were present, including from the prefectures, but that he only knew ‘Mokom’, ‘Ganazoui’ and Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁶⁴¹

1773. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that he heard from Azounou Hyppolite Côme that ‘the supervisor of everything’, the coordinator, was Mr Ngaïssona, and that all activities and coordination were happening ‘in his compound’.⁴⁶⁴² The witness said that this was how he went to the first meeting, during which Mr Ngaïssona asked where he was from, what had happened in Bossangoa, and then the discussion was interrupted because many people had arrived and a meeting was scheduled in his residence, at which many topics were discussed,⁴⁶⁴³ including the identification and recognition of all the Anti-Balaka bases in Boy-Rabe.⁴⁶⁴⁴

1774. Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that he took part in all the coordination meetings to give an account about what was happening in the provinces.⁴⁶⁴⁵ The witness said that they had meetings regularly at the Azimut hotel.⁴⁶⁴⁶ The witness thought it was several months after his return to Bangui before he attended the meeting at which Mr Ngaïssona was designated national coordinator.⁴⁶⁴⁷

1775. P-0884 testified that Mr Ngaïssona organised meetings at his home, summoning the ComZones, but P-0884 did not attend and would hear about them only afterwards.⁴⁶⁴⁸

1776. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that they did not have regular meetings, ‘maybe only once a month’, and meeting four or five times between January and October 2014.⁴⁶⁴⁹ The witness said that the general coordinator Mr Ngaïssona would decide when it was necessary to meet, and the secretary-general, Judicial Orofei, informed them accordingly.⁴⁶⁵⁰ Alfred Legrand Ngaya said that the majority of their meetings were held at Mr Ngaïssona’s house in Boy-

Rabe, but for a big group they would meet at a conference facility in a hotel, usually when all ComZones gathered, which happened ‘at least three times’, in preparation of ‘the Brazzaville talks’ and the Bangui forum, and when it was decided to turn the movement into a political party.⁴⁶⁵¹

1777. Brice Emotion Namsio stated that there were meetings in Boeing, for example organised by ‘Gremangou’ to give orders to ‘his FACA’ soldiers within the Anti-Balaka – the witness was not present, he distributed information when he went on the ground for example after meetings with Mr Ngaïssona or Wenezoui.⁴⁶⁵² According to Brice Emotion Namsio, meetings took place at the compound of Mr Ngaïssona’s father in Boy-Rabe.⁴⁶⁵³ The witness took part in a general assembly at Azimut hotel which took place after the Brazzaville forum, and there were others in which he did not participate because he went to secure the convoy.⁴⁶⁵⁴ According to the witness, meetings took place twice at the compound and sometimes at the hotel.⁴⁶⁵⁵

1778. P-1719 testified he met Mr Ngaïssona several times, they had a meeting in his compound with Bernard Mokom, Maxime Mokom, Konaté and Kokaté.⁴⁶⁵⁶ P-1719 said on another occasion they had a meeting at Mr Ngaïssona’s house, including Maxime Mokom, Konaté, Thierry Lebene aka 12 Puissances, some brothers from Boeing, and they were told Mr Ngaïssona had decided to transform the Anti-Balaka movement into a political party, idea with which P-1719 did not agree.⁴⁶⁵⁷

1779. P-0889 stated that all coordination meetings took place at Mr Ngaïssona’s place in Boy-Rabe (Poungoulou) or at the Azimut hotel.⁴⁶⁵⁸ P-0889 stated that when Mr Ngaïssona wanted to hold a meeting, Judicial Orofei called all the leaders.⁴⁶⁵⁹ P-0889 further stated that the content of press releases was decided by the coordination, decisions were taken by majority with which Mr Ngaïssona had to align, but he was the leader.⁴⁶⁶⁰

1780. The Chamber notes Jacob Mokpem-Bionli's testimony that during the time he was involved, meetings of the national coordination were held weekly or monthly, depending on the topics to be discussed, mostly at the Azimut hotel, sometimes at Mr Ngaïssona's compound at Boy-Rabe, and some with ComZones or smaller groups at the witness's house.⁴⁶⁶¹ Jacob Mokpem-Bionli further stated that ComZones from the provinces attended the meetings and disseminated the results of the meeting to their provinces.⁴⁶⁶² In a similar context, speaking of the coordination as of June 2014, P-1858 talked of meetings held at the Azimut hotel under Mr Ngaïssona's authority, which sometimes Mr Yekatom attended; the witness agreed that Romaric Vomitiade, Vivien Beina and Paleon Zilabo also attended these meetings.⁴⁶⁶³ P-1858 stated that such meetings concerned coordination of the various groups with the aim to restore peace, and Mr Ngaïssona convened meetings to warn ComZones 'not to continue in a disorderly manner', with meetings held not weekly or monthly but when a matter was to be discussed.⁴⁶⁶⁴

1781. In light of the above, the Chamber does not rely on the evidence of P-0965 on this aspect, who testified that meetings at Mr Ngaïssona's house took place twice a week.⁴⁶⁶⁵

1782. P-1962 talked of a meeting in June 2014 to which Mr Ngaïssona called Habib Soussou and the commanders in Boda, and P-1962 went with Habib Soussou, Roddy Mbossé, Moraise Sendé.⁴⁶⁶⁶ P-1962 stated that many Anti-Balaka were present at this meeting, including

The Chamber notes that the witness thought the first meeting of the national coordination took place in April 2014 (see P-0992 Second Statement, CAR-OTP-2128-0288-R02, at 0308, para. 124), but considers this to be related to the specific perspective and role of the witness at the time. On the basis of the evidence before it, as discussed above and below, the Chamber is of the view that meetings were also held earlier.

Maxime Mokom, Wenezoui, ‘12 Puissances’, and Anti-Balaka commanders from Bambari, Sibut, Bossangoa, Kaga Bandoro, Carnot and Berberati (‘Chiki Chiki’), Gamboula, Gazi (Rodrigue), Yaloke (‘Le Bleu’), Bossembélé, Bossempaté, Boali and Damara; apart from the coordinators from Boda and Bambari, the others were all ComZones; it was their first time meeting each other.⁴⁶⁶⁷ P-1962 said that at the meeting, Mr Ngaïssona said ‘to lay down’ their weapons and ‘to reconcile with the Muslims’ who were born in the CAR since they are ‘brothers’, and ‘not to kill the Muslims’, to ‘bring back peace’, and to ‘wait for the DDR’.⁴⁶⁶⁸ P-1962 testified that he never heard Mr Ngaïssona advocating for or encouraging crimes against the Muslim population.⁴⁶⁶⁹ P-1962 stated that a strategy for disarmament was also discussed, but not everybody was in agreement, with some refusing to put down their arms.⁴⁶⁷⁰ P-1962 stated that the day after the meeting, Mr Ngaïssona officially appointed Habib Soussou as coordinator of Boda and P-1962 as his deputy.⁴⁶⁷¹

1783. Both P-1521 and P-2251 mentioned meetings in relation to the Brazzaville forum.⁴⁶⁷² P-2251 stated he did not attend any meetings of ComZones,⁴⁶⁷³ while P-1521 stated seeing Mr Ngaïssona at meetings as well as when he went to see him from time to time when he had problems to ask for assistance.⁴⁶⁷⁴

1784. Aurélien Llorca stated that the Anti-Balaka from the provinces met Mr Ngaïssona in Bangui during coordination meetings, often openly staying at Hotel Azimut, the owner of which the witness learned to be connected to the Anti-Balaka, but he was not aware of coordination meetings before May 2014.⁴⁶⁷⁵

'Fake' Anti-Balaka

1785. The Chamber received a significant amount of evidence on the discussions about so-called 'fake' Anti-Balaka.

1786. The Ngaïssona Defence argues in this regard that the existence of 'fake' Anti-Balaka 'impeded the effective demarcation of the Anti-Balaka groups', which makes it 'impossible to know who allegedly committed crimes and if those crimes were committed as opportunistic acts, or within the alleged shared intent of the group'.⁴⁶⁷⁶

1787. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that the concept of 'fake' Anti-Balaka was used in varying contexts and for varying purposes throughout the time relevant to the charges. In particular, it was used by Anti-Balaka leaders such as Mr Ngaïssona to suggest that violence and abuses attributed to the Anti-Balaka would instead have been committed by individuals not linked to the Anti-Balaka, who used its name for purposes of committing such violence.

1788. Aurélien Llorca stated that when he interviewed Mr Ngaïssona in March 2014 and asked him about violence and exactions committed by Anti-Balaka elements, Mr Ngaïssona responded that this was done by uncontrolled elements or 'fake' Anti-Balaka, explaining that he had asked the international forces in a press release to arrest the 'fake' Anti-Balaka, but not having himself taken 'any specific measures' since he was not able to stop said acts.⁴⁶⁷⁷ The witness testified that in the CAR panel's analysis, an Anti-Balaka element became 'uncontrolled' when acting 'out of bounds', such that an element could have been 'controlled' in the evening before, but became 'uncontrolled' the day on which they committed some exaction or a particular act.⁴⁶⁷⁸ Aurélien Llorca testified that one needed to distinguish between political coordination and military structure of the organisation, in that, some acts might have been 'uncontrolled' because one could not ascribed some political

1789. Aurélien Llorca stated that Lebene told him during his interview in March 2014 that those in the government, such as Kokaté and Bara, did not represent the Anti-Balaka but were self-interested and that people in the government were encouraging the commission of crimes to discredit the Anti-Balaka, for example ‘Larmassou’ was ‘manipulated by the government’.⁴⁶⁸⁰ The witness stated that Lebene also told him that all ‘real’ Anti-Balaka bore badges, which allowed them to distinguish the ‘real’ from the ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka.⁴⁶⁸¹ Aurélien Llorca stated that Lebene also said that Andjilo was a company commander in Bouca, but when asked to meet him, Lebene explained that Andjilo had left on a ‘sensibilisation’ mission two weeks earlier.⁴⁶⁸²

1790. Kasper Agger stated that when he interviewed Mr Ngaïssona in February 2014, the latter claimed that killings were not committed by ‘real’ but by ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka which did not respect the orders from him and other Anti-Balaka leaders.⁴⁶⁸³ The witness thought that the term ‘Anti-Balaka’ became a cover as well for what any time before them would have been called criminals, using it to try to legitimise their largely criminal actions.⁴⁶⁸⁴

1791. In this same vein, a press release issued by the Anti-Balaka general coordination on 1 February 2014 speaks of fake Anti-Balaka (‘faux antibalaka’) that infiltrated the movement with bad intentions and for easy gain, while the Anti-Balaka ‘combatants’ are committed, in line with their principles, not to steal and loot.⁴⁶⁸⁵ Another press release issued after the Brazzaville talks complains about the Anti-Balaka being blamed for all acts of violence and abuse in Bangui or the provinces although almost all (the ‘quasi-totalité’) of the Anti-Balaka is committed to dialogue, peace and restoring security in the CAR.⁴⁶⁸⁶

1792. Witnesses during their testimonies used the concept of ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka, depending on their personal perspective, to describe individuals that did not have the same experience as themselves advancing through the provinces, were not initiated with rituals to obtain gris-gris,⁴⁶⁸⁷ or were ‘rogue’ in that they committed acts which did not accord with the witnesses’ respective own ideas of what a ‘real’ Anti-Balaka element was meant to behave like.⁴⁶⁸⁸ However, this did not necessarily mean to the witnesses that the individuals designated as such were civilian individuals who merely operated under the Anti-Balaka ‘label’ or otherwise not in fact Anti-Balaka elements.⁴⁶⁸⁹ Witnesses also spoke of persons who were not known to be Anti-Balaka but committed violent acts and abuses under its name, and were thus ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka.⁴⁶⁹⁰

1793. Various witnesses talked about the difficulty to distinguish between ‘real’ and ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka.⁴⁶⁹¹ The Chamber considers the testimony of Catherine Samba-Panza instructive in this regard, in her agreeing that it was not always possible to identify the ‘true perpetrators’ of exactions since not all armed civilians were Anti-Balaka, and neither journalists nor the population could always distinguish.⁴⁶⁹² Yet, she also clarified that generally speaking given the context and events in specific areas, it was quite likely that the people who were attributed with the crimes ‘were the ones indeed’, and that it depended on the location, the time, and the general political and security backdrop.⁴⁶⁹³

1794. The Chamber considers that the fact of the concept of ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka being used to blame violent acts and abuses in falsely attributing them to ‘outsiders’ is clearly illustrated by the example of Andjilo. The Chamber is convinced that the evidence before it shows that Andjilo was one of the initial members of the self-defence groups that coalesced into the Anti-Balaka, recalling in this regard its discussion on the groups forming in the Bossangoa area.⁴⁶⁹⁴ The Chamber further recalls that Andjilo was one of the individuals who, with a group that he led, descended through the provinces towards Bangui, and participated in attacks, including against Muslim civilians, in this advance.⁴⁶⁹⁵ The Chamber also refers to its discussion that, following this advance to Bangui, Andjilo was one of the individuals who, with a group that he led, participated in the coordinated attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013.⁴⁶⁹⁶

1795. The evidence shows that disagreements with Mr Ngaïssona, likely on the basis of financial disappointments, led to a fallout between Andjilo and specifically Mr Ngaïssona, and that Andjilo eventually returned to Bouca at some point in 2014. However, the evidence does not show that Andjilo, at any point during the relevant time, did not consider himself or was not considered by others as an element and indeed group leader within the Anti-Balaka, falling under the general coordination under lead of Mr Ngaïssona.

1796. Indeed, several witnesses mentioned disagreements, speaking in varying details, between Andjilo and Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁶⁹⁷ At the same time, witnesses mentioned Andjilo as part of the Anti-Balaka who participated in coordinated actions,⁴⁶⁹⁸ and as being hierarchically subordinate to Mr Ngaïssona at any given time during the relevant period.⁴⁶⁹⁹ The Chamber considers particularly illustrative the evidence of Alfred Legrand Ngaya, who explained that he and Mr Ngaïssona spoke to Andjilo directly to encourage him to change his ways, and that the only person who could speak to Andjilo was Mr Ngaïssona, but Andjilo did not listen to them, and the coordination had no control over him and his group.⁴⁷⁰⁰ In line with the evidence as outlined above, the witness thus considered Andjilo, who to him clearly was an Anti-Balaka element, still a ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka.⁴⁷⁰¹

1797. In light of the above, the Chamber considers irrelevant that some witnesses may have considered Andjilo as a ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka, due to their own personal definition of what a ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka would be. It is clear from the evidence before it that Andjilo was an element and group leader within the Anti-Balaka, considered himself as such, and was seen by others as such.

1798. Another individual mentioned as example for a ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka is Guy Mazimbelet, with several witnesses mentioning him as being beyond anyone’s control.⁴⁷⁰² At the same time, the evidence before the Chamber shows that while this may have been the case, Guy Mazimbelet was indeed an Anti-Balaka element and considered as such at least during the period directly relevant to the charges.⁴⁷⁰³

1799. A further individual mentioned as being an example for ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka was Jean-Jacques Larmassoum (‘Larmassoum’).⁴⁷⁰⁴ The Chamber considers of note that while this individual is mentioned by witnesses in this specific context, his name does not appear in relation to any of the events relevant to the charged crimes. Further bearing in mind that the Chamber discusses the identity of perpetrators in relation to each individual incident relevant to the charges, it considers a detailed discussion of what this individual may have done, under the name of the Anti-Balaka or otherwise, of no further relevance. At the same time, the Chamber recalls its discussion of the evidence of P-2050, who witnessed the mistreatment of Larmassoum by the group under control of ‘12 Puissances’ based at Mr Ngaïssona’s compound on 28 February 2014.⁴⁷⁰⁵

1800. Overall, the Chamber considers that the existence of ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka as a generalised concept is immaterial to its determinations for purposes of the charges insofar as the Chamber discusses the specific individuals involved and their place or role within the Anti-Balaka in relation to each charged incident, as well as in relation to the hostilities during the advance in 2013, and in early 2014. Furthermore, the Chamber is of the view that the generalised concept is immaterial on a broader level insofar as the existence of individuals allegedly operating under the name of the Anti-Balaka does not, in and of itself, negate the existence of (i) a structure or organisation within and among those that considered themselves to be ‘real’ Anti-Balaka; (ii) the shared core objectives of those that considered themselves to be ‘real’ Anti-Balaka; and (iii) the hostilities engaged in by Anti-Balaka elements to such extent as to amount to an armed conflict with the Seleka. The Chamber further notes that these hostilities are not claimed to have been engaged in by ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka, indeed, in particular as regards the hostilities during the advance in 2013, the generalised concept of the ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka was brought up only much later in 2014.

Anti-Balaka badges

1801. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that at some point in 2014 and thereafter,⁴⁷⁰⁶ the Anti-Balaka national coordination, under Mr Ngaïssona’s lead, decided to issue badges to Anti-Balaka elements.

1802. The Chamber has before it a number of different items which appear to be Anti-Balaka badges or ID cards. One format, visible on a card issued in the name of Mr Yekatom and bearing his picture, bears an Anti-Balaka logo, name, function, nationality and address of the bearer, an ID card number, stamp and signature.⁴⁷⁰⁷ This same format is visible in other examples,⁴⁷⁰⁸ including in an electronic blank version obtained by Kasper Agger in February 2014 that he called ‘template’,⁴⁷⁰⁹ and as photographed by P-2050 in February 2014,⁴⁷¹⁰ as well as by the CAR Panel in March 2014.⁴⁷¹¹ outset, the Chamber recalls that it recognised submission of the items at issue having found that the badges were collected by the national authorities in the execution of a cooperation request in accordance with the national law and relevant domestic procedures.⁴⁷¹³ Further, bearing in mind that the format of the badges in question corresponds to that of the badges found by other individuals in other contexts and directly linked to persons who were identified and identified themselves as Anti-Balaka elements, the Chamber considers unnecessary to further address these submissions. This is the case even more so in light of the Chamber considering the issuance of such badges in regard to a very specific and limited, aspect of its factual conclusions. In particular, overall, the Chamber has considered the handing out of badges in the context of the efforts to provide additional structure to the Anti-Balaka.

1804. The Chamber notes that, in the electronic version of a different format, provided by P-0889, a slightly different Anti-Balaka logo can be seen, with a different pictogram, specifying the name, function, nationality, town/village and company of the bearer, an ID card number, stamp and signature.⁴⁷¹⁴ The evidence suggests that this format was used at a later stage.⁴⁷¹⁵ The Chamber notes that the signature visible on these cards seems similar to that linked to Mr Ngaïssona in different documents.⁴⁷¹⁶

1805. The evidence shows that these badges had a two-fold, inter-connected, purpose: (i) to distinguish what were considered ‘real’ from ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka;⁴⁷¹⁷ and (ii) for an eventual demobilisation (DDR) programme.⁴⁷¹⁸

1806. However, the evidence also shows that not every Anti-Balaka element had a badge. Several witnesses talked of Anti-Balaka elements not obtaining badges, for example because they did not have the funds to pay for them, yet were still ‘real’ Anti-Balaka.⁴⁷¹⁹ At the same time, witnesses also mentioned ‘fake’ badges, and misuse of badges.⁴⁷²⁰

1807. The evidence suggests that badges were issued on initiation and with the support of the Anti-Balaka general coordination, specifically also the financial support of Mr Ngaïssona.⁴⁷²¹

Several witnesses mentioned that the elements had to pay for such badges.⁴⁷²² The evidence further indicates that various formats of badges were in circulation,⁴⁷²³ and that at some stage the issuing of cards was stopped.⁴⁷²⁴

1808. Aurélien Llorca, member of the CAR Panel, concluded on the basis of his analysis, including from his meeting with Mr Ngaïssona on 3 May 2014, that someone like Mr Ngaïssona was trying to have more personal political leverage by buying allegiance from local groups – the more elements one had, the stronger one’s voice with the government, the UN, etc., meaning the more elements he could claim as falling ‘under his umbrella’, the more relevant he could become.⁴⁷²⁵ The witness explained that to the panel, the badges were issued to ‘prove’ that people were under Mr Ngaïssona’s organisation,⁴⁷²⁶ as well as at the coordination’s initiative with a view to improving the Anti-Balaka’s visibility in the field.⁴⁷²⁷ According to Aurélien Llorca, this concerned visibility towards local inhabitants, but also towards international forces to show the scope and the ‘numerical presence on the ground’ of the Anti-Balaka over a huge area of the CAR.⁴⁷²⁸ Aurélien Llorca saw many Anti-Balaka members carrying badges throughout his missions to the CAR.⁴⁷²⁹

1809. Kasper Agger stated that a local journalist whom he interviewed in 2015 said that the Anti-Balaka were afraid of registering their names with Mr Ngaïssona for badges and formal

Media statements

1810. The Chamber has before it various media statements attributed to the Anti-Balaka, for the most part seemingly signed by Mr Ngaïssona in his capacity as Anti-Balaka general coordinator since his return to Bangui.⁴⁷³¹

1811. In a press release of 1 February 2014,⁴⁷³² reference is made to recent violence in Bangui and in the hinterland, ‘often wrongly attributed’ (‘souvent imputée à tort’) to the Anti-Balaka movement, with the wish to clarify that the ultimate aim of the movement was to ‘deliver the Central African people’ from the ‘claws of the bloodthirsty’ (‘griffes des sanguinaires’) Seleka, which is now reached.⁴⁷³³ It refers to confusion between ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka which infiltrated the movement with bad intentions, the Anti-Balaka combatants who had committed not to steal or loot, to whom cases of looting and theft were attributed.⁴⁷³⁴ The general coordinator of the Anti-Balaka declines any responsibility and calls for vigilance of the CAR and international forces to track down these ‘criminals’ (‘malfrats’) who use the label of the Anti-Balaka to commit any type of exactions, and reiterates the commitment of the Anti-Balaka to peace and normalisation, with a view to harmonious and lasting development of the CAR.⁴⁷³⁵

1812. In another press release dated 11 February 2014,⁴⁷³⁶ issue is taken with the ‘incendiary remarks’ of the Sangaris and MISCA commanders earlier that month who said that the Anti-Balaka needed to be put out of action, further stating that after the election of Catherine Samba-Panza, the Anti-Balaka had committed to a new dynamic of pacification and normalisation, that the entire CAR population was motivated by a desire for vengeance and asking how and why the Anti-Balaka in its entirety would take responsibility for isolated acts committed by as yet unidentified individuals,⁴⁷³⁷ and further reiterating the commitment of the Anti-Balaka in favour of a dynamic and irreversible process of pacification and normalisation which presumes that all national and international instances take pertinent and efficient actions.⁴⁷³⁸ The Chamber considers of import to point to an additional statement in this press release which appears to criticise that ‘Muslims’, in general, were speaking up against the Anti-Balaka ‘combatants’, who are described as ‘worthy sons of the country’ (dignes fils du pays) which engaged in the ‘saving work’ (œuvre salvatrice).⁴⁷³⁹

1813. The Chamber notes that in the meantime, Catherine Samba-Panza visited Mbaïki in the wake of the removal of the Muslim population from Mbaïki and warned the Anti-Balaka to stop committing violent acts.⁴⁷⁴⁰ Just before, the Sangaris commander had called the Anti-Balaka ‘enemies of peace’.⁴⁷⁴¹

1814. The Chamber notes that around this time, several Anti-Balaka elements were arrested by the CAR authorities,⁴⁷⁴² and Anti-Balaka groups carried out various attacks in localities in western CAR prefectures.⁴⁷⁴³

1815. The following press release of likely 17 February 2014,⁴⁷⁴⁴ is not signed by Mr Ngaïssona, but by various other individuals, including inter alia Sylvestre Yagouzou, Brice Emotion Namsio, Sébastien Wenezoui, Benjamin Ouapoutou, Thierry Lebene, Aimé Abel Denamganai, Richard Bejouane, Guy Gustave Yadjoungou, Guy Gervais Mokpem, Yvon

Donoh, Dieudonné Houronti and Maxime Mokom.⁴⁷⁴⁵ It expresses deep concern about being labelled as ‘enemies of the peace’ earlier that month and the statements of Catherine Samba-Panza in Mbaïki,⁴⁷⁴⁶ and, inter alia: (i) refers to the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka;⁴⁷⁴⁷ (ii) states that the Anti-Balaka emerged from self-defence groups exclusively composed of young Central Africans exasperated by the Seleka violence and whose actions are justified by ‘the right of resistance’ (‘le droit à la résistance’); (iii) recalls that after asking for a recomposition of the national transition council, it welcomed the election of Catherine Samba-Panza; (iv) states that the entire Central African population is inspired by a desire for revenge and that it is difficult to distinguish between acts committed by the population out of vengeance, and those committed by ‘certain’ Anti-Balaka, while acts committed by individuals out of vengeance or for other reasons are wrongly attributed to the Anti-Balaka; and (v) says that despite the disregard of the new transition authorities towards the Anti-Balaka, the latter are committed to the ‘new dynamic’ of peace and restoring security in the CAR.⁴⁷⁴⁸

1816. The statement further (i) regrets the ‘arbitrary arrest’ of 10 Anti-Balaka elements pursuant to a warrant of arrest; (ii) ‘vehemently’ denounces (‘avec véhémence’) the attempted arrest of general coordinator Mr Ngaïssona; (iii) questions whether the transition authorities are indeed willing to embark on reconciliation, peace and normalisation, in light of the stance taken towards the Anti-Balaka;⁴⁷⁴⁹ (iv) recalls that the coordination expressed on several occasions its availability to work in collaboration with the international forces in the context of concerted actions to return peace and security to the CAR; (v) states that the Anti-Balaka are not ‘enemies of peace’, ‘even if it is true that in the ranks of this movement, investigations must be carried out to determine those responsible for possible exactions’ (‘même s’il est vrai que dans le rang dudit mouvement, des enquêtes doivent être diligentées pour déterminer les responsables des éventuelles exactions’); (vi) demands the unconditional release of the 10 Anti-Balaka elements ‘arrested arbitrarily’ on 15 February 2014; (vii) recommends, with a view to quickly returning to peace and security, the billeting of Anti-Balaka and taking their charge while, on the other hand, facilitating the return of those interested to their communities in the provinces;⁴⁷⁵⁰ and (viii) reaffirms its availability to discuss with the new transition authorities and other national and international components for pacification and normalisation of life in the CAR.⁴⁷⁵¹

1817. The Chamber considers of note that while the above statement denounces violence committed by the Seleka and alleged confusion of perpetrators, it does not specifically mention any of the events, at the time widely known and reported, taking place in various localities in the western CAR.⁴⁷⁵²

1818. Alfred Legrand Ngaya stated that Mr Ngaïssona contributed to this document and approved its release, but that he and Alfred Legrand Ngaya in the end decided not to sign the document.⁴⁷⁵³ The witness agreed with the suggestion that Mr Yekatom's name does not appear on this document because at the time he was not in the 'Ngaïssona wing'.⁴⁷⁵⁴

1819. The Chamber considers important in the context of the wording of these press releases Kasper Agger's evidence that during his interview with Mr Ngaïssona at the end of February 2014, the latter made clear that he regarded himself as a very important person within, and a senior leader of, the Anti-Balaka, and the witness regarded him as 'very influential' at the time, it was his understanding that Mr Ngaïssona was particularly 'powerful and influential among the Bangui-based Anti-Balaka groups'.⁴⁷⁵⁵ Kasper Agger testified that Mr Ngaïssona presented himself as national coordinator, stated that he was organising the Anti-Balaka, said that they had to defend themselves against the foreigners, the Muslims, and in that sense portrayed himself as someone influential in at least having control over some parts of the Anti-Balaka, particularly around the Boy-Rabe and Bangui area.⁴⁷⁵⁶

1820. Further, Kasper Agger testified that during his interview on 25 February 2014, Mr Ngaïssona referred to the Seleka having taken power of the country, and being mainly a Muslim group, particularly on the command level, with Muslims from the northern CAR, Sudan or Chad, and speaking Arabic; they would be more friendly towards their local Muslims, while there was more resistance from the FACA, mainly in the central and western part of the country, being non-Muslims; and when the FACA started to organise the resistance against the Seleka together with the Anti-Balaka, members of the PG, in particular that were close to François Bozizé, they ‘obviously’ would ‘target Muslims’ and ‘Muslim communities’ as well; what Mr Ngaïssona expressed to the witness was that it was ‘a form of resistance’ and that these were ‘self-protection groups’ from the local populations against the Muslims: ‘We cannot accept the attacks by the Muslims’.⁴⁷⁵⁷

1821. In the view of the Chamber, it is clear from this that Mr Ngaïssona, at a time at which the Anti-Balaka under his lead as general coordinator appeared to be calling for peace and reconciliation, continued to see ‘Muslims’, in general, as ‘the foreigners’ in the country against whom the Anti-Balaka had ‘defended’. This is also made apparent by the billeting and emergency assistance project proposals of February 2014, which clearly refer to Anti-Balaka elements including individuals being motivated by revenge and acting against both Seleka and Muslims considered to have supported the Seleka.⁴⁷⁵⁸

1822. In another reaction to the Sangaris commander’s statement that the Anti-Balaka were the ‘enemies of peace’, Mr Ngaïssona is recorded as asking the Anti-Balaka to withdraw and abandon all combat to allow identification of ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka which were tarnishing the name of the ‘real’ Anti-Balaka, so that MISCA and Sangaris could go after those who committed crimes under the name of the Anti-Balaka, further asking that the arrested ‘youth’ be liberated to join others at cantonment sites to reassure them in their decision to withdraw and to wait for the result of their approach to the government for negotiations to facilitate billeting, disarmament and return of those interested to their regions of origin, considering it a pretext of the government to say it had no means to facilitate such measures.⁴⁷⁵⁹

1823. P-2232 testified in this regard that Mr Ngaïssona made this speech after that of the Sangaris commander, that following a clash in which the Burundian contingent intervened and Sangaris soldiers were wounded, Sangaris made the declaration of war on the Anti-Balaka, and Mr Ngaïssona had to make this statement, after which the Sangaris withdrew their declaration against the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁷⁶⁰

1824. Alfred Legrand Ngaya commented that actions were undertaken and there was an attempt to billet Anti-Balaka in Mr Ngaïssona's warehouse, he tried to feed the Anti-Balaka, but he was single-handed and could not solve the problem, there was no follow-up to the initial steps.⁴⁷⁶¹

1825. In another radio address around the same time, Mr Ngaïssona is heard launching an appeal to all Anti-Balaka to let themselves be billeted to 'eradicate' the bandits hiding under the name of the Anti-Balaka and commit violence, asking all Anti-Balaka to cease the violence and the government to free the arrested Anti-Balaka elements.⁴⁷⁶² He stated that the Anti-Balaka's goal of driving out the 'demons' that invaded the country and Michel Djotodia had been achieved, and that the Anti-Balaka waited for a gesture from the government in their support.⁴⁷⁶³

1826. Various statements were issued by the Anti-Balaka coordination under Mr Ngaïssona's lead after February 2014. The Chamber refers in this regard to its conclusions as to the duration of the active conflict in the CAR in 2014.⁴⁷⁶⁴ The Chamber has therefore considered these statements in the specific context of the Anti-Balaka coordination, under Mr Ngaïssona's lead, engaged at that time in negotiations with the government and international authorities.

1827. In an RFI interview published at the beginning of April 2014, Mr Ngaïssona is presented as head of the ‘coordination des combattants pour la paix en Centrafrique’, ‘differently put the wing of the Anti-Balaka which is not represented in the government’, and which, ‘according to him’ constituted the majority of the movements controlling the south of the country.⁴⁷⁶⁵ The article reports Mr Ngaïssona as saying that the Anti-Balaka control almost the entire country, Bangui and the hinterland, and that this movement, which was born since the attack on Bangui on 5 December 2013, now waits for the CAR government to recognise this ‘acte de bravoure de ces enfants’ and to reach out for dialogue ‘parce que les anti-balaka, à partir d’aujourd’hui, ont décidé de ne plus continuer les hostilités’.⁴⁷⁶⁶ When asked about the ‘wing’ under Joachim Kokaté, Mr Ngaïssona is reported as stating:

[L]es anti-balaka que je coordonne sont un seul et même mouvement qui est réparti sur tout l’étendu du territoire. Quand je donne l’ordre à ces enfants, je pense que c’est immédiatement suivi d’effet. Donc, si on veut que la paix revienne définitivement dans ce pays, il faut dialoguer avec la coordination – son staff – pour qu’il y ait la paix définitive en République centrafricaine.⁴⁷⁶⁷

1828. Asked which conditions they would have when such dialogue starts, Mr Ngaïssona is reporting as stating:

Faire partir les mercenaires. Le gouvernement doit respecter au moins ces enfant, [sic] désarmer complètement le Kilomètre 5 et il faut que les Boko-Haram qui se trouvent aujourd’hui dans cet arrondissement le quittent. On demandera aussi, peut-être au niveau de l’Assemblée, qui l’on inscrive dans l’Histoire de la RCA l’affaire des anti-balaka qui est une émanation populaire. Cet acte de bravoure mériterait d’être immortalisé dans l’Histoire de la République centrafricaine.⁴⁷⁶⁸

1829. In relation to the situation in Boda, Mr Ngaïssona is reported as stating that the government made the mistake of sending someone not known by the Anti-Balaka to talk to ‘these children’, which upset them, so instead there would need to be dialogue with a reliable interlocutor, and if he went there, the results would be ‘markedly different’.⁴⁷⁶⁹

The government must at least respect these children, fully disarm Kilometre 5 and get Boko-Haram – who are currently in this arrondissement – to leave it. This act of bravery deserves to be immortalized in the History of the Central African Republic.’

1830. The Chamber considers Mr Ngaïssona’s reaction to the question whether he is linked to François Bozizé or is fighting for him of interest insofar as it illustrates his own evolving allegiances. Specifically, after stating that this is a mistake and ‘Un pouvoir, c’est un pouvoir. Un pouvoir est passé; il faut tourner la page et puis avancer’, Mr Ngaïssona is reported as stating:

Non, non, non! Il ne faut pas que les gens s’imaginent des choses. Avant Bozizé, j’avais fait mes affaires et je vivais bien. Pendant le régime de Bozizé, j’ai continué à faire mes affaires. En dehors de cela, laissez Bozizé tranquille. Laissez Ngaïssona tranquille dans son élan.⁴⁷⁷⁰

1831. Joachim Kokaté insisted in relation to this interview that there was no Anti-Balaka ‘wing’ managed by him.⁴⁷⁷¹ The witness testified that with his statement about his orders being followed, Mr Ngaïssona confirmed what the Anti-Balaka said at the transition government about following the orders of Mr Ngaïssona who organised and financed them.⁴⁷⁷² In relation to Boda, Joachim Kokaté testified that he had a role to play as ‘facilitator’⁴⁷⁷³ and one had to go through Mr Yekatom to talk, people signed the document not to touch the Muslim community but attacked afterwards.⁴⁷⁷⁴

1832. P-1962, in Boda at the time, agreed that if it had been Mr Ngaïssona who went there, there would have been changes because he was listened to more, he agreed that the characterisation given by Mr Ngaïssona on his orders being followed was correct, but he did not have the means to enforce his instructions by the elements and ComZones in Boda.⁴⁷⁷⁵

1833. Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified in relation to this interview that there was a great difference between what was said and the reality they knew during the transitional period, the message of putting an end to hostilities was not respected.⁴⁷⁷⁶

1834. Around the time of this interview, specifically at the beginning of April 2014, the Anti-Balaka coordination continued to issue press releases. One release of 3 April 2014 reiterates the taking of power and violence committed by the Seleka, leading to the mobilisation of ‘youth’ in the villages which eventually entered Bangui on 5 December 2013.⁴⁷⁷⁷ It states that Mr Ngaïssona as Anti-Balaka coordinator expressed the availability to work with the international forces to eliminate violence against civilians and while without result, the Anti-Balaka themselves organised to track down malefactors, such as Larmassoum, and yet the Sangaris commander called them ‘enemies of peace’ and Catherine Samba-Panza declared war on them, while some Anti-Balaka leaders including Mr Ngaïssona were subject to an arrest warrant.⁴⁷⁷⁸ The statement further denounces continued violence by Seleka, Boda being set on fire and people being killed by Muslims, KM5 not being accessible because of heavily armed Muslims continue to kill the non-Muslim civilian population and innocent people, and continues that for the Anti-Balaka it is time to stop killings and engage in a dynamic of national reconciliation, position taken by the Anti-Balaka since the election of the transition president.⁴⁷⁷⁹

1835. Various members of the Anti-Balaka pronounced similar statements around this time.⁴⁷⁸⁰

1836. At this time, the Anti-Balaka coordination issued a press release which states

[...] le Coordonnateur Général du Mouvement des Patriotes Antibalaka, Monsieur Patrice Edouard N[gaïssona], en attendant d’entrer en négociation avec les Autorités gouvernementales, prend l’engagement solennel en ce jour, 04 Avril 2013 [sic],⁴⁷⁸¹ de déclarer la fin de toutes hostilités sur toute l’étendue du territoire national.

⁴⁷⁸¹ The Chamber notes that this date is written in the original text, but considers it clear from the context that this was in fact meant to refer to 4 April 2014.

A cet effet, le Coordonnateur national du Mouvement des Antibalaka, demande impérativement à tous Chef des bataillons des Patriotes Antibalaka, de veiller à l'observation scrupuleuse de la présente décision. Ils doivent instruire tous les patriotes Antibalaka, afin que ceux-ci regagnent leur base respective.⁴⁷⁸²

1837. Aurélien Llorca testified in this regard that this was a press release in 'a very specific context', namely discussions that had been embarked upon with the transition authorities.⁴⁷⁸³

The witness stated that he did not believe that violence actually ended at this stage, but Mr Ngaïssona referred to this order to 'end the hostilities' on a regular basis in later press communiqués and statements.⁴⁷⁸⁴

1838. The same was repeated in a release dated 11 April 2014⁴⁷⁸⁵ and reiterated in May 2014 following consultations with the ComZones in preparation of the Brazzaville talks.⁴⁷⁸⁶

Je soussigné Patrice Edouard N[gaïssona] Coordonateur General des Anti-Balaka, atteste par la presente suite à ma rencontre ce jour avec Son Excellence la présidente de la Republique, que je décide de donner une chance à la paix et à la reconciliation. Je m'engage à respecter les lois de la Republique et m'engage à soutenir pleinement le gouvernement de transition aussi que la charte de la Transition. ⁴⁷⁸⁷ Declaration, CAR-OTP-2101-1821. (Translation from French to English by the Registry) 'I, the undersigned, Patrice Edouard Ngaïssona, General Coordinator of the Anti-Balaka, hereby confirm that, further to my meeting on this day with Her Excellency, the President of the Republic, I have decided to give peace and reconciliation a chance. I undertake to respect the laws of the Republic and undertake to fully support the transitional government as well as the Charter of the Transition. I would therefore ask all Anti-Balaka to do likewise and unconditionally comply with this instruction.'

1840. Catherine Samba-Panza confirmed that this document was signed by Mr Ngaïssona⁴⁷⁸⁸ following a meeting he attended with her at the presidency, during which MISCA forces arrived to arrest Mr Ngaïssona on the basis of an arrest warrant which had been issued against him by the public prosecutor.⁴⁷⁸⁹ The witness testified that she did not want this to happen at the presidency in light of her reconciliation efforts, so she and Mr Ngaïssona stayed at the office for several hours and ‘of course’ all the other Anti-Balaka who were there informed the others in the neighbourhood and Boy-Rabe and all other Anti-Balaka districts were rather emotional about it and said, ‘If Mr Ngaïssona is arrested, Bangui will burn, we will burn Bangui’.⁴⁷⁹⁰ Catherine Samba-Panza testified that General Tumenta said that the public prosecutor needed to intervene, provided that Mr Ngaïssona made a statement and acknowledged responsibility for the actions caused by him in the past, and in the end Mr Ngaïssona copied and signed a declaration drafted by the prosecutor, and conditions were set which Mr Ngaïssona had to abide by.⁴⁷⁹¹

1841. On the basis of this evidence, the Chamber considers that the commitment to peace of Mr Ngaïssona was thus signed as the immediate result of his impending arrest. The Chamber considers of note in this regard that in a later document issued by the Anti-Balaka coordination, the meeting at the presidency on 17 April 2014 is mentioned as a ‘restart’ to the dialogue (‘relancé le dialogue’) with the government.⁴⁷⁹²

1842. In another press release of 29 May 2014, the events at Fatima church the day before are condemned, stating that the ‘enemies of the CAR’ struck again, and criticising the ‘complacent and lax, if not complicit’ attitude of the international armed forces, in particular MISCA, whose mandate it is to oversee the cantonment of Muslims in KM5, yet allows them to leave their camp armed to commit such major atrocities.⁴⁷⁹³ The Chamber considers this document to be another illustration of the Anti-Balaka and its national coordination, led by Mr Ngaïssona, equating Seleka or other violence-committing individuals with Muslims in PK5 in general. It is of note that this statement was made at a time when the Anti-Balaka national coordination had repeatedly expressed its commitment to peace and security in the CAR. Yet clearly the underlying mindset remained the same.

1843. A press release of 24 June 2014 confirmed the coordination established following involvement of NGOs, which confirmed Mr Ngaïssona as general coordinator and Sébastien Wenezoui as his deputy.⁴⁷⁹⁴

1844. In June 2014, at a time when most of the Seleka had retreated to the north or were billeted in camps in Bangui⁴⁷⁹⁵ and parts of the Muslim civilian population especially in the west of the CAR had been forced to leave their localities,⁴⁷⁹⁶ the Anti-Balaka coordination also presented a project concerning the peace process, outlining the general context of Seleka violence that had pushed the Central African youth in towns and the hinterland to organise into self-defence movement, and the Anti-Balaka, to protect the CAR population and following their advance through the provinces, eventually reach Bangui for the attack of 5 December 2013.⁴⁷⁹⁷ It criticises that despite the Anti-Balaka's enthusiasm for the new transition authorities, they were seen as enemies of peace and tracked down by international forces, yet the meeting at the presidency on 17 April 2014 restarted the dialogue with the government, and states that while the implication of the Anti-Balaka coordination in the new dynamic of dialogue allowed to manage the security situation in Bangui, in certain localities in the provinces, the counter-productive behaviour has once again emerged in the Anti-Balaka ranks ('dans certaines localités de provinces, des comportements contre-productifs sont encore relevés dans les rangs des Antibalaka').⁴⁷⁹⁸ The document further criticises the favourable treatment of Seleka and not being taken into account despite the engage of the Anti-Balaka to cede hostilities since the election of Catherine Samba-Panza, as well as the

1845. A press release of 3 July 2014 reiterates that the Anti-Balaka is committed to the process of dialogue and concertation with a view to returning to normality and peace, that in this context regular meetings with the other part to the conflict take place and progress in the discussions can be seen, that at the same time Sangaris still arbitrarily arrests military leaders of the Anti-Balaka without reasons, which could lead to nefarious consequences for the dialogue and reconciliation process.⁴⁸⁰⁰

1846. A press release of 14 July 2014 states that in light of the latest developments in the socio-political situation of the country in relation to the launch of the process of dialogue and national reconciliation, the Anti-Balaka coordination notes with consternation the stagnation provoked by the Central African political class which risks compromising the Brazzaville forum.⁴⁸⁰¹

1847. In an interview around this time, Mr Ngaïssona outlined his view of his role as Anti-Balaka coordinator,⁴⁸⁰² having been asked how he came to be national coordinator of the Anti-Balaka since the previous December, and stated that the Anti-Balaka came into being 'parce que des étrangers ont accompagné les S[eleka] qui étaient de vrais Centrafricains lors de leur entrée dans B[angui] et que ceux-ci ont fait beaucoup du mal au peuple centrafricain'.⁴⁸⁰³ He reiterated that the Anti-Balaka were not trouble-makers or militia, but patriots, and that their sacrifice needed to be recognised.⁴⁸⁰⁴ He further stated that the Anti-Balaka rose against armed people that committed crimes against the Central African population, and continued:

Un étranger qui vient dans notre pays, pour faire de l'occupation, prendre des armes et tuer les enfants du pays, nous ne pouvons pas accepter cela et voir les enfants du pays souffrir. Mais par contre, nos frères musulmans centrafricains, avec lesquels nous étions habitués à cohabiter avant l'indépendance, après l'indépendance, nous vivions ensemble, Dieu fera en sorte que nous continuions à vivre ensemble et à rester ensemble.⁴⁸⁰⁵

1848. The Chamber considers this of particular note in light of the fact that despite repeatedly stating their commitment for peace and reconciliation, Mr Ngaïssona in this statement continued to draw a distinction between 'foreign' Muslims in the CAR and others, defining those 'foreign' Muslims as those that had come to the CAR for work, as opposed to Muslims that had been living in the CAR already before the country's independence. This mirrors the mindset expressed in speeches of François Bozizé already before the Seleka coup.⁴⁸⁰⁶

1849. Further, when asked about his 're-election' as national coordination at an Anti-Balaka general assembly on the 27th day of the previous month, which the Chamber understands to be a reference to the setting up of the coordination in June 2014,⁴⁸⁰⁷ Mr Ngaïssona stated that the misunderstanding was simply based on 'incompréhension mutuelle' which was not serious, but the media made it big, and they wanted to 'reunite' for purposes of the peace process, but this problem is fully solved.⁴⁸⁰⁸

1850. In the continuing discussion, Mr Ngaïssona referred to the document he signed instructing the Anti-Balaka to respect the Ramadan period,⁴⁸⁰⁹ and spoke of uncontrolled elements when asked about violent acts committed by the Anti-Balaka, while also stating:

[n]ous ne pouvons pas mentir et dire que les A[nti-Balaka] n'ont rien fait non! Dans un tel mouvement, il y a ce genre d'individus. 1851. In a similar vein, in an interview published on 5 August 2014, Mr Ngaïssona is reported as stating that ‘[l]es tueries, on n’en fait plus’.⁴⁸¹¹

1852. The Chamber considers this to show Mr Ngaïssona’s awareness of violent acts having been committed by Anti-Balaka elements, while at the same time trying to portray those as isolated acts by specifically identified individuals, which, at that time, Mr Ngaïssona knew not to be correct.

b. Activities in the context of reconciliation

1853. The Chamber has received evidence on reconciliation activities that members of the Anti-Balaka, including Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom, were involved in.

1854. The Yekatom Defence argues that Mr Yekatom answered a ‘call to protect the civilian population as a whole and to prevent further atrocities and human rights abuses’, and ‘took up arms to defend the population from enemy forces and mitigate escalating local tensions [...] with full commitment to his military training and respect for IHL principles’, remaining ‘steadfast in his efforts to restore peace and reconciliation’ in the CAR.⁴⁸¹²

1855. The Ngaïssona Defence argues that Mr Ngaïssona’s ‘consistent words and actions throughout 2014 demonstrate that his one and only objective was to bring peace back in

In such a movement, you always have these types of individuals. I signed a document instructing that the perpetrators should be taken directly before the justice system to be tried, because the suffering endured by the children in the bush before their entry into Bangui would not have been in vain solely because of the conduct of a single individual. Besides, the majority is made up of those who joined the ranks of the Anti-Balaka here in Bangui [...] Well, we cannot continue like this, keeping rogue elements under our leadership whereas we have clearly identified those individuals, and we know very well who they are.’

⁴⁸¹¹ Press article, CAR-OTP-2068-0619, at 0619. The Chamber notes that the Ngaïssona Defence argues that the article is full of approximations, in particular that Mr Ngaïssona is not quoted as having claimed 53,000 elements and fails to mention the arrest warrant of April 2014, thereby casting doubt on the reliability of information contained therein (see ICC-01/14-01/18-1942-Conf-Anx1, pp. 106-107). At the same time, the Ngaïssona Defence argues that the item can be relied on for purposes of showing that Mr Ngaïssona did not receive any money, including not from François Bozizé. Overall, the Chamber has considered this article in the context of other evidence before it, referencing a limited excerpt for a specific and limited purpose in its determinations. The Chamber therefore does not consider necessary to address the Ngaïssona Defence’s submissions any further.

CAR and put an end to the crisis’, and ‘show his commitment and engagement for the return of peace in CAR’, thus demonstrating that his actions, to the extent they could be deemed as contributions, ‘were not made with the specific aim of facilitating any offence, nor that of furthering any criminal activities’.⁴⁸¹³

1856. The Chamber has considered the evidence, as further outlined below, in the overall context of the information before it. The Chamber considers that this evidence shows that while the Anti-Balaka, and specifically Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom, did engage in activities also aimed at peace and reconciliation, these were set in the context of broader peace negotiations with the CAR government and international authorities.⁴⁸¹⁴ They also took place at a time when no more large-scale active hostilities were taking place, when the Seleka had mostly retreated to the north or was billeted,⁴⁸¹⁵ and when Muslim civilians especially in the west of the CAR had been forced to leave their localities.

1857. Importantly, the Chamber has also considered the occasions when Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom did not intervene or condemn the actions of the Anti-Balaka, including violent acts and abuses committed by them: including in the context of their advance towards Bangui, during attacks on Bossangoa and Bangui, or during the advance of Mr Yekatom’s group on the PK9-Mbaïki axis. Indeed, in those contexts, which are of relevance to the charges in this case, neither Mr Ngaïssona nor Mr Yekatom condemned any of the Anti-Balaka’s activities, or sanctioned individuals for their actions, and especially the national coordination under Mr Ngaïssona’s lead repeatedly referred to the Anti-Balaka having acted heroically and to the transition government being ungrateful because it was felt that it did not recognise the ‘act of deliverance’ the Anti-Balaka in their view performed.⁴⁸¹⁶

1858. Indeed, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that she had a lot of exchanges with the Anti-Balaka and was never closed to any form of exchange with them, yet Mr Ngaïssona said all the time that the authorities were not open and that the government was ungrateful.⁴⁸¹⁷

1859. This attitude is reflected in the evidence of Alfred Legrand Ngaya, who opined that it was the transition government which had no incentive to stop the violence because it allowed them to stay in government longer, which was why they refused to work with the Anti-Balaka, the FACA had to arrange security in the neighbourhoods, and the international forces did nothing to help.⁴⁸¹⁸

1860. It is within this context that the Chamber has considered the evidence of witnesses who mentioned the peaceful and reconciliatory attitude and approach of Mr Ngaïssona⁴⁸¹⁹ and Mr Yekatom⁴⁸²⁰ in general, or more specifically, towards the Muslim civilian population, whether stated to have been the same throughout 2014,⁴⁸²¹ or more specifically related to the second half of that year.⁴⁸²²

1861. The Chamber considers the importance of the context well illustrated by the evidence of Vivien Beina. While describing how grateful the people in the Lobaye were to Mr Yekatom for his efforts and stating that this was why they elected him as member of parliament, Vivien

Beina further testified that during those elections there were practically no Muslims in the Lobaye, and even Christians who had converted refused to vote because they were afraid.⁴⁸²³

1862. Among the activities engaged in by the Anti-Balaka, and by Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom more specifically, the Chamber notes the press statement issued by the Anti-Balaka general coordination, as signed by Mr Ngaïssona, on occasion of Catherine Samba-Panza's election as new transition president.⁴⁸²⁴

1863. Further, the evidence before the Chamber as outlined below shows that the Anti-Balaka coordination requested billeting of the Anti-Balaka elements comparable to the billeting of Seleka in Bangui, leading to frustration when this did not happen. The question of billeting Anti-Balaka elements was also related to the issue of organised disarming, neither of which in fact took place during the period relevant to the charges.

1864. The Chamber has before it two documents which appear to be project suggestions for billeting and aid projects for the Anti-Balaka, prepared around February 2014. The first document traces the origins of the Anti-Balaka to self-defence groups that set up due to the Seleka violence, progressing to and reaching Bangui with the attack on 5 December 2013, and eventually leading to the dismissal of Michel Djotodia and Nicolas Tiangaye.⁴⁸²⁵ Importantly, the document continues:

Aussi, la population, victime des exactions des S[eleka] à travers la Centrafrique depuis le 10 décembre 2012, a regagné les rangs des Antibalaka avec un esprit de vengeance envers les ex-Séléka est [sic] les sujets musulmans qui ont soutenu les Séléka durant leur occupation de la RCA. Avec la généralisation du mouvement « Anti-Balaka » à cette frange de population centrafricaine victime des Séléka, les dérapages sont constatés dans les rangs des Antibalaka en sachant que beaucoup de délinquants et de déviants ont grossi les rangs du Mouvement.

Pour freiner et enrayer la propension aux dérapages des combattants Antibalaka « mélangés », le cantonnement, la prise en charge et l'alimentation des combattants

1865. The document further outlines specific goals, expected results, timeline, beneficiaries, and gives a breakdown of number of elements with their commanders per specified sites in Bangui, with inter alia groups led by Andilo Ngaïbona, Benjamin Ouapoutou, Thierry Lebene, Guy Mazimbelet, Richard Bejouane, Dieudonné Houronti.⁴⁸²⁷

1866. The second document provides the same background, but specifies slightly different project steps and gives an estimated budget.⁴⁸²⁸

1867. The Chamber considers of particular note that this second document acknowledges and recognises that Anti-Balaka elements were driven, at least in part, by the thought of revenge against Muslims in general that they considered to have been supportive of the Seleka, and that it does not, in this, try to suggest that any crimes committed by Anti-Balaka elements in this specific setting would have been committed exclusively by individuals who were ‘fake’ or not in fact Anti-Balaka elements. Rather, it includes elements driven by revenge and having committed ‘dérapages’ in its overall force.

1868. Moreover, Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that he drafted the projects on instructions of Mr Ngaïssona,⁴⁸²⁹ explaining that the figure of 50,000 elements was an approximation on the basis of what the ComZones were telling them.⁴⁸³⁰ Alfred Legrand Ngaya said that there were two similar projects with different themes, concerning emergency assistance and return to villages, as well as billeting.⁴⁸³¹ The witness testified that the projects were sent to the transition government and international forces and organisations, but there was never any reaction.⁴⁸³² The witness agreed with the suggestion that billeting was necessary because of the lack of structure and combatants being left to their own devices, while FACA members did not want to disarm because of the lack of security forces.⁴⁸³³ Alfred Legrand Ngaya also stated that the government did not pay for the return of combatants, most returned on their own and Mr Ngaïssona helped pay for some to return.⁴⁸³⁴ The witness thought it was bad faith of Tiangaye and others to say that the CAR did not have the resources to billet the Anti-Balaka, the problem was how to carry out advocacy to raise the necessary resources, the political will was lacking.⁴⁸³⁵

⁴⁸²⁶ Project, CAR-OTP-2025-0362, at 0364-65. (Translation from French to English by the Registry) ‘In addition, the population, victims of the Seleka’s atrocities throughout the Central African Republic since 10 December 2012, have joined the ranks of the Anti-Balaka with the intention of exacting revenge on the ex-Seleka and the Muslim individuals who supported the Seleka during their occupation of the CAR. With the “Anti-Balaka” movement expanding to include this section of the Central African population that had been victimized by the Seleka, excesses are observed in the ranks of the Anti-Balaka, knowing that many delinquents and deviants have swelled the ranks of the Movement. The total headcount of these young Anti-Balaka is currently assessed at around 50,000 combatants, spread across the Movement’s various strongholds in Bangui and the provinces. To slow down and halt the inclination towards excesses by the “mixed” Anti-Balaka combatants, it is urgently necessary to billet, support and feed the Anti-Balaka combatants with a view to consolidating the process of peace-keeping and normalization under way in the Central African Republic. This operation will help preserve the communities in the Central African Republic.’

1869. Catherine Samba-Panza explained when testifying about the disarmament and reconciliation efforts of the CAR transitional government that they intended to engage in organised disarmament, and that the grouping and billeting of armed groups had to correspond to certain criteria within an organised overall framework, which was difficult to do the same way for the Anti-Balaka as the Seleka as it had to be done with the support of the international community, since this required resources which the CAR did not have.⁴⁸³⁶ To Catherine Samba-Panza, Mr Ngaïssona's statement of being ready to put down weapons was a 'political spin' ('effets d'annonce'): it was something that he said, but did not do.⁴⁸³⁷ The witness testified that she received a lot of Anti-Balaka suggestions on peace and reconciliation, about billeting or housing, but that this needed to be in a set strategy and the government did not have the resources.⁴⁸³⁸ Moreover, Catherine Samba-Panza testified that when André Nzapayéké visited the 4th arrondissement, where most of the Anti-Balaka lived, in June 2014, people were not really prepared to disarm because they felt like giving up their weapons left them at the mercy of attacks.⁴⁸³⁹ The witness agreed with the suggestion that the fact of not housing elements combined with the failure of disarmament led to a situation where armed elements mixed and mingled with the population.⁴⁸⁴⁰

1870. Overall, it is clear from the evidence before the Chamber that while there may have been wishes and requests from the side of the Anti-Balaka in this regard, no billeting of groups took place, and a DDR programme was not set up until some years after.

1871. Several witnesses spoke to the request from the side of the Anti-Balaka and Mr Ngaïssona more specifically that Anti-Balaka elements be billeted, and the idea of combatants returning to their villages in the provinces.⁴⁸⁴¹ The Chamber considers of note in this regard that Jo-Brice Ouabiro Dana testified that Mr Ngaïssona was taking care of the Anti-Balaka at the time and said during a meeting that this should not only be the responsibility of Mr Ngaïssona, but that they should start a process with the government to take care of them.⁴⁸⁴²

1872. Other witnesses spoke of the participation of Anti-Balaka elements in a DDR programme which was set up at a later stage.⁴⁸⁴³

1873. Some witnesses mentioned Mr Ngaïssona being involved in ensuring the return of vehicles stolen by Anti-Balaka elements.⁴⁸⁴⁴

1874. The evidence before the Chamber further shows that one of the initiatives implemented with a view to control the actions of Anti-Balaka elements was a ‘military police’, set up in February 2014 by the general coordination under Mr Ngaïssona’s lead, which was to track down and hand over to the gendarmerie ‘fake’ Anti-Balaka, meaning those that said they were Anti-Balaka and committed acts against the population, but clearly was also understood to track down those considered to be Anti-Balaka elements, but acting out of bounds, specifically in the context of theft and looting.⁴⁸⁴⁵

1875. The Chamber has before it a compilation of four mission orders and one mandate which includes orders to conduct military police operations in various locations, to be done by different groups of individuals per set of locations, including inter alia Namsio Emotion Brice, Golokette Guy and Ngaïbona Andilo.⁴⁸⁴⁶ The Chamber considers the evidence inconclusive as to whether Andjilo did in fact play any role in the Anti-Balaka ‘military police’.⁴⁸⁴⁷

1876. Overall, the effectiveness of this measure is unclear.⁴⁸⁴⁸ The Chamber considers of further import in this context the evidence of Catherine Samba-Panza, who testified that there were actions by the Anti-Balaka, but they could not replace the enforcement bodies, they were not controlled either, and it was not their job to do so.⁴⁸⁴⁹

1877. The setting up of a ‘military police’ is also linked to the question of interaction of Anti-Balaka groups with national and international forces.

1878. Specifically, Vivien Beina suggested that the unit was done in common agreement with the international organisations and its actions were followed by the international community to make sure that the correct measures of confidence were followed.⁴⁸⁵⁰ In contrast, P-1193 testified that the national coordination did not do anything and the military police was set up after the June coordination was agreed because the prime minister’s office wanted ‘Rombhot’s’ group to set up a police to track down bandits.⁴⁸⁵¹

1879. More generally, Alfred Legrand Ngaya testified that state security forces existed in name only in 2014, and agreed with the suggestion that international forces did not travel outside of Bangui, with generally less presence of international forces in the provinces, which was why Mr Yekatom and his people wanted to collaborate and reinforce or support the gendarmerie.⁴⁸⁵² The witness agreed with the suggestion that Mr Yekatom intervened when people had looted vehicles around PK45 on the Boali road, handing them over to Emotion Namsio and his military police.⁴⁸⁵³

1880. Catherine Samba-Panza agreed with the suggestion that there was a lack of security in the interior of the country, international troops were mostly deployed in Bangui and surrounding towns, the need to protect themselves led to people not wanting to disarm voluntarily, in addition to a lack of trust in international forces and national forces not being able to fully play their role.⁴⁸⁵⁴ The witness testified that violence and abuses continued for several years in the presence of international forces, but those did what they could to try and stop it.⁴⁸⁵⁵

She further stated that the international forces refused to work with the Anti-Balaka as they could not work with an informal group, but they did carry out certain joint initiatives with them.⁴⁸⁵⁶

1881. Several witnesses talked about Mr Yekatom's group in particular assisting and cooperating with national and international forces, specifically in the Lobaye prefecture.⁴⁸⁵⁷ In this context, Brice Emotion Namsio agreed with the suggestion that the cooperation started 'from the outset' of the Samba-Panza government,⁴⁸⁵⁸ while P-1858 confirmed the suggestion that collaboration to stop people who were thieves and wanted to destroy the CAR started as soon as the Seleka left the PK9 position.⁴⁸⁵⁹

1882. The Chamber refers in this regard to its discussion of the interactions of Mr Yekatom's group with national and international forces in the Lobaye and specifically on the PK9-Mbaïki axis, in which it concludes that such activities took place at a time when the Muslim civilian population had been removed from the area.⁴⁸⁶⁰

1883. The Chamber further considers instructive in this regard that the CAR Panel, when meeting with Mr Yekatom at the end of April 2014, observed elements under Mr Yekatom's control in Sekia and Pissa operating alongside regular forestry, police and road maintenance agents.⁴⁸⁶¹ Importantly, the panel also confirmed the presence of Anti-Balaka forces under Mr Yekatom's command, alongside the gendarmerie, in Pissa, Mbaïki and Boda, where trucks to practically all forestry concessions passed and the elements levied taxes,⁴⁸⁶² and concluded that Mr Yekatom's forces exercised a significant degree of control over road transport into Bangui from the southern transport axis linking to Cameroon.⁴⁸⁶³

1884. Moreover, the Chamber cannot conclude, on the evidence before it, that Mr Yekatom's group would have entertained any special relations with the Sangaris with a view to re-establishing peace and security.⁴⁸⁶⁴

1885. The Chamber received evidence on a number of reconciliation activities engaged in by various actors, including the Anti-Balaka with Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom, after the end of February 2014. In light of its findings regarding the duration of the armed conflict as set out below,⁴⁸⁶⁵ the Chamber notes this evidence to provide further context, without going into detail.

1887. The Chamber also received evidence on the efforts undertaken with a view to reconcile communities in Boda.⁴⁸⁶⁷

1888. The evidence before the Chamber further shows that in particular in the context of the Brazzaville negotiations in mid-2014, the Anti-Balaka, including Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom, organised missions to the provinces to give information to the Anti-Balaka regarding the peace process and discussions with the government and international organisations.⁴⁸⁶⁸ In this context, the Chamber notes the evidence of Alfred Legrand Ngaya, who stated that the missions were to get the Anti-Balaka to understand that they needed to join the process to return to normalcy, that things had changed and ‘we were now in the mindset of peace’, implying that this was indeed a change in attitude to preceding behaviour.⁴⁸⁶⁹

1889. The evidence before the Chamber further shows that the Anti-Balaka issued press statements or communiqués which asked the Anti-Balaka to observe a peaceful attitude and not to do anything to disturb the ‘Muslim brothers’ during Ramadan,⁴⁸⁷⁰ as well as to allow free circulation of humanitarian, international forces and other vehicles.⁴⁸⁷¹ In relation to the latter, the Chamber notes that this seems to have taken place right after the Anti-Balaka engaged in a ‘ville morte’-activity in October 2014.⁴⁸⁷²

1890. The evidence before the Chamber shows that commitments to peace were expressed by Mr Ngaïssona in the context of the Brazzaville negotiations.⁴⁸⁷³

1891. The evidence before the Chamber further indicates that following the Brazzaville agreement, the Anti-Balaka under Mr Ngaïssona, and involving Mr Yekatom, engaged in removing roadblocks.⁴⁸⁷⁴

1892. In addition, the evidence before the Chamber shows that towards the end of 2014, Mr Ngaïssona decided to transform the Anti-Balaka movement into a political party, with which not all Anti-Balaka elements agreed.⁴⁸⁷⁵

1893. As stated, the Chamber has considered the evidence in the overall context of the information before it. In particular, the Chamber considers that while the Anti-Balaka, and specifically Mr Ngaïssona and Mr Yekatom, did engage in activities also aimed at peace and reconciliation, these were set in the context of broader peace negotiations with the CAR government and international authorities as well as at a time when no more large-scale active hostilities took place, when the Seleka had mostly retreated to the north or was billeted, and when Muslim civilians especially in the west of the CAR had been forced to leave their localities.⁴⁸⁷⁶

8. The continuation of hostilities

i. Continued hostilities and peace negotiations

Notwithstanding the retreat of the Seleka following the resignation of Michel Djotodia and the setting up of a new transition government in January 2014, the main hostilities between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka which had started in earnest in September 2013 continued largely unabated until the end of February 2014. Hostilities thereafter did continue, but subsided considerably.

The UN Security Council recurrently dedicated attention to the security situation in the CAR in 2013 and 2014. Several attempts to bring about the cessation of hostilities failed, including the 16 June 2014 PARETO mediation agreement, the 23 July 2014 peace agreement signed by the Seleka and the Anti-Balaka in Brazzaville, Republic of the Congo, and the agreement signed in Nairobi in April 2015. The number of internally displaced persons and refugees outside of the CAR decreased in the course of 2014, but overall remained in the hundreds of thousands throughout the year.

1894. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that between September 2013 and the end of February 2014, and despite the resignation of Michel Djotodia, the subsequent withdrawal of the majority of the Seleka troops from the CAR, and the election of a new transition president in January 2014,⁴⁸⁷⁷ the hostilities in the CAR involving the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka continued. The continuing hostilities led to significant numbers of CAR civilians being forced to leave from their homes. As the evidence outlined below demonstrates, hostilities between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka from March 2014 onwards amounted mainly to skirmishes and low-intensity tactical struggles.

1895. At the outset, the Chamber notes in this regard its discussion of hostilities between Anti-Balaka groups and the Seleka starting in September 2013, in the context of the advance of Anti-Balaka groups through the provinces.⁴⁸⁷⁸ In addition, the Chamber refers to its discussion of continued hostilities in localities in western CAR in January and early February 2014.⁴⁸⁷⁹ The Chamber also notes its discussion of the hostilities in the context of the coordinated attacks in Bangui and Bossangoa on 5 December 2013.⁴⁸⁸⁰

1896. Further, the CAR Panel concluded in its 2014 interim report with reference to the political demise of former president Michel Djotodia and the subsequent election of Catherine Samba-Panza as new transition president,⁴⁸⁸¹ that:

[i]nitial hopes of a new beginning did not increase security for the population. On the contrary, fighting between the former Seleka and the anti-Balaka continued in several parts of the country as did targeted inter-communal killings [...]. The deployment of MISCA troops alongside the French forces (under operation SANGARIS) prevented worse from happening but did not stop the killing of civilians.⁴⁸⁸²

1897. More specifically, the panel, which strove to maintain a permanent presence in the CAR through missions,⁴⁸⁸³ documented 444 incidents between 5 December 2013 and 30 April 2014, resulting in the killing of 2,424 civilians by the parties to the conflict,⁴⁸⁸⁴ with approximately 11% reportedly attributable to the Seleka and 16% to the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁸⁸⁵ The Chamber considers this unaffected by the CAR Panel attributing a greater number of civilians killed to ‘unknown’, ‘other’, ‘various’ or unattributable perpetrators,⁴⁸⁸⁶ as this does not contradict the conclusion that the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka continued to engage in such violence in the same period.

1898. The panel concluded that whereas civilians continued to be targeted by both the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka, direct hostilities between the two armed groups did subside, observing that there was a clear reduction in the number of civilians killed across the country throughout 2014.⁴⁸⁸⁷ According to the panel, ‘[t]here have been few direct confrontations between former Séléka and anti-balaka forces since 5 December 2013, but both armed groups, in particular the anti-balaka, have constantly targeted civilians’.⁴⁸⁸⁸

1899. For the period between 5 December 2013 and 15 November 2015, the panel reported a total of 4,278 civilian deaths, with the majority of more than 1,200 civilians reportedly killed during the peak of violence in Bangui in December 2013.⁴⁸⁸⁹ In particular for the period as of August 2014, the panel observed that the Anti-Balaka and Seleka groups were engaged in

For the period between May and August 2014, the panel documented a further 436 civilians killed (see CAR Panel Final Report 2014, CAR-OTP-2001-5386, at 5435-36, para. 203), while for the period between 5 December 2013 and mid-August 2014, a total of 3,003 civilian deaths by various perpetrators were reported (see CAR Panel Final Report 2014, CAR-OTP-2001-5386, at 5388, at 5435-36, para. 203). According to the panel, from 5 December 2013 to 14 August 2014, 1,392 civilians were killed in Bangui, out of which 251 were attributed to the Anti-Balaka (see Annex 67 to CAR Panel Final Report 2014, CAR-OTP-2001-5386, at 5574).

1900. The insecure situation in the CAR is illustrated by the attention it consequently received from the international community. Indeed, the UN Security Council adopted a series of resolutions on the security situation in the CAR in January, October and December 2013 and January, April and October 2014, which included the adoption of measures under Chapter VII of the UN Charter.⁴⁸⁹¹

1901. The evidence before the Chamber, as outlined below, shows that the hostilities led to people having to flee to localities within the CAR as well as surrounding countries.

1902. Specifically, the UN International Commission of Inquiry on the CAR reported that the number of internally displaced persons ‘rose very rapidly between December 2013 and January 2014, from 602,000 to 825,000 (and then decreasing to 430,000 by November 2014)’.⁴⁸⁹²

1903. The CAR Panel reported that members of the Muslim population relocated to other parts of the CAR from Bossembélé, Bossangoa and PK12 in the first quarter of 2014,⁴⁸⁹³ stating that there were 460,050 internally displaced persons throughout the country as of 14 May 2014, and 509,000 as of 13 August 2014.⁴⁸⁹⁴ The panel reported that whilst Bangui saw a return of internally displaced persons between May and August 2014 due to an improved security situation in and around the capital, the rest of the CAR saw ‘no significant reduction in the number of internally displaced persons’.⁴⁸⁹⁵

1904. Witnesses also testified to these events. P-0475, involved with the Islamic community, testified that the IOM displaced some Muslims to the north of the CAR.⁴⁸⁹⁶ Nicolas Tiangaye stated that within the CAR, Muslims sought refuge in the areas of the country occupied by the Seleka.⁴⁸⁹⁷ The Chamber also refers to its discussion of the dislocation of Muslims from Bangui,⁴⁸⁹⁸ Bossangoa,⁴⁸⁹⁹ and locations along the PK9-Mbaïki axis.⁴⁹⁰⁰

1905. In relation to individuals from the CAR leaving to neighbouring countries, the UN International Commission of Inquiry on the CAR reported a ‘massive outflow’ of refugees from the CAR to neighbouring countries, particularly Cameroon and Chad, but also the Republic of the Congo and the DRC.⁴⁹⁰¹ The commission reported that the ‘scale of the exodus’ increased from 235,067 refugees in December 2013 to 423,296 refugees in November 2014.⁴⁹⁰² The commission stated that four of the five refugee camps that it visited were predominately occupied by Muslims, who explained that they were forced to leave due to the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁰³

1906. The CAR Panel reported that by 15 August 2014, the countries neighbouring the CAR were hosting 406,786 refugees, with the highest number of refugees from the CAR in Cameroon, and others fleeing to Chad, the Congo and the DRC.⁴⁹⁰⁴ The panel reported an overall increase in refugees between May and August 2014, stating that the number of 191,265 CAR refugees in Cameroon as of May 2014 increased to 231,037 by August 2014.⁴⁹⁰⁵ For the same period, it concluded that the number of 100,520 CAR refugees in Chad decreased to 93,305, the number of 16,062 CAR refugees in the Congo increased to 18,232, and the number of 57,608 CAR refugees in the DRC increased to 64,212.⁴⁹⁰⁶ The panel stated that the flight of a portion of the population from western CAR to Cameroon contributed to ‘the emptying’ of western CAR of its Muslim communities ‘as a consequence of sectarian and religious violence’.⁴⁹⁰⁷

1907. Indeed, also the UN Secretary-General reported a radical change in the ethnic and religious demography of the CAR following the flight of many Muslims mostly to Cameroon and Chad, referring to towns which once had been multi-confessional as having been emptied of their Muslim communities (such as Yaloké, Bossempaté, Bozoum and Mbaïki).⁴⁹⁰⁸

1908. Witnesses also testified to the Muslim population fleeing the CAR. Specifically, Nicolas Tiangaye, former prime minister of the CAR, spoke of convoys of Muslims leaving the CAR to escape the acts of violence committed against them, mostly to the east of Cameroon and south of Chad, with some going as far as N’Djamena.⁴⁹⁰⁹ Jean-Jacques Demafouth testified that those who had resources took flights, while there were also many convoys to the border with Chad, Cameroon and sometimes Congo.⁴⁹¹⁰

1909. P-0475, involved with the CAR Islamic community, stated that displacement started in 2013 and 2014 and went via various means, including by river, IOM vehicles escorted by MINUSCA, air, as well as trucks and buses sent by Idriss Deby to repatriate ‘the Chadians’ in Bangui.⁴⁹¹¹ P-0475 stated that people left to Chad, Cameroon, Mali, Senegal and the DRC, and that those originally from Mali preferred to ‘return’ to Mali, the Senegalese preferred to ‘return’ to Senegal, the Sudanese to Sudan and so on.⁴⁹¹² P-0475 estimated that about three quarters of the CAR Muslim population in total left the country.⁴⁹¹³ He also stated that the Muslims who left were a mixed group; composed of men, women and children, and sometimes whole families.⁴⁹¹⁴ He stated that the families which had been displaced to other countries from the CAR were often not living altogether and were separated.⁴⁹¹⁵ P-0475 maintained that although the Muslims left Bangui, in their minds they hoped to one day return, but when the tensions subsided some, although not all, the Muslims returned to Bangui.⁴⁹¹⁶

1910. Contemporaneous media, NGO and state reporting also mentioned the outflux of people from the CAR to neighbouring countries, as well as the situation of internally displaced people within the CAR.⁴⁹¹⁷

b. Peace negotiations

1911. The evidence before the Chamber as further outlined below shows that several summits were held and agreements signed with a view to creating dialogue, achieving peace and ceasing the hostilities in the CAR between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka, as well as other warring factions concerned. It appears that those attempts were met with limited, if any, success.

1912. First, in June 2014 a mediation agreement was facilitated by the national NGO 'Paix Réconciliation et Tolérance' (PARETO), and signed by Mr Ngaïssona as representative of the Anti-Balaka and its 'national political coordinator'.⁴⁹¹⁸ The CAR Panel remarked on the 'major successes' achieved by PARETO 'in bringing former Séléka and anti-balaka forces to the negotiating table', but also noted the lack of support that PARETO apparently received from the CAR transition government.⁴⁹¹⁹

1913. The Chamber recalls in this context its discussion of the leadership tussles within the Anti-Balaka involving Mr Ngaïssona and Sébastien Wenezoui, leading around this same time to

1914. Second, a forum on national reconciliation in the CAR was held in Brazzaville, Republic of the Congo, in July 2014, mediated by President Denis Sassou Nguesso.⁴⁹²¹ Mr Ngaïssona signed the resulting cessation-of-hostilities agreement for the Anti-Balaka on 23 July 2014.⁴⁹²² Catherine Samba-Panza testified in this regard that many meetings with the Anti-Balaka, the Seleka and the civilian forces were held to prepare for the forum, with her convincing all the stakeholders to go there because the transition authorities were convinced that this meeting was really necessary.⁴⁹²³ The Anti-Balaka eventually did participate, with a strong delegation of about 15 or 20 members,⁴⁹²⁴ which included Mr Ngaïssona, Mr Yekatom, Vivien Beina, Thierry Lebene aka ‘12 Puissances’, and Maxime Mokom.⁴⁹²⁵

1915. However, the CAR Panel observed that whilst the agreement reportedly created ‘positive momentum’, the mediation was shrouded in disagreement on issues such as the perceived marginalisation of actors in the resolution of the crisis, differing interpretations of the terms of the agreement, confusion over the legal basis of aspects of the governmental transition, and subsequent violations of the agreement.⁴⁹²⁶

1916. This is echoed by Catherine Samba-Panza, who testified that there was ‘a lot of political tension’ surrounding the Brazzaville forum due to the possibility of the country being divided into a Muslim and non-Muslim part and problems regarding disarmament.⁴⁹²⁷ The witness further indicated that the violence did not stop after the signature of the agreement at Brazzaville, and that the terms of the agreement could not be materialised due to a lack of ability to follow up within the community.⁴⁹²⁸ At the same time, Catherine Samba-Panza indicated that the forum helped a lot to sign the agreement, and in billeting, demobilising and disarming of groups.⁴⁹²⁹

1917. Thus, the precarious security situation in the CAR persisted, with the CAR Panel noting in October 2014 that despite the agreement signed in Brazzaville, ‘armed groups remain in control of or still exert influence over almost all inhabited areas’ of the CAR, and about 2,000 Seleka elements and 1,500 ‘militiamen associated with’ the Anti-Balaka ‘continue to post a permanent threat to the peace, security and stability of the country, which remains de facto partitioned’.⁴⁹³⁰

1918. The Chamber recalls in the above context its discussion of the Brazzaville agreement leading to the removal of some roadblocks,⁴⁹³¹ while at the same time there continued to be disagreements between the Anti-Balaka and the transition government.⁴⁹³²

1919. Third, further peace discussions between the armed groups involved in the conflict in the CAR took place between December 2014 and April 2015, leading to another cessation of hostilities agreement signed in Nairobi, Republic of Kenya, in April 2015.⁴⁹³³ The representatives signing on behalf of the Anti-Balaka were Joachim Kokaté, Maxime Mokom and Côme Hippolyte Azounou.⁴⁹³⁴ The Chamber recalls in this regard its discussion of related leadership tussles between Mr Ngaïssona and Maxime Mokom.⁴⁹³⁵

1920. This agreement too had limited effect on the security situation in the CAR, with the CAR Panel reporting in late 2015 that prospects for peace and security in the CAR ‘remain[ed] remote’, and observing that the Nairobi talks had been organised without the endorsement of the CAR transition authorities and also ‘proposed no inclusive solutions’.⁴⁹³⁶ In this context, the panel observed that the appointment of leaders of armed groups as members of the transition government both reinforced their sense of impunity and had no significant impact in reducing the level of violence.⁴⁹³⁷

1921. Witnesses testified that the violence in the CAR continued despite the change in government and the peace talks. Catherine Samba-Panza testified that the violence and reprisals continued throughout the CAR even after she was appointed as transition president and in fact until the end of 2015, in the presence of international forces, Sangaris, African Union forces,⁴⁹³⁸ describing the CAR as being ‘in a situation of total chaos’.⁴⁹³⁹ Specifically in relation to Boy-Rabe, the witness testified that even though the Seleka was no longer present, tensions still existed and people sought to protect themselves with weapons, re-confirming that the crisis lasted until the end of 2015.⁴⁹⁴⁰ P-0876 also testified that after the resignation of Djotodia and the departure of the Seleka from power, the violence continued,⁴⁹⁴¹ and the CAR continued to face disorder and remained in a state of chaos beyond the control of the transition government.⁴⁹⁴² He asserted that from the time that the CAR fell into a state of chaos on 10 December 2012, the violence was in fact still ongoing at the time of his testimony in December 2021.⁴⁹⁴³

ii. Hostilities in western CAR in January and February 2014

As part of the Anti-Balaka’s pursuit of its core objective, in the context of which its elements targeted the Muslim civilian population, specifically in the west of the CAR, due to the Anti-Balaka perceiving the Muslims in the CAR as collectively responsible for, complicit in, or supportive of the violence and abuses committed by the Seleka, the Anti-Balaka continued to target the Muslim civilian population in 2014 across the western CAR prefectures, including in the second half of January and early February 2014 in Ombella-M’Poko (Gaga, Zawa, Yaloké), Ouham-Pendé (Bossemptélé), Nana-Mambéré (Baoro), Mambéré-Kadéï (Guen, Carnot, Berbérati) and Lobaye (Boda). The attacks followed a pattern with Anti-Balaka groups killing and injuring Muslim civilians, looting and destroying their belongings, and often placing them in enclaved positions under difficult circumstances, eventually leading to many Muslims having to leave the respective areas.

1922. The evidence before the Chamber as outlined below shows that in the context of continued hostilities between the Anti-Balaka and the Seleka, the Anti-Balaka also continued to target the Muslim civilian population, leading to killings and dislocation of Muslim civilians, specifically in localities in the western CAR in January and February 2014.

1923. The evidence as outlined shows that these attacks followed a pattern: when attacking localities in the western CAR, Anti-Balaka groups killed and injured Muslim civilians, looted and destroyed their belongings, and often placed them in enclaved positions under difficult circumstances, eventually leading to Muslims having to leave these areas.

i. Gaga/Zawa/Yaloké – 17 January 2014

Attacks in Gaga, Zawa and Yaloké

1924. The Chamber recalls that an Anti-Balaka group attacked Gaga in October 2013 in the context of the Anti-Balaka’s advance through the provinces towards Bangui.⁴⁹⁴⁴

1925. The evidence as outlined below shows that Anti-Balaka groups attacked Gaga again in mid-January 2014, before also attacking Zawa and Yaloké. The evidence shows that following the attack in Yaloké, various groups of Muslims remained confined inside and outside of Yaloké for weeks, followed by hundreds of Muslims being removed from Yaloké.

1926. P-1779 described a second Anti-Balaka attack on Gaga during which he saw many people running, heard gunshots, loud detonations, saw smoke and realised the Anti-Balaka had set fire to houses, and heard doors being broken down.⁴⁹⁴⁵ P-1779 stated he heard the Anti-Balaka breaking down doors and said that they looted the property of Muslims, they knew which houses belonged to Muslims.⁴⁹⁴⁶ P-1779 stated he fled with his family towards Zawa where they arrived in the evening.⁴⁹⁴⁷

1927. P-1779 listed the names of Muslims killed by the Anti-Balaka during the attack.⁴⁹⁴⁸ Zenaba Oumar overheard the Anti-Balaka in Yaloké discussing the death of a trader and his brother when escaping Gaga by Anti-Balaka of Bossangoa who had joined the local Anti-Balaka for the attack.⁴⁹⁴⁹ P-2416, an advisor of Yaloké municipality, stated that he heard that a merchant with a transport vehicle was killed by the Anti-Balaka when trying to escape Gaga, but he did not know when this occurred or if it was associated with an attack.⁴⁹⁵⁰

1928. Zenaba Oumar stated that a short time after Michel Djotodia resigned, she was in Yaloké and heard shooting in Gaga, and was told that some Muslims from Gaga fled to Zawa and Yaloké, also seeing some displaced people from Gaga arriving in Yaloké.⁴⁹⁵¹ The witness was told by one person that he had fled Gaga due to the attack by the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁵² Zenaba Oumar stated that there was a lot of panic within the Muslim community in Yaloké, as they thought that Yaloké would be attacked next.⁴⁹⁵³

1929. P-1779 stated that the Muslims from Gaga and Zawa met and decided that there was no choice but to flee to Cameroon, and the next day more than 100 Muslims began walking, whilst others stayed, arriving in Carnot after approximately two weeks, having been attacked by Anti-Balaka along the way with some people being injured or killed by machete and gunshots.⁴⁹⁵⁴ P-1779 stated that in Carnot, they encountered more Anti-Balaka with black paint on their faces, head/hair-pieces and gris-gris, who searched them and took any money they found, and that the group paid approximately 300,000 CFA to cross the river, while those with cattle killed it before giving it to the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁵⁵ P-1779 stated that he believed that had they not paid, blood would have been shed, and he thought many Muslims had already crossed the river as there was a lot of dead cattle.⁴⁹⁵⁶ P-1779 stated that they eventually arrived in Gbiti, Cameroon.⁴⁹⁵⁷

1930. P-1779 further stated that the Anti-Balaka operating in Gaga were from Gaga, with leaders Bedani, Le Bleu, Dominique Mboude and Befio; P-1779 stated that everyone talked about Le Bleu being an Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁵⁸

1931. Following the attack on Gaga, Zawa was also attacked by an Anti-Balaka group.

1932. P-2416 stated that he knew that the Anti-Balaka attacked Zawa, but he could not say when or what happened, he knew some merchants from Zawa who fled after the attack.⁴⁹⁵⁹

1933. Zenaba Oumar stated that one or two days after the attack on Gaga, Zawa was also attacked by the Anti-Balaka, she could hear the sound of gunshots in the distance and was told by others in the Yaloké Muslim community that there were shots during an attack on Zawa by the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁶⁰ The witness stated that after the Anti-Balaka attacked Gaga, but prior to their attack on Zawa, the Seleka in the area had all fled to meet up with the fleeing Seleka of Gaga and Zawa.⁴⁹⁶¹

1934. P-1576, a journalist, stated that he went to Zawa on 24 January 2014 where he met Anti-Balaka committing exactions in the Yaloké area.⁴⁹⁶² P-1576 further stated that on 30 January 2014, between Zawa and Bossempaté, he encountered some Anti-Balaka who told him that they had just attacked a Peuhl village, but that they had no more ammunition.⁴⁹⁶³

1935. An HRW press release dated 7 March 2014 stated that not a single Muslim remained in Zawa and other towns that the HRW reporters visited.⁴⁹⁶⁴

1936. Following the attacks on Gaga and Zawa, Yaloké was also attacked, twice within a matter of a few days and despite the intermittent presence of Sangaris forces.

1937. P-2416 stated that he heard from Christians and Muslims that the majority of Christians moved from Yaloké centre to the 'Quartier mission' because there were rumours that the Anti-Balaka were coming to attack the Muslims.⁴⁹⁶⁵ P-2416 stated further that the Seleka left Yaloké soon after the resignation of Michel Djotodia and the commencement of Sangaris patrols in and around Yaloké; some Seleka who had married Muslim women in Yaloké remained and left the Seleka, returning to civilian society.⁴⁹⁶⁶

1938. P-2416 stated there were two major attacks on the Muslims in Yaloké by the Anti-Balaka, both approaching from the direction of Zawa, as well as a smaller attack in between the two major attacks which approached from the direction of Ladoumi and Bangui.⁴⁹⁶⁷ He also stated that there were a number of isolated Anti-Balaka killings of Muslim civilians in Yaloké unrelated to major attacks.⁴⁹⁶⁸ P-2416 heard that the Anti-Balaka who had attacked Bossembélé and Zawa were coming to join the Anti-Balaka in Yaloké.⁴⁹⁶⁹

1939. P-2416 stated that after the attacks on Bossembélé, Gaga and Zawa, the Sangaris arrived in Yaloké and based themselves in 'Quartier Mission' about two weeks after Michel Djotodia's resignation, as depicted in a video shown to the witness.⁴⁹⁷⁰ P-2416 stated that the Sangaris met with the Muslim community and asked them to hand in their weapons, and some gathered their bows, arrows, machetes, but there were no guns because the only Muslims who had guns were the Seleka who had left.⁴⁹⁷¹

1940.P-2416 stated that the first major attack by the Anti-Balaka on Yaloké occurred within two days of this video footage,⁴⁹⁷² after the Sangaris left Yaloké.⁴⁹⁷³

1941.P-2416 stated that before this first major attack, about one or two days after the meeting of Sangaris with the Muslim community, there were rumours that the Anti-Balaka were coming from everywhere to attack and kill the Muslims in Yaloké, there was widespread fear in the Muslim community at this time and they knew they were coming for them, the Anti-Balaka would taunt them saying ‘get prepared we are coming to kill you’; it was as if these Anti-Balaka were planning these main attacks in Yaloké with the assistance of Anti-Balaka from other areas.⁴⁹⁷⁴

1942.P-2416 stated that on the day of the first major attack, he was at home and heard gunfire from the direction of ‘Quartier Sous-Manguier’.⁴⁹⁷⁵ P-2416 stated that he later heard from the imam that the Anti-Balaka had killed the president of the Islamic community, and another person; P-2416 saw their bodies at the central mosque, with one appearing to have gunshot wounds to the stomach, back and chest.⁴⁹⁷⁶ P-2416 stated that he also saw people injured with gunshot wounds during this attack.⁴⁹⁷⁷ P-2416 stated that the only people who had guns in the area were Sangaris and Anti-Balaka, and the people he saw had not been shot by the Sangaris; all those injured said they had been shot by the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁷⁸ P-2416 thought that over an hour after the attack commenced, the Sangaris arrived back in Yaloké.⁴⁹⁷⁹ Zenaba Oumar, a Muslim woman from Yaloké, stated that after the attacks on Gaga and Zawa, she was told by someone whose son was in the Anti-Balaka, that the Anti-Balaka were en route to Yaloké to launch an attack.⁴⁹⁸⁰ The witness stated that the community also received the same information and she knew that the Anti-Balaka had ‘surrounded’ Yaloké

because she could hear gunfire in the air ‘coming from all directions’.⁴⁹⁸¹ Zenaba Oumar stated the Muslims gathered in the mosque and other compounds.⁴⁹⁸²

1943. P-2416 stated that within days, two major attacks occurred, including helicopter visits by a contingent from Bangui comprising a commander of the Sangaris and a sub-prefect.⁴⁹⁸³ P-2416 said that the helicopter visits took place on two separate occasions to negotiate peace between the Muslims and the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁸⁴ P-2416 thought the first visit occurred around or after the time of Catherine Samba-Panza’s appointment as interim president, because a new female sub-prefect was appointed after.⁴⁹⁸⁵ P-2416 heard that there was no solution at the meetings, the imam told him that an Anti-Balaka from Bossangoa told the imams, ‘you go and put the tyres under your house and take your house and go away’.⁴⁹⁸⁶ P-2416 was told this Anti-Balaka also hurled insults at the imams, to the effect ‘dondo maman ti ala’ (‘fuck you[r] mothers’).⁴⁹⁸⁷

1944. P-2416 stated that a few days after the first major attack the Anti-Balaka entered Yaloké from the direction of Bangui, he heard that some young Muslim men were ready to defend themselves and that the attack resulted in the death of an Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁸⁸

1945. P-2416 stated that at the second major attack a couple of days later he heard continuous gunfire from the direction of Bossangoa neighbourhood, and saw the body of one person being carried to the mosque by a young Muslim man who said he had been shot by the Anti-Balaka.⁴⁹⁸⁹ P-2416 stated that he heard that another Muslim was killed that day and his body taken to the mosque.⁴⁹⁹⁰ P-2416 said that he sought refuge at a relative’s house.⁴⁹⁹¹ P-2416 stated that the gunfire lasted for over an hour and a number of people were injured.⁴⁹⁹² P-

2416 stated that the Muslims gathered together near the town centre with many moving inside the mosque for refuge and many in the compound of a group chief.⁴⁹⁹³

1946. P-2416 stated that from where he was, he could see down both directions of the road towards Zawa and the opposite direction towards Bangui.⁴⁹⁹⁴ P-2416 said that he saw the Anti-Balaka going from house to house breaking doors and windows, entering homes and taking property, he saw some Anti-Balaka carrying away the doors to his own house.⁴⁹⁹⁵ P-2416 stated that the Anti-Balaka looted the shops in the market and stole everything, but the Sangaris were not able to do anything but watch.⁴⁹⁹⁶ P-2416 stated that he saw black smoke rising from the Arab neighbourhood around this time, and while he did not see the destruction himself, he considered that it was obvious from the black smoke that it was coming from the burning of buildings.⁴⁹⁹⁷

1947. Zenaba Oumar, who had fled to a property outside of Yaloké at the time of the first major attack, stated that the Anti-Balaka would leave for Yaloké, followed by shooting from that direction, and on one occasion the witness also saw black smoke rising into the air.⁴⁹⁹⁸ The witness stated she saw the Anti-Balaka passing by the property from the direction of Yaloké with mattresses, pots, other items, they talked about what they had stolen and that they had burnt the houses of Muslims.⁴⁹⁹⁹ Zenaba Oumar stated she recognised some of the Anti-Balaka elements who were all from Yaloké.⁵⁰⁰⁰

1948. In an undated televised interview, an Anti-Balaka element nicknamed 'Le Bleu',⁵⁰⁰¹ stated that they had suffered immensely in the country because of the actions of the Muslims and that he had decided to seek vengeance 'jusqu'à la fin du monde' ('until the end of the world').⁵⁰⁰² He explained that the Muslims had killed members of his family and he was

1949.P-1577, a journalist, visited Yaloké in early February 2014,⁵⁰⁰⁴ where he saw burnt vehicles, burnt tablets with Arabic script at a Muslim school, looting and destruction in what he was told was a predominantly Muslim marketplace, and Muslims at the mosque who said that they had moved there for their own security.⁵⁰⁰⁵ P-1577 heard that a local Anti-Balaka group was 'protecting Muslims', but was attacked by Anti-Balaka coming from the outside.⁵⁰⁰⁶

1952.P-2416 stated that he knew Richard as a gold merchant.⁵⁰⁰⁸ P-2416 stated that after Richard joined the Anti-Balaka, P-2416 heard that he was being referred to as ‘Colonel Richard’.⁵⁰⁰⁹ P-2416 stated that he believed Richard joined the Anti-Balaka around the same time that the Seleka came to Gaga and Yaloké.⁵⁰¹⁰ P-2416 heard from Muslims and the remaining Christians in Yaloké that Richard was in charge of the Anti-Balaka in Yaloké, and Richard in a later phone call confirmed to him that he was in charge of these Anti-Balaka in Yaloké.⁵⁰¹¹

1953.P-2416 further stated that sometimes Richard sent a young man who was a motor taxi driver to pick up goods, whom P-2416 would later know as ‘Le Bleu’.⁵⁰¹² P-2416 stated that he heard the name ‘Le Bleu’ in Yaloké from the time of the attacks in Gaga, but he did not make the connection that he was in fact the young motor taxi driver who used to pick up goods for Richard until about 2015 or 2016 when seeing him at a conference in Yaloké.⁵⁰¹³

1954.P-1847 stated in his prior recorded testimony⁵⁰¹⁴ that there was no doubt that all Anti-Balaka ‘north’ were dependent in the coordination on Mr Ngaïssona and Mokom, such as Le Bleu, ComZone of the Anti-Balaka in Yaloké, who reported to Bernard Mokom and Mr Ngaïssona because he was part of the Anti-Balaka ‘north’, and committed many exactions with his elements against Muslims, looting and destroying their property, attacking convoys in 2013 to 2014, which P-1847 heard from population there.⁵⁰¹⁵

1955.P-2546 heard that there were two Anti-Balaka ComZones in Yaloké: ‘General Richard’, in charge of Gaga and Zawa, and ‘Colonel Le Bleu’, first name Severin, in charge of Yaloké town.⁵⁰¹⁶ P-2546 also stated that the Anti-Balaka in Yaloké had a spokesperson, Raymond Mangala.⁵⁰¹⁷ P-2546 recognised the local Anti-Balaka elements because they were young
